

4° B. Sandb. 17-4

Sir Joshua Reynolds pinx.

F. Bartolozzi Sculp.

CHARLES BURNEY MUS: DOCT: OXON.
F · R · S .

Published as the Act directs April 1st 1784.

L

A

GENERAL HISTORY

OF

MUSIC,

FROM THE

EARLIEST AGES to the PRESENT PERIOD.

BY

CHARLES BURNEY, Mus. D. F. R. S.

VOLUME THE FOURTH.

LONDON,

Printed for the AUTHOR: And sold by PAYNE and SON, at the Mews-Gate; ROBSON and CLARK, Bond-Street; and G. G. J. and J. ROBINSON, Paternoster-Row.

MDCCLXXXIX.

4° B. Sandb. 17-4

A GENERAL HISTORY

OF

MUSICAL

FROM THE EARLIEST AGES to the PRESENT PERIOD.

BY

CHARLES FURNES, M.D. F.R.S.

VOLUME THE FOURTH.

LONDON,

Printed for the Author: And sold by Payne and Son, at the New-Gate; Roper and Clerk, Long-street; and G. O. J. and J. Robinson, Paternoster Row.

MDCCLXXIX.

Bayerische
Staatsbibliothek
München

C O N T E N T S.

Essay on the Euphony, or Sweetness of Languages, and their Fitness for Music. Page 1.

G E N E R A L H I S T O R Y.

CHAP.

- I. Of the Invention of RECITATIVE, and Establishment of the Musical Drama, or OPERA, in Italy. P. 13.
- II. Rise and Progress of the Sacred Musical Drama, or ORATORIO. P. 81.
- III. Of the OPERA BUFFA, or Comic-Opera, and INTERMEZZI, or Musical Interludes, during the Seventeenth Century, P. 123.
- IV. Of CANTATAS, or Narrative Chamber Music. P. 133.
- V. Attempts at DRAMATIC MUSIC in England, previous to the Establishment of the Italian Opera there. P. 180.
- VI. Origin of the ITALIAN OPERA in England, and its Progress there during the Present Century. P. 194.
Review of Handel's Operas. P. 222.
Opera Transactions after Handel ceased to compose for the Stage. P. 437.
- VII. Progress of the Musical Drama at VENICE, during the Present Century. P. 533.
- VIII. Progress of the Musical Drama at NAPLES, and Account of the eminent Composers and School of Counterpoint in that City. P. 544.

C O N T E N T S.

CHAP.

- IX. Opera Composers employed at ROME, and Tracts published in Italy on the Theory and Practice of Music, during the Present Century. P. 573.
- X. Of the Progress of Music in GERMANY, during the Present Century. P. 577.
- XI. Of the Music of FRANCE, during the Present Century. P. 607.
- XII. General State of Music in ENGLAND at our National Theatres, Public Gardens, and Concerts, during the Present Century. P. 631.
- CONCLUSION. P. 684.

ESSAY

ESSAY ON THE
E S S A Y
ON THE
E U P H O N Y
OR SWEETNESS OF LANGUAGES, AND THEIR
FITNESS FOR MUSIC.

AS we are now arrived at that period in the History of Music, when the musical drama or opera had its origin, in the progress of which lyric poetry and melody have received their chief polish and refinements, it seems a necessary preliminary to the following narrative, to bestow a few remarks and reflexions on the formation of syllables, and emission of vocal sound.

There can be no doubt but that the dialect which has the greatest number of open vowels mixed with its consonants, is the most favourable for vocal purposes. The tones of voice can only be heard with purity and clearness by the assistance of vowels: as the words, vowels, and voice are equally derived from vocalis, which implies a sound, a musical tone, vocal melody, or modulation. And it is not only from the general facility with which the syllables of a language can be uttered with neatness and articulation that it is rendered favourable to the singer, but from the number of vocal terminations, or words ending with vowels, which allow the voice to expand, and finish a musical phrase with ease and purity.

It is generally allowed that the French language is nasal, the German guttural, and the English sibilating and loaded with consonants, nasal syllables ending with ng, and other harsh and mute terminations. We have, indeed, filed off the Saxon roughness in words where gh occur: as cough, trough, laugh, plough, through, eight, freight, enough, &c. which used to be pronounced in the Teutonic manner, and which are still guttural words in Scotland, and some parts of England.

But besides the obstructions which the voice meets with in its passage, from clashing consonants in the middle of words, we have a greater number of terms that end with absolute mute and abrupt consonants, than either the French or Germans: such are those which terminate in b, d, g, k, or hard c, p, and t. And it is not easy to defend our language from the hissing of which it is accused by foreigners, on account of the frequent use of the letter s at the end of words, and the great number of words which terminate with a double s. For though the plural number of French nouns is distinguished in writing by an s, as well as the English, yet the final s is never pronounced. The German plurals too are terminated by the letter n: as haus, hausen; strass, strassen; pferd, pferden; &c. in the same manner as hause used to be hausen in the plural, hose, hosen; and as the substantive ox still has oxen in the plural. And the letter n being a liquid, renders the words which it terminates less difficult to utter, as well as less offensive to the ear, than the letter s, with which we have more words begin and end than with any other letter in the alphabet. Indeed, modern refinements or corruptions in pronouncing our language have greatly augmented the sibilation with which we are justly charged, by changing the eth and ath of verbs into es and as; and saying gives for giveth, has for hath, &c.

The learned Dr. Wallis, a profound musician, in his treatise De Loquela, prefixed to his Grammar of the English Tongue, has considered with great exactness the accurate formation of all sounds in speaking, to which few have attended before; but with respect to singing, the work is still to be done.

Dr.

Dr. Holder, who was a very learned musician and a composer, though he has admirably analysed the principles of pronunciation, and described the organs of utterance, with respect to colloquial language (a), has not pointed out the means by which the musical voice in articulating words is assisted or impeded in its formation and delivery, or the causes of its arriving at the ear with more or less clearness and purity. It was a subject that did not immediately concern the purport of this excellent essay, which was written with the benevolent intention of assisting persons born deaf and dumb to comprehend the speech of others by the eye, from its effect on the external organs; and therefore the omission of such enquiries as seem necessary in this place cannot be termed a defect.

Rousseau, in his ingenious and spirited Lettre sur la Musique Française, has confined his remarks chiefly to the vices of the French language; but to all, except the natives of France, a less eloquent and forcible writer might easily have proved it unfit for every kind of vocal Music, superior to a Vaudeville, or Chanson à table: for the words of these compositions being their principal merit, the hearer is the less inclined to judge severely of the Music, or the singer, provided he loses none of the wit or ingenuity of the poem. And, indeed, it is at the serious French opera, and by the performance of slow Music, and airs tendres, that those accustomed to good singing are most offended. However, in the parallel which Rousseau has drawn between the languages of France and Italy, after describing all the inconveniences arising to a singer from the compound, mute, nasal, and dead syllables, of the French language; he asserts, that the paucity of sonorous vowels, and abundance of consonants and articulations, force the lyric poet to exclude many words, and allow the musical composer to give only elementary, or short and single sounds, to the others (b). Hence the melody necessarily becomes insipid and monotonous, and its movement slow and

(a) Elements of Speech; an Essay of Inquiry into the natural Production of Letters, 1669.

(b) There is no language in which all the words of its vocabulary are equally fit for Music, or lyric poetry; according to Salvini, out of forty thousand words in the Italian language, only six or seven thousand can be adopted by the writers of serious musical dramas. Indeed, some of these rejected words, by their want of dignity, as well as softness, may be unfit for lyric compositions.

tiresome ; for if the time of such Music be at all accelerated, its velocity resembles that of an angular body rumbling on a pavement. He goes on with his strictures, and supposes, that “such a language as he has been describing, has a bad prosody, unmarked, without exactitude and precision ; that the long and short syllables have no sensible and determinate proportion between them in duration, or numbers, by which the rhythm can be rendered agreeable, exact, and regular ; that it has both long and short syllables of an uncertain duration, with others that are neither long nor short ; and that the difference between them is wholly incommensurable.”

“These vices and inconveniences,” he adds, “have such an effect upon the time or measure of Music, when applied to such words, as to render it wholly unmarked, irregular, and disjointed.” After these, and innumerable invectives against such a language, he concludes, that “the French neither have, nor, in reality, ever can have any Music ; or, if they should, it would be so much the worse for them.”

His character of the Italian language, and description of its beauties, and advantages over all others, for vocal purposes, are so apposite to the present enquiries, that I shall faithfully translate the whole passage.

“If it should be asked what language is the most grammatical, I should answer, that of the people who reason the best ; and if it should be asked what people are likely to have the best Music, I should say those that have the best language for it. Now if there is in Europe one language more favourable to Music than another, it is certainly the Italian ; for this language is soft, sonorous, melodious, and more accentuated than any other ; four qualities peculiarly important to vocal Music. It is soft from its articulations being uncompounded ; from the infrequency of clashing consonants ; and from every word in the language being terminated by a vowel. It is sonorous from most of its vowels being open ; its diphthongs uncompounded ; from having no nasal vowels ; and from its articulations being few and easy, which render the sound of each neat and full. It is melodious from its “own

“ own native sweetness, which renders it vocal even in declamation
 “ and common speech, without the assistance of musical notes (c).
 “ But what renders the Italian language more peculiarly meliflu-“ ous, as well as more expressive of sentiment, than any other, is “ the great compass and variety of its tones, and the choice it al“ lows in painting the passions. To prove this, let any one who “ imagines it to be only the language of love and tenderness, take
 “ the trouble of comparing the two following stanzas of Tasso.

*Teneri sdegni i e placide è tranquille
 Repulse e cari vezzi e liete pace,
 Sorrisi, parolette, e dolce stille
 Di pianto e sospir, tronchi e molli bacci
 Fuse tai cose tutte, e poscia unille,
 Et al foce tempo di lente faci;
 E ne formo quel sì mirabil cinto
 Di ch' ella avena il bel fianco succinto.*

Canto IV. Stanza xxxiii.

*Chiama gl' abitator de l'ombre eterne
 Il rauco suon de la tartarea tromba;
 Treman le spaziose atre caverne,
 E l'aer cieco a quel romor rimbomba;
 Ne si stridendo mai de la superne
 Regione del cielo il folgor piomba,
 Ne si scossa giammai trema la terra
 Quando i vapori in sen gravida ferra.*

Canto XVI. xxv.

It will be found, perhaps, equally difficult to express in any other language the sweetness of the one or the vigour of the other of these stanzas. But the roughness of the last stanza does not consist in hard and uncouth words; they are all sonorous, and, though rough to the ear, easy of utterance.

These stanzas, however, which Rousseau, and, after him, almost all musical writers have instanced as of remarkably easy utterance, should have been confined to reading and declamation; for better lyrical or vocal verses may be found in Metastasio, and, indeed, in almost all Italian lyric poets, since it has been found that the vowel a is the best for divisions, and all the other vowels have been long in disuse for such purposes, by the best Italian composers for the stage. In the stanza cited as a model of softness, in vocal verses, there are but two words, to which, in a lively air, divisions would be given: Cari, pace. But even these, in which the vowel

(c) On conversing with the late exquisite lyric poet, Metastasio, at Vienna, on the euphony of languages, and observing how much more favourable Italian was for Music, than any other European tongue; he so far agreed with me as to cry out, è musica stessa, “it is itself Music.”

a occurs in the first syllable, would have no long divisions assigned them, if there was a final syllable terminated by that letter, as in the third person singular of the future tense of verbs : vedrà, ucciderà, farà, darà, parlerà, cantarà, fuggirà ; in the elision of the infinitive mood : trionfar, riposar, scordar, lusingar, naufragar ; and in the substantives : fedeltà, pietà, felicità, libertà, crudeltà, and Mar.

In setting Metastasio's early operas, till about the middle of the present century, we find the best composers giving divisions to the vowels o and e : as in morirò, dovrò, fugirò, re, te, fè, fremè, speme, vender, voler, è, mercè, &c. but never to i or u.

Rousseau declined discussing the accents of the Italian tongue ; but if, as has been imagined, the Greek accents were used as a notation of the tone or tune of voice in reading or speaking ; the acute accent raising the voice, the grave depressing it, and the circumflex keeping it at a middle pitch or tone, the Italian would afford a more varied and pleasing melody than any of the other European dialects.

All tuneable sounds, says Dr. Holder, of which the human voice is one, are produced by a regular and equal vibration of the sonorous body and undulation of the air, proportioned to the acuteness or gravity of the tone. And, according to Dr. Wallis, this gravity, or acuteness of tones in speech, depends on the openness of the aperture in the larynx, which is the seat of voice ; and roughness and smoothness of vocal tones, he refers to the state of this organ.

But as these learned philologists have only dissected our alphabet, and analysed the articulation of our language, as far as concerns its pronunciation in speech, I shall examine it with respect to lyric poetry and singing, to which alone my remarks will be strictly confined.

If it be considered that of the five vowels in European alphabets, only two, a and o, are favourable to the clear emission of vocal sound ; that of the nineteen consonants eight are absolutely mute : as b, hard c and g, b, k, q, p, t ; seven semi-mute, that is, allowing only a murmuring noise, but no musical sound : as f, m, n, s, v, x, z ; that the soft g and consonant j are likewise of this kind ; and that r, though

though accounted a liquid, only admits of a snarling, canine kind of a noise; l, indeed, is a true liquid, allowing a continuation of sound after it is formed; and w and y may be accounted semi-vowels; yet so numerous are the impediments to a neat, clean articulation, as well as sweetness and purity of musical tones, that some care should at least be used by the lyric poet in the selection of words, as well as great precaution by the composer, who gives them a melody.

If our alphabet be critically examined, in order to discover the effect which each letter has upon the voice, in singing; it will be found, that peculiar letters, as well as combinations of letters, have peculiar vices and tendencies to impede or corrupt musical sounds, both in their formation and passage: that f admits only of a whisper; for though regarded as a semi-vowel on account of its allowing us to breathe after it has been pronounced, without altering the form of the mouth; yet, as Dr. Holder has well observed, "it is one thing to breathe, and another to vocalise that breath." M, n, and ng, likewise allow us to breathe; but as it is only nasal breath, the sound we are able to emit is snuffling and impure. S, and its substitute, soft c, are hissing; v and z afford only a jarring buz, by the vibration of the teeth and underlip, like that of a wasp or bee; th, cannot be uttered without a hisp; and the Saxo-Norman syllables ble, cle, fle, gle, kle, ple, tle, are all immusical, and of difficult utterance.

The vowel a, according to our manner of sounding it in the words all, ball, call, &c. affords the purest and most open passage to the voice through the mouth; and long divisions and vocal effusions should be appropriated as much as possible to this vowel, which is still more convenient to the singer when combined with no other letter, which alters the form of the organ. O, allows a free passage to sound; yet, as it separates the lips and teeth less than the letter a, it is in less favour with singers: however, the English words blow, flow, glow, slow, woe, &c. are well calculated for musical divisions. E, i, and u, partake of the nature of consonants, by putting the organs of speech in motion when they are first sounded; and in dwelling upon these vowels no voce di petto, no voice can be

be produced from the chest, as they confine it to a small part of the mouth, or render it nasal. Indeed, the u, by almost closing the lips, allows but a very narrow and inconvenient passage to the voice: the i and the e, are more favourable to a falset, a voce da testa, or feigned voice, than to a true portamento.

Tosi (e), sixty years ago, recommended the exercising the voice upon the three open vowels, which among the Italians are a, e, o, equivalent to our aw, a, o. The Italian i, sounded like our double e, and u as our double o, are never honoured with divisions or long sounds by the best composers or singing masters of Italy.

As open vowels are the most desirable to singers; so distinct, determinate, and uncompounded consonants, are the best crutches for the voice to lean on; for a neat, clear, and articulate pronunciation of consonants is as necessary to the intelligence of what is singing, as open vowels are to its being well sung. The letters p, t, k, for instance, are such clear and distinct articulations, that the voice, after any one of them, is delivered with a gentle kind of explosion, which considerably augments its force.

The i, in English, as it is sounded in the word smile, and which is so peculiar to English mouths, seems a diphthong, compounded of e feminine, and y, or the Greek diphthong ei, or rather the German ei, as sounded in eisenac, eichner, &c. and not a simple, or original vowel. Indeed, most of the diphthongs in our language require action in the organ, and spring in the muscles, as ay, oy, eu, ou, in the words bay, boy, Europe, our.

As accent and emphasis have great influence in varying the sound of oral language, they are not indifferent to vocal melody: the Italian tongue, though it is easy to pronounce, and soft and mellifluous to the ear, from the openness and frequency of its vowels; yet the articulations of its consonants, are more firm, vigorous, and poignant, than in any other language; and as every dialect has peculiar inflexions of voice which form a kind of tune in its utterance, the Italian seems to have a greater compass and variety of intervals in this colloquial tune, or cantilena, than any other with which I am acquainted.

(e) Opinioni de' cantori antichi e moderni, o sieno osservazioni sopra il canto figurato, In Bologna, 1723.

Diomedes calls accent the soul of speech, anima vocis (f). And every word of more than one syllable in prose, must have one emphatic or accented syllable among the rest. However, in verse, this rule cannot be observed without absurdity.

“Of mān’s first disobēdience, and the frūit

“Of that forbidden trēe,” &c.

“Awake my Sāint John, leave all meaner thīngs

“To low ambition, and the pride of kīngs.”

In each of these two last verses, were they set in recitative, which is the best musical criterion of accenting any language, there can only be two emphatic, accented syllables: as in Handel’s opening of Alexander’s Feast:

“’Twas at the royal feāst, for Persia wōn.”

A syllable in English, as well as Latin, which has two consonants after a vowel, is long, except one of these consonants be mute, and the other a liquid, as in rēgrēt, rēplēte. Indeed, the accented syllable in our words which have double consonants, is short: so that accent and long do not always imply the same thing. In the case of double rhymes this rule should be observed: as pleasure, measure, manner, banner; which should all have short notes. Here accent and quantity certainly differ. By applying Italian melody to English words, we seem to lose in sense what we gain in sound. The universality of double rhymes in Italian poetry must have an influence upon vocal melody, which our single rhymes but awkwardly imitate.

Dacier, in a note to his translation of Plutarch’s Life of Lycurgus, says, that “the progress of Music, in all times, has ever been proportioned to the genius and language of the people.” The ancient Romans, though great in arms, agriculture, and literature, were not successful cultivators of the fine arts; and nothing was achieved in them, throughout their empire, but by Grecian artists. For this we may, however, account, by the slaves only being allowed to cultivate the polite arts, among the Romans; whereas, in Greece, on the contrary, they were wholly prohibited their use.

(f) See Essay on the Harmony of Language, p. 22.

TO ESSAY ON THE EUPHONY

No visionary innovation, or fantastical change, is here intended, in a language so excellent as our own for every purpose of reason and philosophy; all I would recommend, is care to our lyric poets in the selection and arrangement of syllables, as well as unity of subject (g); and attentive observance to the composers who set them to Music, not to dwell on harsh, mute, nasal, or guttural words, which either preclude or vitiate all musical sound.

Song and sing, unfortunately, the two most common words in our lyric poetry, begin by a hiss, and end with a sound entirely nasal; and if we examine the syllables which terminate each line in Dryden's Ode on St. Cecilia's day, the best of our lyric poems, and perhaps the most noble production, to read, of modern languages, we shall find that the dead letter d predominates; terminating in the course of the poem no less than two or three and thirty lines; in more than half of which, this hard and dumb letter is preceded by n, which though it does not wholly silence the voice, yet allows it no passage, but through the nose. However, this junction is not so injurious to vocalised sound, as ng in the words sung, young, beginning, winning, destroying, enjoying; or s and z in ears, bears, spheres, comes, drums, prize, skies, &c. which terminate each musical phrase or period with a hiss. The impervious consonant t, in fate, state, fate, &c. preceded by a vowel, is less difficult to pronounce, and less offensive to hear, than the sibilation in breast, opprest, &c.

Admirable and sublime as this Ode is in the perusal, some of the lines are extremely difficult to sing, without injuring either the poet or musician; the first, by a languid and inarticulate utterance, or the latter by a pronunciation too rough and violent. The recitatives may, with propriety, admit of strong accentuation, as only such a portion of sound is wanting as will render the words more audible, and nearer singing, than mere speech: but as recitative is the medium between declamation and musical air, some attention seems

(g) See Present State of Music in France and Italy, p. 48.

seems necessary in selecting the words, and polishing the verses, even for this narrative melody; in shunning harsh alliterations, such as in the lines, thrice he slew the slain—the sweet enthusiast from her sacred store, &c. where there is a constant and unavoidable hissing upon all the accents; and in placing such words at the pause, or resting-place, in the middle, as well as at the end, of each line, where the punctuation requires a repose, or long note, as will neither wholly silence the voice, nor impede its expansion. If such precautions should be thought necessary for words of quick utterance in recitative, still more solicitous should the lyric poet be in their choice and arrangement when he writes an air, where every syllable is lengthened and vocalised, and where the vowel in each is all that the composer can tune, or the singer sweeten and refine.

It has been said, with more wit, perhaps, than candour, that singers in general are so ignorant and inattentive to all but the sweetness of their own voices, that a syllable may be slipped from any verse they are singing, without its being missed by them; but though I mean not to enter the lists as a champion for the learning and propriety of singers in general, it is but justice to say, that many individuals have deserved to be exempted from the weight of so a heavy a charge; though their private practice, and public performances, employ so much of their time, as to leave a very small portion for the study of literature.

Mr. Mason, in his Anthem-book for York Cathedral, has divided vocal compositions for our church into three series: 1. From the Reformation to the Restoration, in the year 1660; including Tye, Tallis, Farrant, Bird, Bull, Orlando Gibbons, William Lawes, and Palestrina, adapted to English words, by Dr. Aldrich. 2. To the year 1700; Battin, Child, Rogers, Humphreys, Lock, Tucker, Wise, Hall, Purcell, Blow, Aldrich, Tudway, Creighton, Turner, and Carissimi and Stefani, adapted. 3. To the present time: Clarke, King, Weldon, Goldwin, Croft, Handel, Greene, Kent, Boyce, Nares, with Marcello adapted by Garth.

Mr. Mason, p. 24. commends Tucker, who was gentleman of Charles the Second's Chapel, for his very exact attention to accent, and length of syllables ; and p. 72. in summing up the excellencies and defects of the second series of our church composers, speaks with exact discrimination of “ the pleasing melodies of Wise ; pathetic airs of Clarke ; majestic movements of Blow ; and sublime strains of Purcell.”

It is very natural for poets to wish that the language, in setting it to Music, should be more respected than it generally is, in our church compositions. Purcell, the pride of every Englishman who loves Music, was, in general, not only accurate, but happy and touching in the expression of words. Many of his melodies are, however, now become wholly obsolete and uncouth, from the temporary graces, with which he overloaded them, for the sake of ignorant fingers ; and, indeed, he wrote for no other. But these being the furbelows and flounces of a particular period, are very short-lived, and soon disgrace that melody which they were intended to embellish. If these were taken away, and the melodies of Purcell simplified and reduced to elementary sounds, by the rules of harmony and good taste, they might, in every age, be rendered elegant and pleasing.

Handel, as a foreigner, was very likely to make mistakes in the accent of our language, from an erroneous pronunciation of it, in speech ; and he has not only often made long syllables short, and short long, but assigned accents and long notes to syllables and words, which in reading would be rapidly pronounced. Indeed, it seems as if there could be no better guide for a composer of songs, with respect to accentuation, than reading them first, and afterwards giving only long notes and accents to such words and syllables as require emphasis and energy in the utterance (b).

(b) If we try Handel's admirable and justly celebrated air, as Music, in the Messiah, “ He was despised and rejected of men,” by this rule, it will be found very inaccurately accented. In reading, the accents would certainly be these : Hē wās dēspīfēd ānd rējēctēd ōf mēn ; ā mān ōf sōrrōw, ānd ācquaintēd wīth grīef ; or in musical notes :

Now Handel's accents are : He wās despīfēd and rējēctēd, &c.

A G E-

GENERAL HISTORY

OF

MUSIC.

CHAPTER I.

Of the Invention of RECITATIVE, and Establishment of the musical Drama, or Opera, in Italy.

THE annals of modern Music have hitherto furnished no event so important to the progress of the art, as the recovery or invention of Recitative, or dramatic melody. Musicians till this period having been chiefly employed in gratifying the ear with “the concord of sweet sounds,” without respect to poetry, or aspiring at energy, passion, intellectual pleasure, or much variety of effect. Epic poetry could never derive great advantage from Music, or Music from epic poetry: so long a poem as the Iliad, or Æneid, if we suppose either of them to have been originally sung, could admit of few embellishments or refinements from lengthened tones; it was the lyric poetry of the ancients as well as the moderns, consisting of short effusions of passion or sentiment, in various measures, that best exercised the powers of musical expression. That narration which is sung, like the epic poems of the ancients by the original bards, or their dependents the rhapsodists, as well as the historical ballads of later times, must have been set to the most simple and artless melody, or it would have been utterly unintelligible.

Pulci, who is regarded as the Ennius of modern Italy, and the first who attempted an epic poem in the language of that country, is.

is said by Crescimbeni (i) to have sung his Morgante Maggiore, at the table of Lorenzo de' Medici, in the manner of ancient rhapsodists, about the year 1450, by which we may conjecture, that the Music was very simple (k).

As the ORFEO of Politian was certainly the first attempt at the musical drama, which was afterwards perfected by Metastasio, I shall here present the reader with an account of it, as lately published in the seventeenth volume of the Parnaso Italiano, where it is said to be a beautiful piece of poetry, written by the elegant pen of Politian in the dawn of dramatic representation.

To this drama there is an argument in verse. The piece is in five acts, and founded on the ancient fable. Aristæus, a shepherd, the son of Apollo, loved Eurydice, the wife of Orpheus, in so violent a manner, that he pursued her in the fields, and in her flight from him she was stung by a serpent, of which she died. Orpheus by singing so softened the infernals, that they suffered her to depart, on condition that he would not look behind him. But not obeying this injunction, she was forced back to hell. Upon his grief, and resolution never to love another female, the Thracian women tore him to pieces.

Atto primo, Pastorale.

Part of the first scene seems to have been declaimed; though it is in verse, in terza rime; but the rest is called Canto di Aristeo.

*Udite, selve, mie dolce parole,
Poichè la bella ninfa udir non vuole.*

These two lines are the burden of his song, which is beautifully pastoral.

Atto secondo, Ninfale.

Aristæus, a Dryad, and chorus of Dryads.

(i) Vol. II. Parte 2da, p. 151. Coment.

(k) This work, printed so early as 1488, was produced at the Tuscan court; and Politian, Ficinus, and Lucrezia de' Medici, wife of Alphonsus of Ferrara, all concurred in singing and reciting it, to entertain the illustrious personages with which that learned court was then crowded. The Orlando Innamorato of Boiardo was written and sung in the same manner at the court of Este, and first printed in 1496; and Pancirollus (De Rebus Inventis et de Perditis, l. i. c. 3.) tells us, that this author recited his poem at Ferrara; and as it was divided into sonnets, or stanzas, which were rehearsed in a tune, they were denominated Cantos. Pancirollo flourished in the sixteenth century.

This

This is beautiful poetry, consisting of complaints for the death of Eurydice.

Atto terzo, Eroico.

Orpheus comes in singing the following Latin verses, accompanying himself on his lyre.

Orpheus. *Musa, triumphales titulos, et gesta canamus.
Herculis, et forte monstra subacta manu.
Et timidæ matri pressos ostenderit angues
Intrepidusque fero riserit ore puer*.*

Then the Dryad tells the sorrowful tale of Eurydice's death. This act seems all to have been sung. A Satyr follows the afflicted Orpheus to see whether the mountains are moved by his song.

Atto quarto, Nigromantico.

Orpheus visits the infernal regions; himself, Pluto, Proserpine, Eurydice, and Tefiphon, are the interlocutors.

E' vien per impetrar mercede o morte Dunque m' aprite le ferrate porte.

The whole of this act is admirable, and all the interlocutors speak in character.

Atto quinto, Baccanale.

Orpheus, one of the Menades (not Thracian women), and chorus of Menades, who tear him to pieces.

The whole of this drama which, from its brevity, seems chiefly to have been sung, is admirably calculated for impassioned Music of every kind.

First act, one hundred and twelve lines; second, eighty-two; third, forty-four; fourth, one hundred and seventeen; fifth, seventy-eight; in all four hundred and thirty-four verses.

Politian (Angelo Poliziano), was born 1454, and died 1494. He revived literature in his time, as Petrarca had done before.

1555. Il Sacrificio dell' Agostino Beccari Favola Pastorale. To this piece there is a prologue, not in rhyme. After this, two other prologues. The length of this drama is such, that it could not have been entirely sung in the usual time of an evening's representation.

* This is the subject of Sir Jos. Reynolds's Infant Hercules.

tation. In the third scene of the third act, the Priest and Chorus seem fingers. This short-scene, and a canzone, for finale, is all that could have been sung in this drama, which is no more than we had frequently sung in our masques of Queen Elizabeth's and James the First's time (l).

At the latter end of the sixteenth century, during all the rage for fugue, elaborate contrivance, and the laboured complication of different parts, without rhythm, grace, melody, or unity of design; the lovers of poetry were meditating the means of rescuing her from musical pedants, who, with a true Gothic spirit, had loaded her with cumbrous ornaments, in order, as was pretended, to render her more fine, beautiful, and pleasing, after having fettered, maimed, and mangled her.

That no musical dramas, similar to those that were afterwards known by the names of operas and oratorios, had existence in Italy before the beginning of the seventeenth century, seems certain by no mention being made of them in the ample list given by Angelo Ingegneri, 1598, of all that were then known, in his discourse on the representation of dramatic fables and poetry (m), where he treats of tragedie, comedie, pastorali, piscatorie, boschereccie, &c. all declaimed entirely, except the choruses, which seem to have consisted of odes or madrigals, set to Music in parts: Music is the first consideration in operas and oratorios; but this author says at the end of his book (n), "I now come to Music, the third and last part of dramatic representations, which, in comedies and pastorals, without choruses, will be used at pleasure, in interludes, between the acts, to relieve the spectators, whose minds may be fatigued by the attention they have bestowed on the fable (o)."

(l) Beccari, the author, lived to upwards of eighty, and died in 1590. This was the first pastoral intended for the stage. And, perhaps, says the editor of Il Parnaso Italiano, he first introduced Music on the stage, as appears by a note at the beginning of the piece, which says, "Fece la Musica Alfonso della Viola: rappresentò il sacerdote colla Lira Messer Andrea suo Fratello." But, besides the Orfeo, there are pieces among the Italian mysteries of much higher antiquity than 1555, in which there are hymns, madrigals, and choruses that were sung.

(m) Della Poesia Rappresentativa, e del modo di rappresentare le favole sceniche. In Ferrara. 1598.

(n) Ibid. p. 78.

(o) Vengo alla Musica, terza, e ultima parte della rappresentatione, la quale nelle comedie e nelle pastorali che non havranno chori sarà al arbitrio altrui, per servir per intermedj — e frà l'un atto e l'altra, per porger alquanto di riposo à gl' intelletti, affaticati nell' attentione prestata alla favola, &c.

We are often told, however, of musical dramas performed at Rome and Venice, long before this period: and every writer on the subject informs us, that Sulpitius, in his dedication of Vitruvius, speaks of a tragedy that was recited and sung at Rome, under the auspices of Cardinal Riario, 1480 (p); that Alfonso della Viola set a drama to Music, in 1560, for the court of Ferrara (q); and that at Venice there was an opera performed for the entertainment of Henry III. of France, at his return from Poland, on the death of his brother Charles IX. 1574, which was set by the famous Zarlino (r). These, and more, have been confounded by father Menestrier (s) with the musical dramas of later times, after the invention of recitative, which alone should distinguish the opera and oratorio from every other species of theatrical exhibition; but these early attempts at singing were no more dramatic than a mass, service, full anthem, or madrigal, would be if sung on a stage. Indeed, some of the dramas which preceded the year 1600, had choruses, and intermezzi in measured Music, and incidental songs, like our masques in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and James I. in which, however, the dialogue was all spoken.

Being in possession of the first dramas that were set to Music in stilo rappresentativo, or recitative, I shall present my readers not only with specimens of this Musica parlante, or speaking Music, but extracts from the prefaces both of the poet and musicians by whom it was invented, as well as from cotemporary writers on the subject, who thought its origin sufficiently important to be recorded.

It appears from all these, that persons of taste and letters in Tuscany, being discontented with every former attempt at perfecting dramatic poetry and exhibitions, determined to unite the best lyric poet, with the best musician of their time; three Florentine noblemen, therefore, Giovanni Bardi count of Vernio, Pietro Strozzi, and Jacopo Corfi, all learned and enlightened lovers of the fine

(p) Quam—et agere, et cantare primi hœc ævo docuimus.

(r) La Glorie della Poesia, e della Musica, ne Teatri della Città di Venezia. 1730.

(q) Nel Sacrificio del Beccari—Fecce la Musica Alfonso della Viola. Crescimbeni. Tom. I.

(s) Des Representations en Musique, anciennes et modernes.

arts, chose Ottavio Rinuccini, and Jacopo Peri, their countrymen, to write and set to Music the drama of Dafne, which was performed in the house of Signor Corfi, in 1597, with great applause; and this seems the true æra whence the opera, or drama, wholly set to Music, and in which the dialogue was neither sung in measure, nor declaimed without Music, but recited in simple musical tones, which amounted not to singing, and yet was different from speech, should be dated. After this successful experiment, Rinuccini wrote Euridice and Arianna, two other dramas for the same kind of Music.

In the same year, however, that Ariadne, set to Music by Jacobo Peri, was performed at Florence, there was a sacred drama, oratorio, morality, or mystery in Music, of the same kind, by Emilio del Cavaliere, performed at Rome; which makes it difficult to determine who was the original inventor of that peculiar species of melody, or chant, which is called recitative, and which has ever since been the true characteristic of the opera and oratorio. To the printed copies of Peri's opera, and Cavaliere's oratorio, both published in 1600, there is a long preface, in which the origin of the invention is claimed by each of these composers: Peri, however, modestly says, "though Signor del Cavaliere, with wonderful invention, brought our kind of Music (t) on the public stage before any other that I know of; yet Signor Jacopo Corfi, and Ottavio Rinuccini, were pleased, so early as the year 1594, to wish that I would adopt it, in a different way, and set the fable of Daphne, written by Ottavio Rinuccini, to Music, in order to try the power of this species of melody, which they imagined to be such as was used by the ancient Greeks and Romans throughout their dramas."

However, in the dedication of the oratorio, dell' Anima, e del Corpo, to Cardinal Aldovrandini, it is said by the editor, Guidotti, that the work consists of "Singular and new musical compositions, made in imitation of that style with which the ancient Greeks and Romans are supposed to have produced such great effects by their dramatic representations." He adds, that "seeing the (t) La nostra Musica.

“ great applause which was universally given to the productions of “ Signor Emilio del Cavaliere (a Roman gentleman) who had been “ able by his own industry and abilities so happily to revive the “ melody of the ancient declamation ; particularly in three pastorals “ which were repeatedly recited in the presence of his serene high“ nefs the duke of Tuscany : during the year 1590, was composed “ il Satiro, as was la Disperatione di Fileno, and both were privately “ performed in the same year ; and in 1595 il Giuoco della Cieca was “ exhibited in the presence of Cardinal Monte, and Mont’ Alto, as “ well as the archduke Ferdinand, with great admiration, as no- “ thing like it had ever been seen or heard before.” And farther, fixing the precise time when this oratorio was performed at Rome, he says, “ nothing could prove more indisputably what power this “ style of singing had in exciting devotion, and affecting the heart, “ than the prodigious applause of the concourse of people assembled “ together at the performance of this sacred drama in the oratorio
 “ of Vallicella in Rome, last February.”

Emilio del Cavaliere, the composer, in his own advertisement to the reader, speaks of his Music as that of the ancients, recovered, or revived, and as having such powers over the affections as could ex“ cite grief, pity, joy, and pleasure, as was effectually shewn in a “ scene of his Disperatione di Fileno, which, when recited by Sig“ nora Archilei, whose excellence in Music is universally known, “ drew tears from the audience, while the character of Fileno made “ them laugh (u).”

There are such instructions given in this preface for the performance of his simple and infant drama, as would now suit the best productions of Metastasio, set by the best composers, for the best singers of modern times.

(u) Though the performers are never mentioned in the Dramatis Personæ to the first musical dramas, yet it appears that Italy has never been without singers of great abilities, and powers to captivate and enchant an audience. Gagliano, in his preface to the Daphne of Rinuccini, which he set to Music a second time, allows that a great deal of its success was owing to the singers ; and mentions the great taste and feeling with which Jacopo Peri sung his own Music, of which there was no forming an adequate idea by those who had never heard him. But long before this period, Castiglione, in his Cortegiano, describes the different abilities of the two singers Bidone and Marchetto Cara.

Giovanni Batista Doni (x), a learned and elegant writer on Music, though extremely warped in his judgment by a predilection for antiquity, in a dissertation on the Origin of Stage-singing, during his own time, gives so curious and instructive an account of the first operas which were performed at Florence, that I shall translate the chief part of it.

“ Some kind of Cantilena, or melody, has been introduced in “ dramatic representations, at all times, either in the form of inter-“ mezzi (interludes), between the acts; or, occasionally, in the “ body and business of the piece. But it is still fresh in the me“ mory of every one, when the WHOLE DRAMA was first set to “ Music, and sung from the beginning to the end; because, ante“ rior to the attempt of Emilio del Cavaliere, a Roman gentleman, “ extremely well versed in Music, there seems to have been nothing
 “ of that kind undertaken that is worth mentioning. This com“ poser published a drama at Rome in 1600, called dell' Animo, e
 “ del Corpo; in the preface to which, mention is made of a piece “ represented at Florence in 1588, at the nuptials of the grand “ duchess, in which were many fragments of his Music; and “ where, likewise, two years after, was represented another drama “ set by him, called Il Satiro.

“ It is necessary, however, to declare here, that those melodies “ are very different from such as are at present composed in what “ is commonly called recitative; being no other than ariets, full “ of contrivance, repetitions, echoes, &c. which are totally dif“ ferent from the true and genuine theatrical Music, of which Signor “ Emilio could know nothing, for want of being acquainted with “ ancient authors, and the usages of antiquity (y). It may there“ fore be said, that the first attempt at reviving theatrical Music, “ after being lost for so many ages, was made at Florence, where “ so many noble arts have been recovered. This extraordinary event “ was brought about by the invention of recitative, which is now

(x) Op. omni. Tom. II. In Firenze, 1763. Folio.

(y) Specimens of this Music will be given hereafter, in speaking of oratorios, by which it will appear, that Doni either had not seen the book, or was partial to the Florentines, his countrymen.

“ universally received, practised, and preferred to the madrigal style,
 “ in which the words are so utterly unintelligible.

“ The beginning of this century (1600), was the æra of musical “ recitation on the public stage at Florence, though it had been “ used there in several private exhibitions before. There resided in “ that city, during these times, Signor Gio. Bardi de' Conti di Ver-“ nio, who was afterwards called to the service of Pope Clement VIII.
 “ by whom he was tenderly beloved, and made his Maestro di Ca“ mera. This most accomplished nobleman, was particularly at“ tached to the study of antiquity, and to the theory and practice “ of Music, to which he had applied himself for many years so “ closely, that he became, for the time in which he lived, a cor“ rect and good composer. His house was the constant rendezvous “ of all persons of genius, and a kind of flourishing academy where “ the young nobility often assembled to pass their leisure hours in “ laudable exercises and learned discourse: but particularly on mu“ sical subjects, when it was the wish of all the company to reco“ ver that art of which the ancients related such wonders, as well
 “ as other noble inventions which had been ruined by the eruptions “ of barbarians.

“ During these discussions, it was universally allowed that as mo“ dern Music was extremely deficient in grace, and the expression “ of words, it became necessary, in order to obviate these objections, “ that some other species of Cantilena, or melody, should be tried “ by which the words should not be rendered unintelligible, nor the “ verse destroyed.

“ Vincenzo Galilei was at this time in some credit among musi“ cians; and, flattered with his reputation, pursued his musical studies “ with such diligence that, either by the help he received from others, “ or by the force of his own genius, he composed his work upon “ the Abuse of modern Music, which has since gone through two im“ pressions (z). Animated by success, Galilei attempted new things,

(z) Dialogo della Musica antica e moderna, 1588, and 1602. Doni insinuates elsewhere, that Galilei was assisted in this work by Girolamo Mei. See Vol. III. p. 173.

“ and

“ and assisted by Signor Giovanni (a), was the first who composed “ melodies for a single voice; having modulated that pathetic scene
 “ of Count Ugolino, written by Dante, which he sung himself ve“ ry sweetly, to the accompaniment of a viol. This essay certainly “ pleased very much in general; however, there were some indivi“ duals who laughed at the attempt; notwithstanding which, he “ set, in the same style, parts of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, “ which were performed to a devout assembly.

“ At this time, Giulio Caccini Romano, a young, elegant, and “ spirited singer, used to attend these meetings at the house of the “ Count di Vernio; and being seized with a strong passion for this “ kind of Music, he studied it with great diligence; composing “ and singing to a single instrument, which was generally the the“ orbo, or large lute, played by Bardilla, who happened then to be “ at Florence.

“ Caccini, therefore, in imitation of Galilei, but in a more beau“ tiful and pleasing style, set many canzonets and sonnets written “ by excellent poets, and not by such wretched scribblers (b) as were “ usually employed before, and are still very frequently the favour“ ites of musicians; so that he may be said to have been the first “ to see this error, and to discover that the art of counterpoint will “ not alone complete the education of a musician, as is generally “ imagined; and he afterwards confessed, in a discourse prefixed to “ one of his works, that the conversations held at the Count del “ Vernio's were of more use to him than thirty years study and “ exercise of his art. Here he likewise claims the merit of having “ first published songs for a single voice, which, indeed, had the “ greatest success. And it must be confessed, that we owe to him, “ in a great measure, the new and graceful manner of singing,
 “ which at that time spread itself all over Italy; for he composed “ a great number of airs which he taught to innumerable scholars,
 “ and among the rest to his daughter, who became a famous singer,
 “ and still continues very excellent in that faculty (c).

(a) Bardi de' Conti di Vernio.

(b) Rimatori à Dozzina.

(c) I find this singer mentioned with great elege, in the prefaces to several dramas, sacred and secular.

“ But

“ But not to defraud any one of his just praise, it is necessary to “ acknowledge in this place, that Luca Marenzio, who flourished
“ now at Rome, had brought the madrigal style to the highest de“ gree of perfection, by the beautiful manner in which he made all “ the several parts of his compositions sing ; for before his time, “ if the harmony was full and masterly, nothing else was required.

“ In the recitative style, however, Caccini had a formidable ri“ val in Jacopo Peri, a Florentine, who was not only a good com“ poser, but a famous singer, and performer on keyed-instruments, “ having been taught by Christopher Malvezzi ; and applying with “ great diligence and enthusiasm to this kind of singing, succeed“ ed wonderfully, and met with universal applause.

“ After the departure of Signor Bardi from Florence, Signor Ja“ copo Corfi became the patron of Music and its professors, as well “ as of every other art and science ; so that his house, during the “ remainder of his life, continued to be the retreat of the Muses
“ and their votaries, of every country, as well as of Tuscany. Ot“ tavio Rinuccini was at this time united with him in the strictest “ bands of friendship, which seldom is durable, unless cemented
“ by sympathetic affections ; and being, as is well known, an ex“ cellent poet, whose works are, to the last degree, natural, pathe“ tic, full of grace, and, in a particular manner, calculated for Mu“ sic ; as poetry and Music are sister arts, he had an opportunity “ of cultivating both together, with equal success, and of commu“ nicating his discoveries and refinements to this illustrious assem“ bly.

“ The first poem, set in this new way, and performed at the “ house of Signor Corfi, was Dafne, a pastoral written by Rinuc-“ cini, and set by Jacopo Peri and Caccini in a manner which “ charmed the whole city. Afterwards, other little fables and “ entire dramas were thus recited ; but, above all, the Euridice of “ Rinuccini, written and set to Music for the royal nuptials of “ Mary of Medicis with the most Christian King Henry IV. The “ Music of this drama, which was publicly exhibited at Florence, “ in the most splendid manner, was chiefly composed by Jacopo “ Peri,

“ Peri, who performed a part in it himself, as in his Dafne he had “ represented Apollo; the rest of the Music was composed by “ Caccini, and the whole was exhibited in 1600; in which year,
 “ and on the same occasion, was also performed the Rape of Ce- “ phalus, in which the chief part was set by Caccini.

“ Great applause was likewise bestowed on Ariadne, another dra“ matic production of Rinuccini, and cloathed in suitable melody
 “ by Claudio Monteverde, at present Maestro di Capella to the “ republic of Venice. He afterwards published the principal part “ of this production, which is the Lamentation of Ariadne, and “ perhaps the most beautiful composition of this kind which our “ times have produced. Thus the original and true architects of “ this species of scenical Music were Jacopo Cori, and Ottavio “ Rinuccini, assisted by the three eminent artists above-mentioned, “ who had conferred great honour upon our city, as well as on the “ profession of Music (d).”

It is not difficult to discover from this account, that all the patrons and artists of this new species of Music, except Monteverde, were Dilettanti, and shallow contrapuntists, who, as is usual, condemned and affected to despise that which they could not understand, and in which they were unable to excel. The learned contrapuntists, on the contrary, had abused their art, to the ruin of lyric poetry, and confined it in such narrow limits, that even instrumental Music made no advances in their hands; for all they produced, that was not in canon and fugue, was utterly dry, fanciless, and despicable. These early attempts, however, at clearness, grace, and facility, though they now appear but mean and feeble, had a happy effect upon the art. In process of time they approximated parties, (for when was Music any more than politics, without its cabals and factions!) and in appealing to the public ear, by bringing Music on the stage, drove pedantry to lament the degeneracy of the age in holes and corners; and encouraged zeal and unprejudiced musical

(d) As second-hand intelligence requires authority to give it weight, it may afford some satisfaction to the careful enquirer to be told, that Doni had his information of things which happened before his own time, from Signor Bardi, jun.

learning to unite with taste in simplifying the art, and calling upon the graces for assistance.

AS EURIDICE was the first musical drama, after the invention of recitative, that was publicly represented, I shall endeavour to give my readers all the information concerning it that I have been able to collect.

This drama, written by OTTAVIO RINUCCINI, and set by JACOPO PERI, was performed at Florence in 1600, on occasion of the marriage of Mary of Medicis, to Henry IV. of France. The poem, and the Music, were published, separately, the same year. The poet, in his dedication to the Queen of France, says, "It is generally imagined that the tragedies of the ancient Greeks and Romans were entirely sung; but this noble kind of singing had not till now been revived, or even attempted, to my knowledge, by any one; and I used to think, that the inferiority of our Music, to that of the ancient, was the cause; till hearing the compositions of Jacopo Peri to the fable of Daphne, I wholly changed my opinion. This drama, written merely as an experiment, pleased so much, that I was encouraged to produce Euridice, which was honoured with still more applause, when sung to the Music of the same composer Jacopo Peri, who with wonderful art, unknown before*, having merited the favour and protection of the Grand Duke our sovereign, it was exhibited in a most magnificent manner at the nuptials of your majesty in the presence of the Cardinal Legate, and innumerable princes and nobles of Italy and France," &c. The only copy of the Music that I have been able to find was in the library of the Marchese Rinuccini, a descendant of the author, at Florence; in examining and making extracts from which, I observed that it was printed in score and barred, two very uncommon circumstances at the time of its publication; that the recitative seemed to have been not only the model of subsequent composers of early Italian operas, but of the French operas of Lulli; that figures were often placed over the base to indicate the harmony, as a b for a minor third, a # for a major third, and a 10 and 11 for the octaves of the third and fourth; that the time change as frequently as in the old French serious operas, and though the word aria sometimes occurs, it is as difficult to distinguish air from recitative, in this drama, by any superiority of melody, as in those of Lulli; except in the choruses which were sung and danced at the same time, like those on the French stage.

* Da altri non più usata.

Peri, in his preface, after enumerating the great personages who were present at the representation, and the eminent musicians to whom his Music had been shewn, tells us, that it was sung by the most excellent performers of the time; among whom were Signor Francesco Rasi, a nobleman of Arezzo, who represented the part of Aminto; Signor Brandi, Arcetro; and Signor Melchior Palantrotto, Pluto. He then tells us, that "behind the scenes, Signor Jacopo Corfi played the harpsichord; Don Garzia Montalvo the chitarone, or large guitar; Messer Giovambatista dal Violino the lira grande, or viol da gamba; and Messer Giovanni Lapi a large lute."

These four seem to have composed the whole band. For though he celebrates the performance of Giovambatista Jacomelli on the violin, neither he, nor any one else, played on that instrument at the exhibition. He concludes his account of this drama by owning that some parts of it were composed by Giulio Caccini, detto Romano, "whose great merit was known to the whole world," because it was to be sung by persons dependent on him; by which he probably means to say, that they were his scholars. He boasts of having opened the road for others, by his essays at dramatic Music.

The only arrangement of sounds, however, resembling an air in Euridice, is a short Zinfonia, which the reader will find on the next plates.

GIULIO CACCINI, detto Romano, set this entire drama likewise to Music, in stilo rappresentativo, and published it in 1600, at Florence. There is still another resemblance in Lulli's operas to these first attempts at the musical drama in Italy, which is, that every one that I have seen has a prologue, set to what is called an air, such as the reader will likewise see on the next plates; where will be inserted a scene of recitative, spoken by Dafne nuncia, who relates the melancholy event that had befallen Euridice.

MON-

MONTEVERDE, one of the principal legislators of the musical drama, set the opera of Orfeo, for the court of Mantua, in 1607, which was printed at Venice 1615. And in examining this Drama, it is as difficult to distinguish airs from recitative, as in the operas of Peri and Caccini, except where there are more than two parts employed, which happens but seldom.

It has been said that recitative had great obligations to Monteverde; for though Emilio del Cavaliere, Jucopo Peri, and Caccini, had attempted that style before him, yet he had so much improved it, that he might almost be called its inventor. But being in possession of most of the works of these early dramatic composers, I am unable to discover Monteverde's superiority. More forms or phrases of musical recitation still in use, may be found in Peri and Caccini, than in Monteverde. But what surprised me still more, was that his counterpoint in two parts is more frequently deficient than in the other two composers, who had never, like him, distinguished themselves in the learned style of masses, motets, and madrigals. His controversy with Artusi, early in life, for breach of rule, has been already mentioned (e); but though, in the new musica rappresentativa, he was to emancipate himself from the trammels of canon, fugue, and other restraints which had been thought necessary in composing à capella, and was now to have a poetical and picturesque Music, more varied and impassioned than that of the church or chamber; yet there were certain fundamental rules and prohibitions, totally independent of taste, which to violate, would offend cultivated ears. Among these, the common precept of avoiding two fifths or two eighths, particularly in two parts, is frequently and wantonly neglected, without the least necessity or pretence of producing new and agreeable effects by such a licence.

In the prologue, which is only in two parts, there are three fifths by contrary motion, which, when unaccompanied, offend my ear as much as if direct:

(e) See Vol. III. p. 234.

E 2

P. 4.

P. 4. the falling from the octave to the fifth, in two parts, is still worse.

The following anticipations are beyond my comprehension; and by the difficulty of finding such in other composers, it should seem as if they would be as unpleasant to other ears as my own.

The best fragment of his recitative that I can select, will be given on the plates, and the ritornello or symphony page 21, being extremely curious and short, will be inserted likewise, as a proof of his abilities in close fugue or canon, four of the five parts moving for a considerable time after each other in the same intervals.

The dramatic composers were now trying new effects, combinations, and licences, some of which succeeded, and were adopted by subsequent composers; others were rejected, as too crude and offensive to the ear. Of this kind is the following, where in order to express the word aspro, he has a flat seventh with the second, and sixth and false eighth.

In the fourth act, where Proserpine is pleading the cause of Orpheus to her husband Pluto, the succession of fifths must strike the youngest student in composition.

And afterwards, he makes as free with sevenths and eighths as here with fifths.

P. 28. he seems the first to have used the unprepared seventh in two parts.

(f) However, Della Valle says, that Monteverde, under the guidance of men of letters, continued improving his style, and that his late compositions (he means, I believe, only dramatic) were very different from the 1st. Op. di Doni, II. 251.

P. 36.

P. 36. again ; but Cavaliere has a similar use of the seventh in the first act of L' Anima e Corpo.

In the ritornel of page 32 there are more frequent changes of measure than in any of Lulli's French operas, where it has been imagined that the expression or metre of the words was thought to require broken measures ; but this ritornel or symphony, which the reader will see on the next plates, is merely instrumental.

The work is so ill-printed, that some sagacity is necessary to discover the errors of the press from those of the composer. The best piece of recitative that I have been able to find in the whole opera seems to be the scene, page 39, where Orpheus, after hearing of the death of Euridice, determines to quit the world, and descend into the infernal regions to try the power of song over Charon, Cerberus, and Pluto, in prevailing on them to restore his Euridice. In this recitative there are several new modulations and discords hazarded, seemingly, for the first time : such as the sharp seventh with the fourth and second, extreme sharp sixth, &c.

The orchestra, however, for the performance of this drama was greatly superior to that of Euridice, as the reader will see by the following list : Duoi gravicembali, duoi contrabassi di viola, dieci viole da braccio, un arpa doppia, duoi violini piccioli alla Francese, duoi chitaroni, duoi organi di legno, tre bassi da gamba, quattro tromboni, un regale, duoi cornetti, un flautino alla vigesima seconda, un clarino, con tre trombe sordine.

The overture is called TOCCATA che si suona avanti il levar della tela tre volte con tutti li stromenti, et si fa un tuono più alto volendo sonar le trombe con le sordine. It is in five parts, consisting of only one movement of nine bars ; and seems merely a flourish of instruments, in which the chord of C is only employed.

Monteverde set Rinuccini's Arianna for the court of Mantua, in 1606, the words only were then printed, and reprinted several times after. This opera was performed at Venice, 1640, to Monteverde's composition, and the words again reprinted ; but whether the Music was ever published, I know not.

On the following plates will be exhibited a specimen not only of Monteverde's ritornelli and recitative, but each of the founders of that Canto che parla, or speaking Music.

FRAGMENTS

for music 1615
9.27

Fragments of the first Dramatic Music.
Dall' Euridice del PERI. Fol: II.

31

Zinfonia for 3 Flutes

Prologue to CACCINI's Euridice. Sung by Tragedy, Personified.

Io che d'al - ti sof - pir va - ga e di pian - ti spars' or di doglia, or di mi -
- naccie il vot - to Fei negl'ampi Te - atri al po - pol fol - to fco - lor di pie - tà vol -
- ti e fembian - ti. 6 6

This melody is sung to 7 different Stan - zas.

Scene of Recitative in CACCINI's Euridice.

Dafne Nunzia.

Per quel vago boschetto Ove rigando i fiori Lento trascorre il finto degli al - lori, prende a dolce di -
- letto con le compagne sue la bella Spofa; Chi violetta, o. Rosa per far ghirlande al crine toglie a dal prato e dall'acete spine, E qual posando il fianco Su la fiori - ta sponda Dolce can - tava al mormorar dell' on - da. Ma la Fragment of Recitative in MONTEVERDE's Orfeo.

Ritornello, in MONTEVERDE'S Orfeo.

33

Ritornello, in MONTEVERDE'S Orfeo. Atto II^{do} Page 32.

Recitative, Page 39. Un Organo di Legno & un Chitarone.

Tu se' morta se' morta mia vi ta ed io respi-ro Tu se da me partita se da me partita, per mai piu' mai piu non tornare ed io riman-go no no che sei verfi al - cuna co-fa ponno N'andrò si-cu-ro à piu profondi abissi E int-en-ri-to il Cor-del Rè del' ombre meco trarotti a ri-veder le stelle O se cio negher ammi empio destino Rimarò teco in compagnia di morte addio terra addio Cielo e so-le ad-di-o.

Similar Passage in the Recitative of all the Founders of that CANTO CHE PARLA.

JACOPO PERI.

Nel pur ardor del la più bella stel-la Aurea fa-cel-la di bel foc' ac-cendi Emilio del Cavaliere.

Ecco i miei sensi prendi, qui ti ri-po-sa e go-di in mille varii mo-di

Monteverde

See Page 49

Sempre e in soli-ta-rio speco Hor più non lice Teco venir ch'amara legge il vieta legge scritta col ferro in duro falso Noi qui fra tanto Che sopraggiun-ga ORFEO.

Giulio Caccino

This passage likewise frequently occurs in the melody of the times.

Though Doni complains of the little progress which the dramatic style had made in his time, yet, in 1624 (g), he says, that “experience, which is always making discoveries, has shewn, on many occasions, that this kind of Music has since been progressively so much meliorated, that we may soon hope to see it arrive at its ancient splendor; and it is but a little while since the Medoro of Signor Salvadori was sung on the stage, by which it clearly appeared how much the recitative style was improved (h).”

In a discourse by Pietro della Valle, on the Music of his own time, addressed by that celebrated traveller to Lelio Guidiccione in 1640, and published in the second volume of the works of Battista Doni, at Florence, 1763, there is an interesting, clear, and admirable account of the state of Music in Italy, but particularly at Rome, during the beginning of the seventeenth century.

This agreeable writer, who had studied Music under the best masters from seven years old, and who seems to have been a perfect judge of the subject, having been of a different opinion from his correspondent, who, in conversation, had asserted that Music for fifty years back had been declining, and that there were no professors left, equal to those of former times; endeavours to prove that, on the contrary, so far from having degenerated, it was in a state much nearer perfection at the time he wrote, than at any former period.

“If canons, fugues, inversions, and all the artifices of elaborate and learned compositions are less practised in vocal Music now,” says the author, “than formerly, it is because they are so unfavourable to poetry, and the intelligence of what is sung; for in fugues of many voices, there are as many different words as notes sung at the same time, which occasions such confusion, that it is utterly impossible to discover the sentiment of the poet, which is the soul of the song, and that which chiefly makes a voice superior to an instrument. If the words and the notes do not mutually help to explain and enforce each other, they are ill-match-

(g) Lezione, or lecture, read at Cardinal Babarino's: Se le azione drammatiche degli antichi, si rappresentavano in Musica in tutto,

o in parte.

(h) The composer's name is not recorded, but this drama was printed 1623. Drammatur.

“ed,

“ ed, and unfit to be together. To the confusion arising from all
 “ the parts singing different words at the same time, may be added
 “ the little attention to accent in fugues, where the ligatures and “ other accidents in harmony frequently throw the emphasis on “ wrong words, and make long syllables short, and short long.
 “ Another inconvenience, or rather absurdity, seems inevitable in “ vocal fugues of much subtilty and contrivance, where quick and “ slow, chearful and pathetic notes, are moving at the same time, “ which makes good performers unwilling to sing them, as they “ can neither manifest taste, nor sense, in the execution.

“ The old masters certainly were well acquainted with harmony, “ but few knew what use to make of it. Their compositions are “ full of the most artful and difficult inventions and contrivances, “ which the ear can neither taste nor comprehend in the perform“ ance; such may be seen in the works of Soriano, and one of the “ Nanini (i), as well as in many others that might be named, who,
 “ it is said, are so far from thinking of the accent or expression of “ words, that they never chuse them till after the Music is com“ posed, and then adapt the first they can find

“ This is not the method by which modern masters proceed;
 “ they have learned how to chuse and respect good poetry, in set“ ting which they relinquish all the pedantry of canons, fugues, “ and other Gothic inventions; and, in imitation of the ancient “ Greeks, aspire at nothing but expression, grace, and propriety.

“ The first good compositions of this kind that have been heard “ in modern times, were Dafne, Euridice, and Arianna, written by “ Rinuccini, and set by Jacobo Peri and Monteverde, for the courts “ of Florence and Mantua.

“ And in Rome, the first who introduced this intelligent kind
 “ of Music to the notice of the public, was my last harpsichord “ master, Paolo Quagliati; who was happily imitated by Tarditi, “ and others, still living (k); and who, to the facility and grace of his

(i) Both singers in the Pontifical Chapel;
 for an account of Nanini, see Vol. III. p.
 198; and Soriano has a place among the celebrated canonists of his time.

(k) Orazio Tarditi was Maestro di Capella in the cathedral of Faenza, in the Roman state, and a very voluminous composer of masses, psalms, and motets, besides what he produced in the recitative style.

“ melody,

“ melody, have added new and greater beauties of their own ; and
 “ in which, if there appear but little complication and contrivance, “ it must not be ascribed to ignorance or want of art, but regarded “ as the effect of judgment and choice ; reserving such resources “ for particular occasions ; in this they differ widely from their “ predecessors, who never lost an opportunity of shewing their skill
 “ in vanquishing difficulties of their own making.”

Della Valle's account of the manner in which the first opera, or secular musical drama, was exhibited at Rome, is so curious, that I shall translate his own words as literally as possible.

“ My master Quagliati was an excellent Maestro di Capella, who “ introduced a new species of Music into the churches of Rome, “ not only in compositions for a single voice (monodie), but for two,
 “ three, four, and very often more voices, in chorus, ending with a “ numerous crowd of many choirs or choruses, singing together ; “ specimens of which may be seen in many of his motets that have “ been since printed. And the Music of my cart, or moveable-“ stage, composed by the same Quagliati, in my own room, chiefly “ in the manner he found most agreeable to me, and performed in “ masks through the streets of Rome during the Carnival of 1606, “ was the first dramatic action, or representation in Music, that had “ ever been heard in that city (l). Though no more than five “ voices, or five instruments, were employed, the exact number “ which an ambulant cart could contain, yet these afforded great “ variety : as, besides the dialogue of single voices, sometimes two, “ or three, and, at last, all the five sung together, which had an “ admirable effect. The Music of this piece, as may be seen in the “ copies of it that were afterwards printed, though dramatic, was “ not all in simple recitative, which would have been tiresome, but “ ornamented with beautiful passages, and movements in measure, “ without deviating however from the true theatrical style ; on

(l) Here he seems to have forgotten the performance of Emilio del Cavaliere's oratorio, Dell' Anima, e del Corpo, which was exhibited at Rome, in action on a stage, in the church of Sta. Maria della Vallicella, 1600. If Della Valli had said the first secular dramatic representation in this kind of Music, he would have been more correct.

“ which account it pleased extremely, as was manifest from the “ prodigious concourse of people it drew after it, who, so far from “ being tired, heard it performed five or six several times ; there “ were some even who continued to follow our cart to ten or twelve “ different places where it stopt, and who never quitted us as long “ as we remained in the street, which was from four o’clock in the “ evening till after midnight.”

This narration seems to furnish a curious circumstance to the history of the stage, which is, that the first opera or musical drama, performed in modern Rome, like the first tragedy in ancient Greece, was exhibited in a cart. It has been imagined by many of the learned, that the recitative in modern operas is a revival of that species of melos in which ancient dramas were sung ; and here the moveable stage on which it was performed, like that used by Thespis at Athens, furnishes another resemblance.

———Plaustris vexisse,

Poemata Thespis.

HOR.

Della Valle, after having proved that the singing of his time was better, and the compositions more varied, more rational, and amical to poetry, than the more ancient, proceeds to speak of instrumental Music ; and after discriminating the different kinds of playing on an instrument, in a solo, in a full-piece, in accompanying a voice, or leading a band ; he says he must agree with his friend, that solo playing, however exquisite and refined, at length tires, and that it had frequently happened to organists of the highest class when lost and immersed in carrying on a happy subject of voluntary, to be silenced by a bell ; which never happened to singers, who, when they leave off displease the congregation or audience to whom their performance seems always too short. In this kind of playing he however allows, though he only knew their merit by tradition, that Correggio of Parma, Luzzasco of Ferrara, Annibale of Padua, Andrea and Giovanni Gabrielli of Venice, Giovanni Macque of Naples, Il Cavalier Leuto of Rome, and others whom his friend had praised, were very great men. “ But,” says he, “ however admirable these “ performers may have been, has not Ercole di San Pietro had great “ reputation,

“reputation, and have you not confessed that Frescobaldi, who is still living, has often surprised and affected you by his performance? “There are many,” continues Della Valle, “who played the organ in his manner, that I could name.” And as for other instruments, he asks his friend if he does not remember “Gregorio del Violino, “a great contrapuntist as well as performer; another who played “wonderfully on the spinet; and Gio. Francesco de Leuto who all “played in his cart?” After these, he mentions a performer on the cornet, and the first violin of the bishop of Padua, Marco Fraticelli on the viol da gamba, Kapsberger on the theorbo, Orazio on the harp, Michael Angelo on the violin, and others of equal reputation, who had all surpassed the performers of anterior times (m). These were solo players, but with respect to the art of accompanying others, he says it was brought to such perfection that he could not imagine it ever had been or could be surpassed.

He supposes that there had been at all times musicians who could lead a band well; but believes that at no time there ever was a person who discovered more judgment and abilities in this station than Signor Pietro Eredia, in the church of Jesus, where, though Music is not his profession, he frequently plays for his devotion (n).

He then comes to singing, as the last thing he has to discuss; and this he considers in solo songs, and in Music of many parts. His friend, among the soprani, or treble voices, of his youth, had greatly praised the falsetti who used to sing in the Pope's chapel, and elsewhere; and Della Valle says he remembered one of them, Gio. Luca Falsetto, who had great execution, and went up to the clouds (o); and mentions Orazietto, a very good singer, either in a falsset or tenor; Ottaviuccio and Verovio, famous tenors, who all three sung in his cart. “However, these,” he adds, “trills, graces, and a good which were wholly unknown to past times.

(m) In speaking of the great improvement in taste which these last had introduced on their several instruments, he tells us, in the Musical Technica of the times, that these excellent modern musicians had joined to all the subtilties of counterpoint, a thousand graces in their performance, di trilli, di strascichi, di sincopa, di tremoli, di finte, di piano, e di forte, e di simili galanterie,

(n) Protestants would perhaps mistake it for diversion. Tartini dedicated himself and his violin to the service of St. Anthony of Padua, and during the last years of his life would play no where else, in public, but at the church of that saint.

(o) Gran cantore di gorge, e di passeggi, che andava alto alle stelle.

“portamento, or direction of voice, excepted, were extremely deficient in the other requisites of good singing; such as piano and forte, swelling and diminishing the voice by minute degrees, expression, assisting the poet in fortifying the sense and passion of the words, rendering the tone of voice chearful, pathetic, tender, bold, or gentle at pleasure (p): these, with other embellishments in which singers of the present times excel, were never talked of even at Rome, till Emilio del Cavaliere, in his old age, gave a good specimen of them from the Florentine School, in his oratorio, at the Chiesa Nuova, at which I was myself, when very young, present (q).”

What follows is extremely curious and satisfactory concerning a delicate point of musical history, which is, the first establishment of Evirati in the Pope's Chapel, and the use of them in early operas.

Signor Santarelli, the present Maestro di Capella of the Pontifical Chapel, himself a soprano, among the memorandums concerning the history of Music (r), with which he favoured me at Rome, has the two following articles, which fix the precise time when Evirati were first admitted into the chapel, and when falset voices ceased to be employed. “Father Girolamo Rossini of Perugia, priest of the congregation of the oratory, flourished in the seventeenth century. He was an excellent singer, in soprano, and was the first Evirato employed in the Pontifical chapel, in which, till then, the soprano, or treble part, was sung by Spaniards, in falset. Padre Rossini was admitted into the Pontifical Chapel in 1601, and died in 1644 (s).

(p) It is difficult, in our language, to find equivalents for some of these musical terms: such as rallegrear la voce, or immalinconirla, farla pietosa, or ardita quando bisogni, and di simili altre galanterie, which, in the original, are very expressive and comprehensive to a lover of Music who has attended much to the refinements of singing.

(q) Della Valle, in the course of his letter, says, that he was fifty-four at the time it was written; and as he began to learn Music of good masters at seven years old, he may be said to have served an apprenticeship to the art, and be allowed a competent judge at fourteen, when he heard the performance.

(r) Estratto di alcuni notizie storiche appartenenti alla facoltà musicale. MS.

(s) Padre Girolamo Rossini da Perugia, prete della congregazione dell' oratorio, fiorì nel secolo XVII. Fu eccellente cantore della parte di soprano, e fu il primo evirato, che avesse luogo nella Capella Pontificia, avendo fin d'allora servito la capella in qualità di soprani i nazionali Spagnuoli con voce di falsetto. Il prelodato Padre fu amesso tra cantori Pontifici nel 1601, e morì nel 1644, alli 23 di Dicembre. Vedi Adami, Osserv. per ben. reg. il Coro della Cap. Pontif.

“ Giovanni

“ Giovanni de Sanctos, a Spaniard, who died at Rome, 1625, was
 “ the last soprano, who sung with a falset voice in the Papal Cha“ pel (t).”

These two records are decisive, which, with what Della Valle says on the subject, will, it is to be hoped, sufficiently gratify reasonable curiosity with respect to the origin and progress of the inhuman practice of mutilating children in order to keep the voice in its adolescent state. I had, indeed, made extracts and memorandums in the course of my enquiries towards a more detailed discussion of the practice, as connected in a peculiar manner with the history of Music; but it is so difficult to treat the subject with due delicacy, that I shall add as little as possible to what Della Valle has said of the number and use of these ill-fated mortals, in Italy, during the beginning of the seventeenth century. I must, however, in justice, as well as humanity, endeavour to remove some prejudices which throw an unmerited contempt upon beings, who, as they are by no means accountable for that imperfection under which they labour, are entitled to all the pity and alleviation we can bestow.

There seem to have been no singing eunuchs in antiquity, unless we allow the Galli, or Archigalli, priests of Cybele, to be such; who, in imitation of Atys, the favourite of that goddess, mutilated themselves at their initiation, and used to sing extempore songs, and play on instruments through the streets (u).

Castration

(t) Giovanni de Sanctos, Spagnuolo, quale morì in Roma nell'anno 1625, e fu sepolto nella Chiesa di S. Giovanni in Campo Marzio. Essato l'ultimo soprano di voce di falsetto, che abbia servito la Capella Pontificia. Vede Matteo Fornari, Notizia Storiche della Cap. Pontif.

(u) It has, however, been imagined from some explanations in Hesychius that the words αισδος and ευνεχος were synonymous: Αισδος. περι βασιλοι. ονομαστοι. η ευνεχοι. He says in another place, Ευνεχος. σπαδων. τομιας. Again: Αισδος. ωδης. κιθαρωδης. και ο ποιητης, και ο θρηνωδης. ο ευνεχος. σπαδων.

In these senses this word must have been used by some writer or writers before the fourth or fifth century, about which time Hesychius is supposed by his last learned editor to have compiled his Lexicon.

Dion Cassius, Lib. LXXV. p. 1267. Vol. II. Ed. Reimari, relates, that after the death of Plautianus, the favourite of Severus, it was discovered, that εξετεμε ου παιδας μονον, ελε μειρακια αλλα και ανδρας, και εστιν ες αυλων και γυναικας εχοντας, οπως η Πλαυτιλλα η θυγατηρ αυτου, ην ο αυλωνος μελα ταυτ' εγημε, δι' ευνεχων την τε αλλην δεραπειαν, και τα περι την μουσικην, την τε λοιπην θεωριαν.

The reader will see, Vol. I. p. 178 and 351, according to Eustathius ad Odyf. 3. v. 267, that some writers have supposed the Αισδος, who attended Clytemnestra to have been Castration has, however, at all times been practised in Eastern countries to furnish jealousy and tyranny with safe-guards to female chastity; yet never, as I have been able to ascertain, merely to preserve the voice for the vain amusement of the public, till about the latter end of the sixteenth century. But though I detest the perpetrators of such horrid crimes against human nature as the parents commit, who sacrifice that tenderness which every other part of creation manifests for its offspring, in order to gratify avarice or ambition; yet I cannot subscribe to the common assertion that Evirati are all cowards, devoid of genius for literature, or any solid study; and that even the voice, for the melioration of which they are so inhumanly treated, is inferior to that of a woman or a boy (x).

been a cunuch: Τινες δὲ αἰδοῦν, τὸν εὐνεχὸν παρενόησαν, ὡς αἰδοῖα μητῶν. This, however, was not the case; for αἰδοῦς never signifies εὐνεχός in Homer, but always simply Cantor, a singer. The reason of this αἰδοῦς being intrusted with the charge of Clytemnestra may be inferred from an observation of Suidas, who tells us, that Το αἰδῶν γένος σωφρονὴν τὸ παλαιόν.

(x) Voyez l'Encyclopedie, art. Voix, & Dict. de Mus. par Rousseau. It is very certain, that the ancients never supposed eunuchs to have been men of inferior intellects, or that they possessed less vigour of mind, than other men. At least the Persians were not of this opinion; for Herodotus relates, Lib. VI. 32. p. 451, Ed. Weßeling, that when they had taken possession of some Ionian cities, παιδας τε τῆς εὐειδίας ἐκλεγομένοι ἐξέταμον, καὶ ἐποίησαν αὐτὴν εἶναι ἐνορχίας εὐνεχας. It is certain, however, Herodotus, Lib. viii. p. 668, says, in relating the melancholy story of Hermotimus, that παρὰ τοῖσι βαρβάροισι τιμιώτεροι εἰσι οἱ εὐνεχοί, πιστὸς εἶναι πασὶν, τῶν ἐνορχίων, “among the barbarians, the eunuchs are more valued than other men, on account of their universal fidelity.”

It appears from this passage of Herodotus, that in Persia, eunuchs were far from being objects of contempt; and were even frequently promoted to the highest honours. This was, indeed, the case with Hermotimus.

Dion Chrysostom has touched on this subject, Orat. XXI. p. 270. Ed. Morell.

We find in Agathias, who was one of the Byzantine historians, that a general in the Roman army, named Narses, was a eunuch. This was in the later ages. The passage is in Lib. I. ὁ δὲ Νάρσης, ὁ στρατηγὸς τῶν Ῥωμαίων, τομίας ἦν.

In Plutarch's Life of Aristides, Vol. II. p. 501. Ed. Reiske, Themistocles is related to have chosen a eunuch, whose name was Arnaces, from among his prisoners, to send on a secret embassy to Xerxes. This surely may serve to shew, that mental imbecility was not supposed, by the Greeks, to be the characteristic of eunuchism. The same story of the confidence placed in Arnaces, who was one of the Persian king's eunuchs is related also in the life of Themistocles, Vol. I. p. 470. Plutarch Ed. Reiske.

Aristotle paid such high respect to Hermias, who was a eunuch, and governor of Atarneus, which is in Mysia, that he even offered sacrifices, in honour of him; as Lucian informs us, in his Dialogue, entitled Eunuchus, Vol. II. p. 357. Ed. Hemsterh. This regard of Aristotle for Hermias has been often celebrated, and is mentioned by Suidas, Harpocration, and others. See also Vol. I. of this History, p. 479.

Suidas, in Voce εὐνεχός, says, ὅτι Ἀριστοτελὴς Πτολεμαίῳ τῷ βασιλεῶς εὐνεχὸς ἦν, ἀλλ' ἀνδρώδης τὴν προαίρεσιν.

With

With respect to the operation affecting the mind so much as to deprive it of all fortitude in times of danger, there is great reason to doubt the fact: most of the generals of Eastern monarchs having been at all times of this class; and the bravest stand that ever was made against Alexander the Great, was at Gaza, under the command of one of Darius's generals, who was a eunuch. Ammianus Marcellinus (y) gives an account of Menophilus, a eunuch, to whom Mirthridates entrusted his daughter, which proves the possibility of such unfortunate persons possessing a heroism equal to that of the most determined Stoic. I think Guadagni and Pacchierotti were so far from timid and pusillanimous, that they would seek danger rather than shun it, if called upon or irritated.

As to genius, I never found those of the first class in Music deficient in intellectual abilities for more serious studies (z). Indeed, I have seen real genius and disposition for literary pursuits, in more than one great opera singer; and as for composition, and the theory of Music, not only the best singers of the Pope's Chapel ever since the beginning of the last century, but the best composers are among the soprani, in that service.

Prejudice has been carried so far as to say, that an Evirato is unable to utter the letter r; indeed, if an Italian, he will not perhaps snarl that letter in so canine a manner as some French and English singers do, perhaps to shew their manhood; but defect of elocution is no more peculiar to eunuchs, than to any other part of the human species (a).

I shall

(y) L. xvi. c. 7.

(z) It has, however, been said: e mille Spadonibus qui literarum studiis operam addixere, vix unum aliquem doctum evasisse; ac planum est, quam rudis omnino in Musica fuit, quæ tamen propria ipsorum professio est. Janus Huartus Scrutiniarum, p. 594. Ed. Jenens. Another has gone so far as to say: produxi ergo virum a mille Eunuchis ratiocinia docentem. Quæ de Musica, addit, de ejus theoria seu scientia capio. Castrata animalia pristinum animi vigorem, generositatem, audaciam, solertiam, amittunt, fiunt debilia; frigida, timida, et effæminata animo et corpore, ut patet, nedum in hominibus, sed etiam in equis indomitis, &c. Jo. Alphon. Borelli. De Motu Anim.

(a) Where these cruel operations are performed, and by whom, I never was able in my journey through Italy to discover, though it was one of my constant enquiries. M. de la Lande, however, was more fortunate, having asserted, positively, in his Voyage d'Italie, that there are shops at Naples with this inscription: Qui si castrano raggazzi; but I was not only utterly unable to see or hear of any such shops during my residence in that city, but was constantly

I shall now return to Della Valle's account of singers in Italy from the beginning of the sixteenth century to the year 1640, when he wrote his Discourse. After saying he had been present at the performance of the first oratorio in Rome; he tells us, that the style of singing began to improve from that time; and at present, says he, we have Nicolini, Bianchi, Giovannini, Lorenzini, Mario (b) and many others, who not only equal, but surpass the singers of more early times, at least in taste and judgment.—“But let us quit the consideration of all other voices, and speak only of sopranos, the greatest ornaments of Music. You are pleased,” he says to his friend, “to compare the falsetti of former times with the soprani, which at present are so common? but who ever sung then like a Guidobaldo, a Cavalier Loreto, a Gregorio, an Angeluccio, a Marc-Antonio (c), and many more that might be named? The best resource then was a boy, with a good voice; but boys, the instant they begin to know their business, lose their voices, and it is allowed, even while they remain in their greatest perfection, that their performance, on account of their youth and inexperience, must inevitably be devoid of taste, judgment, and grace; indeed, it is generally so mechanical and unfeeling, that I hardly ever heard a boy sing without receiving more pain than pleasure. The soprani of the present times, being, on the contrary, persons of mature age and judgment, sing with such science, expression, and taste, as to ravish every hearer of sensibility. During the last age there was no such singer, except Padre Soto (d), and afterwards, Girolamo (e), who is still living.

“At present every court and every chapel in Italy is furnished with them; and besides Evirati, what age could boast of so many excellent female singers?” Here he celebrates the talents of a great number, who had been in high favour at Florence and elsestantly told, both by the natives and English settled there, that the laws against such a practice were so numerous and severe that it was never performed but with the utmost secrecy. A spirited modern Italian writer, in a book entitled, Sbozzo del Commercio di Amsterdam, 1783, has taken up the defence of his country with a zeal truly patriotic against the assertions of late writers concerning the morals and manners of the Italians.

(b) These had chiefly tenor voices.

(c) All Evirati.

(d) Of these early sopranos farther mention will be made hereafter.

(e) See above, p. 40.

where, both for dramatic and chamber singing, but particularly at Rome. In speaking of these, he asks, "who hears without rapture Signora Leonora sing to her own accompaniment on the arch-lute, which she touches in so fanciful and masterly a manner? And who will now venture to say, which is the best performer, she, or her sister Caterina? nor is there one who, like me, has seen and heard Signora Adriana, their mother, when, during her youth, she sailed in a felucca, near the Pausilippan grotto, with her golden harp in her hand, but must confess that in our times, these shores were inhabited by Sirens, that are not only beautiful and tuneful, but virtuous and beneficent." He praises likewise Signora Maddalena with her sister, who were called the Lolle, and were the first he heard sing well at Rome, after his return from the Levant; and Signor Sofonisba, who a few years before had as great applause in Rome, as ever was given to any one in the ancient theatre of Marcellus. After celebrating the talents of several others, who were living at the time of his writing, he mentions la Francesca Caccini, by the Tuscans called la Cecchina, daughter of the famous Giulio Caccini Romano, who had been many years the admiration of Florence, where he heard her himself in his youth, not only for her musical abilities both in singing and composition, but for her poetry both in the Latin and Tuscan language. He then speaks of the nuns of his time, as exquisite singers, particularly la Verovia, and others, Nello Spirito Santo at Rome, who for many years had astonished the world: the nuns of Santa Lucia in Silici, as well as the nuns of San Silvestro, of Magnanopoli, and Santa Chiara, whom people flock to hear as miraculous. In short, he concludes, that such was the number and excellence of the singers of his time, that those who were not content with their performance, must certainly be either too fond of antiquity, as is usual with old people; or too fastidious and unwilling to be pleased; which proceeds from affectation, and a pretence to more taste and delicacy than other people, or from a nausea, resembling that of persons in sickness, who want appetite for the most exquisite dainties.

He then speaks of composition, and asks his friend, who could possibly bear the Villanelle, or ballads of forty or fifty years ago? which seem, words and Music, the production of some blind, strolling musician. "The songs in favour at present," adds he, "are of a very different kind;" and instances, among the serious, one by Luigi, beginning Or che la notte del silentio amica: and, among the comic, one by Orazio (f), per torbido mare, which for delicacy he thought could not be exceeded. And for those who delight in triple time, and Canzonette alla Napolitana, which are all in Spanish time, and in such favour at present with the vulgar, what could be prettier than those published by Gio. Batista Bellis a few years ago? As for Sicilian airs, which are extremely graceful and pathetic, Valle says, that he was perhaps the first himself who brought them to Rome from Naples in 1611, and afterwards from Sicily; "though at present," he adds, "they are as common, and as well sung there, as in Sicily itself." He then speaks of the Spanish Ciacona, the Saraband, the Passacaille, the Portuguese Ciacotta, and many other foreign airs, which had been but lately known at Rome, but with which the Villanelle and Canzonette of that city were already enriched; and adds, that he himself had in his travels made a very curious collection of Persian, Turkish, Arabian, and Indian tunes, wholly different from those of Italy, both in time and intervals.

Della Valle then proceeds to tell his friend Guidiccioni, that if he was long ago almost out of himself when he heard Correggio perform on the organ at Parma; he had been informed that he was likewise in ecstasy, a few years since, when he heard the verses of Virgil sung, which the eldest Mazzocchi had so beautifully set to Music.

After this he mentions the madrigalists of his own time, who had polished and improved that species of composition far beyond those of the preceding age. However, he says, madrigals grew every day in less request than formerly; as the singing single songs with taste and expression, accompanied by an instrument, was now preferred to four or five people poring over their book at a table, which seemed too studious and scholastic for the entertainment of a company.

(f) A performer on the harp, celebrated elsewhere by Della Valle.

However, he tells his friend, that not only learned madrigals were still composed by Muzio, Pecci, Zoilo, Nenna, and Mel; but masses and motets in the grand and boasted style of the preceding century, particularly by the younger Mazzocchi, who, at the Roman College, not long since had admirably gratified the lovers of full compositions by pieces for six choirs; and since that, at St. Peter's church, with a mass for twelve or sixteen choirs, with a choir or chorus of echo placed at the top of the cupola, which, in the amplitude of that vast temple, had a wonderful effect. Whoever is able to accomplish this, is able to do any thing that can be required of the most learned contrapuntist. "But give me leave to observe," says Della Valle, that "these gigantic performances, in which all the harmony possible is crowded, are so apt to be coarse and violent, that every idea of taste, expression, and refinement, is annihilated; and men content themselves with such playing and singing, in the aggregate, as, if heard alone, would not be good enough for a barber's shop, or the street (g)."

He had a reverence, he said, for old compositions, which he would carefully preserve, not for use, but, like antiques, to grace a collection, or museum.

In the Pontifical Chapel, which in choral Music gives the law to all other Christian churches in the world, some ancient compositions are still in use, but not to the utter exclusion of every thing that is modern; for composers are always retained there, in order to furnish the chapel with a constant supply of new productions.

A few years ago, after his return to Italy, Della Valle says, he had heard the vespers performed on Easter-Monday, by the nuns only, at the church dello Spirito Santo, in florid Music, with such perfection as he never in his life had heard before: and on the last Christmas-eve, in attending the whole service at the church of St. Apollinare, where every part of it was performed agreeably to so solemn an occasion ; though by arriving late he was obliged to stand the whole time in a very great crowd, he remained there with the utmost pleasure, to hear the excellent Music that was performed. In the beginning, he was particularly enchanted by the Venite exultimus, which was more exquisite than words can describe. “ I know not,” says Valle, “ who was the author of it, but suppose it to have been the production of the Maestro di Cappella of that church (b).”

(g) Questo si chiama da persone conoscente ed intendente del mestiero, sonar a Barbieri.

What he says farther on church Music appears reasonable and liberal ; I shall, however, quit this author for the present, as more copious extracts have been already given from him than were intended ; but as this discourse by Della Valle is but little known, and his information and remarks are written with the spirit of an auditor, and discover a thorough knowledge of the subject, they are so much more alive than such fragments and scraps of intelligence as could be gleaned of so remote a time elsewhere, from the writings or compositions of different authors, that it was not easy to relinquish so good a guide.

And it is hoped that his defence of what he calls modern Music will not offend the present patrons of the ancient, as this very Music is now become respectable for its antiquity. The croaker family is very ancient : Plato 2000 years ago complained of the degeneracy in the Music of his time, as much as the greatest enemies of innovation can do at present : where then can judgment, reason, and good taste draw a line between improvement and corruption ? If it were possible in the history of the world to find a period when all mankind were of one opinion about matters of taste and fancy, we would there fix our standard of perfection ; but in all my enquiries, having met with no such golden age of Music, I fear the partizans on both sides must still be left at war, without the least hope that the Temple of Janus will ever be shut.

(b) There was no master in Italy at this time, 1640, whose compositions this description will so well suit, as those of the admirable Carissimi, who was now, in all probability, the Maestro di Capella in question ; though so young, that his fame was as yet unfledged ; however, it was in composing for this church that he acquired that great and extensive reputation which he enjoyed during a long life, and which his offspring, or musical productions, still deservedly enjoy.

The learned, who neither know the art, nor feel the power of Music, and are inimical to its cultivation, are compelled by historical evidence to allow, that the ancient Greeks and Romans sung their dramas throughout; but then they comfort themselves in supposing that this was done in simple narrative melody, like recitative, without what they call the absurd and preposterous modern mixture of AIRS, accompanied with instruments playing different melodies from the voice-part. AIRS thus accompanied in a musical drama may be difficult to defend by cold reason and criticism; but they are nevertheless very delightful to sense. And if melody united with harmony cannot narrate or moralize, and is equally unable to instruct the mind or mend the heart, it can neither deprave nor corrupt either. Music is, itself, a very expressive and intelligible language to all those whose ears and hearts are obedient to its vibrations. I shall not therefore join with these four censurers, whose reasoning and complaints only convince me, that they are as deaf to the sweetness of refined tones, as near-sighted mortals are blind to remote objects. The hearer of Music, as well as the composer and performer, must be gifted with one perfect sense at least. Every eye that can assist its owner to avoid a post, is not able to see the beauties of a fine picture; nor every ear that faithfully conveys to the mind the most rapid and minute articulations of speech, equally faithful in conveying to the inmost recesses of the soul those excellent inflexions, of musical voice or instrument, which thrill and enchant every sincere votary of the tuneful art.

Mankind always seem more ready to own a deficiency in any other sense than that of hearing or feeling, when Music is in question. "I am so near-sighted, that I did not know you—pray pardon me, Sir." But who ever confesses with equal frankness, that his contempt for Music arises from any other cause than superiority of judgment or pursuits? No one says: "doubtless the Music you have composed, performed, or praised, may be exquisite; but my ear is not so well constructed as to vibrate truly on hearing it;" or allows that he wants feeling or taste for such elegant works of art. The lively St. Evremond and the candid Addison, with the decision.

sion of men of letters, ignorant of Music and impenetrable to its powers, determine the merit of French and Italian operas, without the least knowledge or feeling in the art; and their decisions are often referred to by other απεροι, with a degree of triumph as great as if they were mathematical demonstrations.

After this digression, for which we hope the musical reader will pardon us, we shall proceed in our narrative concerning dramatic Music with as little mixture of extraneous matter as possible.

The inhabitants of BOLOGNA not only dispute the priority of musical dramas with the Romans and Venetians, but even the Florentines, who, as has already been related, had exhibitions of this kind as early as the year 1590. However interesting such disputes may be to the good people of Italy, but few of my English readers will, I fear, think the decision of much importance. Yet if a more minute investigation of the subject should be wished by those who have had the patience to follow me thus far, the best information to which I am able to recommend them is contained in two small books entitled The Glory of Poetry and Music, published at Venice, 1730 (i); and a Chronological Series of musical Dramas, at Bologna, 1737 (k). By these publications, and by other information that has been acquired, it appears that the first Italian operas were performed in the palaces of princes for the celebration of marriages, or on some particular occasion of joy and festivity, at the expence of the sovereign or republic; and not in theatres supported by general contribution.

Though a regular series of the names and writers of the musical dramas performed in the city of Bologna is preserved, from the year 1600, yet I have not been able to discover who composed the Music of any of these dramas till the year 1610, when GIROLAMO GIACOBBI, Maestro di Capella of San Petronio, set the opera of Andromeda. This was a learned and classical composer of the Bo-con le annotationi a suoi luoghi proprii.

(i) Le Glorie della Poesia e della Musica contenute nell'esatta notizia de Teatri della città di Venezia, e nel Catalogo purgatissimo de Drami Musicali quivi fin' ora rappresentati, con gl' autori della poesia, e della Musica, e

(k) Serie Cronologica dei drammi recitati su de' pubblici Teatri di Bologna, dall' anno 1600, fino al corrente 1737.

logna School, whose productions for the church are still much esteemed. His opera of Andromeda was revived eighteen years after its first performance.

In 1616, the famous drama of Euridice, written by Rinuccini, which had been exhibited in Bologna in 1601, was again performed there, to the Music of Joco-po Peri, Marco da Gagliano, and Girolamo Giacobbi; where, according to Ger. Egnazio Corsi, who was one of the audience, the applause and crowd of strangers attracted thither, were as great as in ancient times, at the sight of the gladiators and public games with which Vitellius Cæsar regaled the people in the great amphitheatre of that city.

Though operas continued to be performed almost every year at Bologna during the last century, yet they were chiefly composed by Venetian masters, till the year 1674, when PETRONIO FRANCESCHELLI set the prologue to the opera of Caligula; and afterwards Oronte di Menfi, 1676; Arfinoe, 1677; and Apollo in Tefaglia, 1679.

There seems to have been no public theatre in this city till the year 1680, when four operas are said to have been performed there, nel Teatro pubblico. After this period the Music of subsequent operas seems to have been supplied by native contrapuntists, among whom Giuseppe Felice Tosi, Giacomo Ant. Perti, Giov. Paolo Colonna, Giuseppe Aldrovandi, Pirro Albergati, the elder Bononcini, and Pistocchi, the celebrated singer, contributed to form and render that school eminent.

But these masters have severally contributed so much to the progress of their art, that it would be injustice not to specify their peculiar merits.

PERTI, born in 1656, was a solid grave composer of church Music; with his theatrical style I am but little acquainted: but as he long continued to be employed, not only for the operas of Bologna, but Venice and other cities of Italy, we may reasonably imagine that it was excellent. Paolucci (1) has printed a good duet

(1) Arte pratica di Contrap. Tom. I. p. 15. Mr. Perkins, an English gentleman, settled at Bologna, and a great admirer of the compositions of Perti, kindly furnished me with an admirable printed mass by this master, in eight real parts.

by this master, in the church style; and Padre Martini (m) has given several admirable specimens of his science in his Saggio di Contrappunto. This great harmonist, however, does him still more honour, by calling himself his disciple. Perti, before his decease, must nearly have attained the age of 100; for his name appears as the composer of Atide in 1679, and, according to Quadrio, he was living in 1744.

TOSI, the father of the writer of an excellent treatise on singing, well known in England by the late Mr. Galliard's translation, between the year 1679 and 1691, composed ten operas, chiefly for the theatre of Bologna.

GIOV. PAOLO COLONNA, Maestro di Capella di S. Petronio di Bologna, was the son of Antonio Colonna, alias del Corno, a celebrated organ-builder of Brescia (n). He composed but few operas; indeed, I know of but one, Amilcar in Cipro, for the theatre of Bologna, 1692; but he published about the latter end of the last century many excellent works for the church, of which P. Martini has given a list, to the amount of twelve, in the second volume of his History of Music (o).

It was the opinion of the late Dr. Boyce, that Colonna was Handel's model for choruses accompanied with many instrumental parts, different from the vocal. His psalms in eight parts, published at Bologna, 1694 (p), have been very justly admired for their masterly composition. Paolucci has inserted (q) the hymn, Pange lingua, set in plain counterpoint of four parts by him, in a manner sufficiently simple and syllabic for the most zealous reformers of church Music. His Sacre lamentationi della settimana santa, a voce sola, published 1689, contain many pleasing and elegant fragments of pathetic recitative, which I should have admired much more if I had not previously been acquainted with the works of Carissimi, who had anticipated not only all the thoughts of Colonna in this species of Music, but almost all those of every composer of the present century. The airs of these Lamentationi are too short to make much impression on the hearer.

(m) Tom. II. p. 142.

(n) See P. Martini's Storia della Mus. Tom. III. p. 260, note (158).

(o) Vedi l'Indice degli Autori.

(p) Lib. III. Op. ii.

(q) Tom. I. Esemp. xi. p. 199.

Colonna had a controversy with Corelli in 1685, concerning the consecution of fifths in the first movement of the third sonata of his Opera 2da. Every lover of Music will be sorry that the charge against Corelli should be well-founded; but it must be owned that the base is indefensible in the passage which has been condemned by Colonna, and was not likely to have passed uncensured, even in an age much more licentious than that of Corelli.

Antimo Liberati, with whom Colonna was in correspondence at the time of this controversy, seems to defend Corelli's violation of the known rule against the consecution of fifths, in a letter written 1685, sopra un seguito di quinte, in which he reasons thus: "If a quaver rest, or even a semiquaver, were not sufficient to satisfy the rule against fifths and eighths, a composer writing in many parts would have very narrow limits for the expansion of his genius and fancy, or for varying the harmony." But with due respect for the authority of Antimo Liberati, and with peace to the ashes of the gentle Corelli, the passage is unwarrantable, and seems the more inexcusable, as several better bases were easy to find, without altering his design, or destroying the effect of his trebles.

Fragment of Corelli, Sonata third, Opera 2da.

VOL. IV.

H

It

It appears that the excellent theorist Berardi had a reverence for the professional erudition of Colonna, by his dedicating to him the seventh chapter of his Miscellanea Musicale (r).

ALDOVRÀNDINI, between the year 1696 and 1711, composed for Bologna and Venice seven operas; some of which were comic, particularly one, entitled Amor Torna 5 al 50, which was written in the dialect of the Bolognese peasants.

COUNT ALBERGATI was a Bolognese Dilettante of a very illustrious family in that city, whose musical compositions were very much esteemed. I meet but with two of his operas: Gli amici, 1699, and Il Principe Selvaggio, 1712.

Of the three BONONCINIS: Giovanni Maria the father, and Giovanni and Marc' Antonio, his two sons, it will be necessary to speak hereafter in a more particular manner, as Music has great obligations to their genius and abilities.

Giov. Maria calls himself Modanese; however, he seems to have resided long in Bologna, and to have published the chief part of his works in that city, where his son Giovanni's Duetti da Camera Op. 8va. likewise first appeared. Both were also members of the Philharmonic Society there, and may be properly considered as ornaments of the Bologna School of counterpoint.

Of the celebrated PISTOCCHI, who founded the Bologna School of singing, Mr. Galliard in a note to his translation of Tosi, has given the best account that I have found. "This performer," says he, "was very famous about the latter end of the last century, and refined the manner of singing in Italy, which was then a little crude. His merit in this is acknowledged by all his countrymen, and contradicted by none." It is recounted of him, that in his youth, when he first performed in public, he had a very fine treble voice, and was admired and courted universally; but by a dissolute life, lost both that and his fortune. Being reduced to the utmost misery, he entered into the service of a composer, as a copyist, where he made use of the opportunity of learning the rules of composition, and became a considerable proficient. After some years, he recovered a small portion of voice, which by time and practice changed to fine a contralto. Having experience on his side, he took care of it, and as encouragement returned, he took the opportunity of travelling all over Europe, where hearing the different manners and tastes of the different performers, he appropriated to himself the flowers of them all, and formed that agreeable mixture, which he produced in Italy, where he was admired and imitated. At length he settled at the court of Anspach, where he lived in great affluence, and had a considerable stipend as a Maestro di Capella. After continuing there several years in an easy and honourable station, he returned to Italy, and retired into a convent at Bologna, where, when his duties of devotion were performed, he instructed for his amusement such young professors as were remarkable for voice, disposition, diligence, and good morals. Tosi speaks of Pistocco as remarkable in his day for a strict adherence to measure, and firm and steady manner of introducing graces and embellishments without breaking its proportions. The celebrated Bernacchi, Pasi, Minelli of Bologna, and Bartolino of Faenza, were four of his most renowned scholars.

(r) Della Battuta, p. 78.

ANTONIO BERNACCHI, who was in England several times, supported the reputation of the Bologna School of singing many years after the decease of his master Pistocchi. Amadori, Guarducci, and Raaff, the celebrated tenor, were scholars of Bernacchi; as was Signor Giambatista MANCINI, Maestro di Canto della Corte Imperiale e Accademico Filarmonico, who in 1774, published, at Vienna, Pensieri e Riflessioni pratiche sopra il Canto figurato; a useful book, as a supplement to his countryman Tosi's treatise on the same subject.

Sig. Mancini confirms what has been frequently related of his master Bernacchi, that when he first appeared on the stage having neither a good natural voice nor a good manner of singing, he was so ill received, that his best friends advised him either to quit the profession of a singer entirely, or to place himself wholly under the direction of Pistocchi. Having followed their advice in this last particular, Pistocchi received him with kindness, and marking out a course of study for him, Bernacchi not only followed it implicitly, and applied with unwearied diligence for several years, but during this time declined singing not only in the churches and theatres, but even in private parties, to his most intimate friends; till having the full consent of his instructor, he appeared with such eclat, that he was regarded by the best judges, though his voice was originally defective, as the most refined and artificial singer of his time.

Pistocchi's compositions for the stage acquired him considerable reputation. He set Leandro, o sia gl'Amori fatali, and Girello, for Venice. The first was performed 1679, in a manner not uncommon, at that time: the characters were represented by wooden figures on the stage, while the singers performed behind the scenes. And in the second, 1682, the parts were acted by figures in wax, while the singers were invisible. This resembled the Roman custom, in the time of Andronicus, when, according to Livy, one of the Roman players sung while another acted before him (s). Pistocchi set the opera of Narciso, written by Apost. Zeno, by command of the Margrave of Brandenburg, in 1697 (t); and Le Risa di Democrito for the imperial court at Vienna, 1700. This opera was performed with great applause at Bologna 1708, and at Florence 1710, to the same Music.

Progress of the musical Drama at Rome.

It does not appear that any regular theatre was opened for the performance of operas, in this ancient and renowned city, during the former part of the last century; nor, indeed, can I discover that any regular opera or secular musical drama was performed there till the year 1632, when Il Ritorno di Angelica nell' Indie, Drama Musicale, is recorded by Leo Allacci, in his Drammaturgia, to have been performed in that city; but without informing us where, or by whom set to Music or sung. Several musical dramas, however,

(s) See Vol. II. p. 159. Gagliano tells us too, that in his Dafne there were two Apollos, one to fight and another to sing. Prof.

(t) In the preface to this drama he is called, Musico di singolar eccellenza, chi non solamente lo pose egli stesso in Musica, ma rappresentò mirabilmente la parte di Narciso. Op. Dramat. d'Apost. Zeno, Tom. VII. 295.

were

were performed there at the palaces of Ambassadors and other great personages, between 1632 and 1661, when Clearco, set by Tenaglia, a Roman master, was performed. This composer, who had distinguished himself by his productions for the church, is celebrated by P. Della Valle among great Roman musicians in 1640.

The first public theatre, opened for the exhibition of musical dramas at Rome, in modern times, was il Torre di Nona, where Giasone was performed, 1671. No other theatre seems to have been used for this purpose in that city till 1679, when the opera of Dov'è Amore, è Pietà, set by Bernardo Pasquini, the famous organist, was represented Nella Sala de' Signori Capranica. This theatre still subsists.

The year 1680 is rendered memorable to musicians by the opera of L' Onesta negl' Amore; as it was the first dramatic composition of the elegant, profound, and original composer, Alessandro Scarlatti, who has many titles to a lasting fame; not only for his numerous operas and exquisite cantatas, which are still as much sought by the curious, as, during his life, they were by the public at large, but for establishing the fame of the Neapolitan School of counterpoint, which has since been so fertile in great musicians, among whom his admirable son, Domenico Scarlatti, and his elegant scholar, Adolfo Hasse, detto il Saffone, are distinguished by all the lovers of Music who are able to separate original genius from froth and bombast, and taste, propriety, and exquisite sensibility, from noise and Gothic barbarism. This early production of Scarlatti was performed in the palace of Christina, Queen of Sweden, who after her abdication in 1654, had chosen Rome for the place of her residence, where she died 1688.

In 1681, the opera of Lisimaco, set by Legrenzi, was likewise performed in the palace of her Swedish majesty. The next year four different operas were represented in this city; but as neither the names of the composers nor singers are preserved, a farther account of them in this work seems unnecessary. Indeed, though counterpoint was very successfully cultivated in the Pontifical Chapel by many composers of great abilities, dramatic Music offers nothing very.

very interesting to the present age till about the latter end of the last century, when the productions of Aleffandro Scarlatti, Giovanni Bononcini, and Francesco Gasparini, with the vocal performance of Siface, Pistocchi, Nicolini, and instrumental of Corelli on the violin, Pasquini on the harpsichord, Gaetano on the theorbo, and Bononcini himself on the violoncello, who frequently displayed their several talents in the same theatre, were celebrated throughout Europe. In 1694, Tullio Ostilio and Serfe, both composed by Bononcini, had these advantages; and in the dramatis personæ of Tullio, one of the first which I have seen, where the singers are mentioned, we find not only the names of Pistocchi and Nicolini, but of several other favourite performers (u).

In 1696, a new theatre was opened at the Aliberti palace, with two operas composed by Pertti of Bologna, Penelope la Casta and Furio Camilla. The abilities of this master, whose Music for the church is still much esteemed in Italy, have been considered elsewhere (x.)

Progress of the musical Drama or Opera, at Venice.

Though the inhabitants of this city have cultivated and encouraged the musical drama with more diligence and zeal than any other in Italy, during the latter part of the last century, and the beginning of the present, yet they were not very early in its establishment: as the first regular opera, or drama, set to Music, which was performed at Venice after the invention of recitative, was Andromeda, written by Benedetto Ferrari of Reggio, in the Modenese state, and set to Music by Francesco Manelli of Tivoli, 1637. Ferrari was himself a celebrated performer on the lute, an able poet, and a good musician; who, collecting together a company of the best singers in Italy, brought this opera on the stage in the theatre of S. Cassiano, at his own expence, in a very sumptuous manner.

(u) The first opera in which the names of the singers are inserted in the dramatis personæ, is Lisimaco, set by Legrenzi, for

Venice, 1682.

(x) See above, p. 51, where his character is given among Bologna composers.

An extraordinary instance of spirit and enterprize in a private individual of moderate fortune, to vie with princes in the support of an exhibition, of which, till then, it was thought they only could support the splendor (y).

In 1638, La Maga Fulminata, by the same poet and musician, was exhibited at the expence and risk of Ferrari and of five or six of the performers, in a very sumptuous and magnificent manner, though the expence did not amount to more than 2000 crowns. A sum which, at present, (says the author of The Glory of Poetry and Music, 1730) is hardly sufficient to satisfy the demands of an ordinary singer. But at this time the performers either shared in the profits, or were content with a moderate salary; public singers being then but seldom wanted, and that only in the capital cities of Italy; whereas at present, dramatic representations abound even in villages (z).

In 1639, there were four operas performed at Venice, at the two theatres of San Cassiano, and Santi Giovanni e Paolo. These were La Delia, written by Giulio Strozzi, a favourite lyric poet at the time, and set by Manelli. Le Nozze di Tete, e di Peleo, set to Music by Francesco Cavalli, a composer of whom we shall have farther occasion to speak hereafter. L' Armida, of which both the words and Music were the composition of Benedetto Ferrari. And L' Adone, set by the celebrated Claudio Monteverde, who more than thirty years before had set Orfeo and Arianna, and was one of the first inventors of recitative, and dramatic Music.

In 1640, the Arianna of Monteverde was revived in a third theatre, that was erected at Venice, called Il Teatro di S. Moisè (a). Gl' Amori di Apollo e di Dafne, by Cavalli; and Il Pastor Regio, of which Ferrari was poet, composer, and Entrepreneur.

Between the years 1641 and 1649, there were upwards of thirty different operas performed in the several theatres of Venice, of

(y) Le Glorie della Poes. et della Mus. p. 19.

(z) Ibid, p. 37.

(a) Between the year 1637 and 1727, there were fifteen different theatres erected at Venice, for the exhibition of musical dramas. Several of the first were, however, only temporary theatres, or rather booths, constructed on treffels (fabbricati tutti di Tavole); though afterwards built on a larger scale, with stone.

which

which the musical composers were Monteverde, Manelli, Cavalli, Sacrati, Ferrari, Fonte, Marazzoli, and Rovetta. Of Giasone, written by Giac. And. Cicognini, and set by Cavalli, one of the four operas performed in 1649, it is said that the grave recitative began first to be interrupted with that Anacreontic kind of stanza, which has since been called ARIA (b). The author of Storia Critica de' Teatri (c), asks, "whether the musical drama is improved or injured by this innovation?" and answers the question himself with judgment and good taste, by saying that it is greatly embellished and improved by a judicious and sober use of the discovery, and only injured by the abuse of it: as when a composer neglects the more interesting parts of a drama, to avail himself of the opportunity which frequent airs afford him, of letting the action languish, in order to express some common and frivolous sentiment with intemperate art and elegance; which is ever the case when the true and interesting point of passion is not found. Frequent airs are of infinitely more use and importance in an Italian opera performed in England, than Italy; for the public in general being ignorant of the language can receive but small amusement from the recitative or narrative part, compared with that which the airs afford them; where the richness of the harmony, ingenious complication and design of the several parts, and elegance of the principal melody, all conspire to captivate and charm without the assistance of poetry, fable, or intelligence of the words; as an air well sung, is of all languages, and must ever afford a delight much superior to that which the same air played on an instrument could produce. But it is somewhat too early for reflexions of this kind, yet; I shall therefore proceed to relate the progress which the musical drama made in Italy, with mere recitative, for the first fifty years; and afterwards for fifty more with little assistance from measured air, or melody.

IL PADRE MARC'ANTONIO CESTI, d'Arezzo, Minor Conventuale, e Cavalier dell' Imperatore, set an opera for Venice in 1649, (b) Trattato dell' Opera in Musica, Naples 1772, by the Cavalier Planelli.

(c) Il Dottor D. Pietro Napoli Signorelli, p. 275.

called Orontea, written by the same poet as Giasone; which was revived at Milan, with the same Music, in 1662; at Venice, 1666; at Bologna, 1669; and again at Venice, 1683; always colla Musica stessa, during thirty-four years!

It has been extremely difficult to find any of the Music of the early operas, that was not printed. Luckily, a scene of Cesti's celebrated opera of Orontea, composed in 1649, and afterwards so frequently revived, was found in the music-book of Salvator Rosa, in that painter's own hand-writing. And as the dramatic Music of this period is so extremely scarce, I shall, on the next plates, insert the scene entire, in order to exhibit to the musical reader the state of recitative, as well as air, at this early period; which has been supposed to be that of the first invention and introduction of an air at the termination of a scene of recitative.

Cesti is said to have been a scholar of Carissimi, which is hardly reconcilable with the date of this opera, as Carissimi did not begin to be known at Rome till after the year 1640. Adami says, that Cesti was admitted as a tenor singer in the Pope's Chapel, 1660; and that "the most celebrated of all his operas, of which five were composed for Venice, was La Dori, il lumi maggiore dello stil Teatrale." This opera first appeared at Venice, 1663, and was not only revived there in 1667, and 1671, but frequently performed with great applause in the other principal cities of Italy. Songs have, since these times, been so much composed to display the peculiar talents and abilities of singers, that operas can never be successfully revived but where the same performers, who sung in them originally, happen to survive, and to be engaged at the same theatre; which is not likely to happen at the distance of many years. Indeed, if, contrary to the chances against it, such a concurrence of circumstances should take place, twenty or thirty years generally make such havock with fine voices, fine taste in singing, and fine feelings in judging, that it is by no means certain that they would then please the same critics as much as formerly (d).

About

(d) I never yet have known a singer able to satisfy the expectations of old critics, in old songs. If the hearer is free from prejudice, he is a more severe judge, and more difficult to please, than in his youth; but possession of favour once taken, no singer,

Engl. 155

Engl. 155

About the year 1650, there were four theatres open at Venice for musical dramas or operas: the principal composers were Gasparo Sartorio, Cavalli, Francesco Luzzo, and Cesti; and in 1654, La Guerriera Spartana, the first opera of D. Pietro Andrea Ziani appeared, who, after composing fifteen operas for Venice, was appointed Maestro di Capella to the emperor, for whose theatre and chapel, at Vienna, he produced a great number of operas and oratorios.

After the specimens of dramatic Music already given from the works of Jacopo Peri, Giulio Caccini, and Monteverde, the inventors of recitative, and of Cesti, one of the first composers of opera airs, it seems unnecessary to exhibit any other examples of that style er, however superior his talents, can obtain a fair hearing. He is at once said, by different hearers, to sing the air too fast and too slow; to grace and change the passages too much, and too little. Pacchierotti, a much greater and more feeling singer than Monticelli, was never right, in the opinion of these judges, in singing Gluck's Rasserenen il mesto Ciglio. I remember perfectly well the manner in which Monticelli sung this song: it was sweet, simple, smooth, and unimpassioned. But though it was constantly encored, there were, as usual, two parties of very different opinions about the manner of his repeating it when encored; which by some was thought so much too plain and invariable, that Palma, a singing-master of great taste, but with as little voice as it was possibly to hear, in the smallest room, was greatly preferred in his performance of it, merely on account of his frequent changes and riffioramenti. It is with singing as with declamation, the original actor of a favourite part is always remembered to the disadvantage of his successor. Man differs from man so specifically in figure, feature, feeling, conception, and gesture, that no two can resemble each other, but by the power of mimicry, and humble imitation. Monticelli had a style of singing that was suitable to his voice and powers, and which justly gained him friends and admirers in songs originally made to display his talents; but had he ventured to sing those which Farinelli, Senesino, Carestini, or Caffarelli had sung here, just before his arrival, he would have been pronounced as much their inferior in taste, energy, and execution, as in voice.

Pacchierotti is a great and original performer; and will please real judges in whatever he sings, let who will have sung it before him. But to expect him, or any other singer, to perform an air now, exactly as Monticelli or any one else did forty years ago, is not allowing for the changes which the art or individuals have undergone since that time. Can it be expected that such a performer as Pacchierotti, now Monticelli is dead, should go to school to his few surviving admirers, in order to learn how to sing this trifling and monotonous rondo, in which the motivo, or single passage upon which it is built, is repeated so often, that nothing can prevent the hearer of taste and knowledge from fatigue and languor during the performance, but such new and ingenious embellishments as, in Italy, every singer of abilities would be expected to produce each night it was performed. The air is of that kind which the French call a Canevas, or outline for the singer to colour at his pleasure. When Manzoli was here, he sung in Exo almost during a whole season, but three songs: the first, Recagli quell' Acciaro, an Aria Parlante, which was to show action more than taste in singing; Caro mio bene Addio, an adagio or cantabile air, which he embellished every night to the utmost of his power; and Mi dona mi rende, a graziosa air, in which there were several pauses or places designedly left for the singer to fill up, ad libitum. Manzoli's fancy and execution were by no means equal to his voice; but he took all the time and liberties with the song he was able, without giving offence to the lovers of simplicity.

till

till some material change or improvement was brought about ; and I have been able to trace none till the introduction of airs, wholly measured, and distinct from recitative, by Cavalli, in his opera of Giasone, and Cesti in Orontea, already mentioned. The Music of Giasone, if it is any where preserved, is so difficult to find, that it has escaped all my researches ; however, that of the opera of Eriomena, written by Aurelio Aureli, and set, in 1655, by the same composer as Giasone, is still in being, and, luckily, in the hands of a friend who is liberal in communicating the musical curiosities contained in his valuable collection (e).

This opera, set by Cavalli, was the twenty-ninth he had produced for different theatres at Venice, and the sixty-eighth performed in that city, since the year 1637. In this drama we find not only frequent airs, but returns to the first part, which have been since implied by the words Da Capo.

It is amusing to see how contented, and even charmed, the public is at one period with what appears contemptible at another. For this drama, which was not only often heard with rapture at Vienna in 1655, the first year of its performance, and at Bologna 1668, thirteen years after, but revived again at Venice in a different theatre in 1670, is so deficient in poetical and musical merit, compared with those in present favour, that no perfection of performance could render it palatable.

Notwithstanding our Shakspeare and other dramatic writers have been called barbarians for introducing comic characters in their tragedies, the mixture of comic scenes in serious musical dramas prevailed in most of the early operas, and even oratorios (see S. AGATA), and continued to disgrace them till banished by the better taste and sounder judgment of Apostolo Zeno and Metastasio, who convinced the public that such buffoonery was unnecessary. Almost all the first operas that were performed in England at the beginning of this century were degraded by the admission of such characters as not only counteract and destroy all tragic pathos, but such as it is not easy to imagine likely to converse familiarly with the other great personages of these dramas. Addison condescended to imitate this vicious taste in his Rosamond; and so late as 1738 in the opera of Xerxes, set by Handel, a facetious servant is introduced. Even in such musical dramas as were without this mixture, in compliance with a vulgar taste, Intermezzi, consisting of farcical scenes wholly unconnected with the principal piece, were performed between the acts.

(e) Dr. Berer, the civilian.

The airs of Erismena are chiefly at the beginning of scenes, not at the end, as in the operas of the present times. The greatest part of these airs are in a slow minuet time, or rather in the faraband measure of $\frac{3}{2}$. They are psalmodic, monotonous, and dull; nor is the recitative so passionate and expressive as that of Luigi, Carissimi, and Cesti, of nearly the same period.

The measure, in what are called airs, in this opera, is as frequently changed as in those of Lulli, who formed his taste about this time in Italy and in France, from the operas of Italy, as a comparison of his works with those of Cavalli, Luigi, Cesti, and Graziani, will manifest. Lulli was twenty-three, in 1655, when Erismena was set. Composers were now feeling their way, and trying the feelings of the public, in the dramatic expression of words. In many successful attempts at new melodies they became legislators, as is the case with all early artists, who are imitated and pillaged by subsequent admirers.

The trying to express the sense of single words and phrases, instead of the general sentiment and spirit of a whole verse or stanza, is a vice of very early date. And Cavalli, in the twelfth scene of the first act of Erismena, has presented us with a very inelegant and uncouth division on the words rota à giri, to furnish the hearer with an idea of the revolution of a wheel.

Il viver di speranza è un cibo amaro, is, however, well expressed, and in a modulation which still appears new and masterly.

In the next scene there is an old Scots, or rather Provençale close, which has been revived not long since by the late Mr. C. Bach, and others.

We may perhaps judge a little of the taste of the times by the written cadences, of which the following is one :

The poet who wrote the opera of Erismena, Aurelio Aureli, was author of thirty-one musical dramas ; and Cavalli set for different theatres in Venice, between the year 1639 and 1666, thirty-five operas, besides what he produced for other cities of Italy (g). He was Maestro di Capella of St. Mark's Church, at Venice, and several of his operas were frequently revived long after his decease.

In 1656, Artemisia, written by Count Nicolo' Minati, was likewise set by Cavalli. The year following I find but one opera on record for Venice ; this was Le Fortune di Rodope, e di Damira, of Aureli, set by Pietro Andrea Ziani. In 1658, besides Medoro, set by Fran. Luzzo, and Teseo, by Ziani, Cavalli set Antioco, another drama by Minati ; and the year following still another, Elena, by the same poet. In 1660, there were three operas at the different theatres of Venice ; and the year following four more, which afford no incident worth recording ; except that the theatre of S. Salvatore, which had been built of wood, was destroyed by fire in 1661, and rebuilt of stone ; not, says the author of the Catalogue of Musical Dramas at Venice (h), for the reception of strollers and buffoons, as heretofore, but for the descendants of Orpheus.

In 1662, there were two operas composed by Ziani, and one by Castrovillari ; but of these I have never been able to find the Music. However, in the Imperial Library at Vienna, I discovered an opera, composed the same year, by Bontempi, author of the Storia Musica. This drama, he tells us (i), was written as well as set by himself,

(g) Quadrio makes the whole number of his operas amount to more than forty.

(h) Glorie della Poesia e della Musica, p. 63.

(i) In his History, p. 170.

himself, for the nuptials of the Margrave of Brandenburg, Christian Ernest, with the Princess Sophia of Saxony. As I transcribed several scenes from this early opera, on the following plates I shall present my readers with a fragment of recitative and a short air, as a specimen of dramatic Music at this period.

Between the year 1662 and 1680, there were near one hundred different operas performed at the several theatres of Venice, of which the principal composers were the two Ziani's, father and son, Castrovillari, Cesti, Rovettino, Mollinari, Mattioli, Cavalli, Legrenzi, Pallavicino, Boretti, Sartorio, Grossi, Parterio, Pagliardi, Gaudio, Zanettini, Viviani, Franceschini, Tomasi, Sajon, Pistocchi, and Freschi.

During this period it seldom happens, indeed, that the names of the poets, composers, or singers are recorded in printed copies of these dramas; though that of the machinist is never omitted; and much greater care seems to have been taken to amuse the eye than the ear or intellect of those who attended these spectacles.

In 1675, we are told, in the Theatrical Annals of Venice, that a musical drama called La Divisione del Mondo, written by Giulio Cesare Corradi, and set by Legrenzi, excited universal admiration, by the stupendous machinery and decorations with which it was exhibited (k). And in 1680, the opera of Berenice, set by Domenico Freschi, was performed at Padua in a manner so splendid, that some of the decorations, recorded in the printed copy of the piece, seem worthy of notice in the history of the musical drama; a species of exhibition, which as it originally consisted of poetry, Music, dancing, machinery, and decorations, it is the business of the historian to watch and point out the encroachments which any one of these constituent parts, at different periods, has made upon the rest. In the beginning it was certainly the intention of opera legislators to favour poetry, and to make her mistress of the feast; and it was a long while before Music absolutely took the lead. Dancing stepped into importance only during the present century;

(k) Questo Drama fu ammirabile per la vastissima Idea delle Machine, ed Apparenze che l'anno accompagnato in scena, essendo stato quest'anno Direttore del Teatro il Marchese Guido Rangoni.

but

f. Lauschniff II

= II, 19

Scena nell' Opera d' ORONTEA, rappresentata in Venezia 1649.
Del Marcantonio Cesti. 2da. Cicognini 67

9. 8. 156

69
Act I Scene XIII Fragments from the Opera of Erismena, Set by CAVALLI 1655.

Air in which the 7th & 6th are used in a modern manner.

Aria. Atto 2^{do} sc. 7^{ma}

Ritornello

Act II^d. Sc. XI. The Ritornel of an Air beginning, Moriro despietata, is ingenious.

Scena nell'Opera di Paride del Gio: Andr: Bontempi 1662 Discordia.

71

Il Ciel, la Terra, e il ma-re parche il po-ter de l'opre mie paventi, e pur non sempre appare, che a fufci-ta-re i ma-li, habbia i penfie-ri in-ten-ti quante volte fi ve-de forger dagl'odij an-cor, ben che morta-li vero amor, vera Fe-de; e accio prodotta fi-a, per al-te-ra-ta vi-a le gene-ra-ti-on, fon pu-re ogn'ora dif-cor-di e Cie-li egl'Elemen-ti mena Ma che tardo infe-li-ce, avendicar tutt'gl'oltraggi miei. la Discordia fon' io tutto mi-e li-ce de per vefsi Himenei gia cor-re il gior-no &c'

Aria.

Il de - fio d'un co - re a man - te nas - ce fem - pre in un ba - le - no, ma in un pun - to an - cor vien me - no se l'ar - dor non è cof - tan - te, ma in un pun - to an - cor vien me - no se l'ar - dor non

Ritornello
è cof - tan - te non e cof - tante

par che pianga &c

The same AIR terminated by the same Ritornel is repeated to different words

but very early in the last, machinery and decoration were so important that little thought or expence was bestowed on poetry, Music, or dancing, provided some means could be devised of exciting astonishment in the spectators, by splendid scenes and ingenious mechanical contrivances.

In the opera of Berenice, just mentioned, there were choruses of one hundred virgins, one hundred soldiers, one hundred horsemen in iron armour, forty cornets of horse, six trumpeters on horseback, six drummers, six ensigns, six sacbuts, six great flutes, six minstrels playing on Turkish instruments, six others on octave flutes, six pages, three serjeants, six cymbalists, twelve huntsmen, twelve grooms, six coachmen for the triumph, six others for the procession, two lions led by two Turks, two elephants by two others, Berenice's triumphal car drawn by four horses, six other cars with prisoners and spoils drawn by twelve horses, six coaches for the procession. Among the scenes and representations in the first act, was a vast plain, with two triumphal arches; another, with pavilions and tents; a square prepared for the entrance of the triumph; and a forest for the chace. Act II. the royal apartments of Berenice's temple of vengeance; a spacious court, with a view of the prison; and a covered way for the coaches to move in procession. Act III. the royal dressing room, completely furnished; stables with one hundred live horses; portico adorned with tapestry; a delicious palace in perspective. And besides all these attendants and decorations, at the end of the first act, there were representations of every species of chace: as of the wild boar, the stag, deer, and bears; and at the end of the third act, an enormous globe descends from the sky, which opening divides itself into other globes that are suspended in the air, upon one of which is the figure of Time, on a second that of Fame, on others, Honour, Nobility, Virtue, and Glory.

Had the salaries of singers been at this time equal to the present, the support of such expensive and puerile toys would have inclined the managers to enquire not only after the best, but the cheapest vocal performers they could find, as splendid ballets oblige them to do now; and it is certain that, during the last century, the distinct and characteristic characteristic charm of an opera was not the Music, but machinery. The French established musical dramas in their court and capital during the rage for Mythological representations, to which they have constantly adhered ever since; and when they are obliged to allow the musical composition and singing to be inferior to that of Italy, they comfort themselves and humble their adversaries by observing, that their opera is, at least, a fine thing to see: c'est au moins un beau spectacle, qu'un opera en France.

During the infancy of the opera, says Rousseau (1), its inventors trying to elude the most natural effects arising from the union of poetry and Music by their imitations of human life, transported the scene into heaven and hell; and being unable to express the language and passions of men, chose rather to make divinities and demons sing than heroes and shepherds. Hence magic and every thing marvellous became the most essential parts of the Lyric theatre; and content with superiority in this particular, they never enquired into its propriety. To support such fantastic illusions, it was necessary to exhaust all that human invention could furnish most seducing among a people whose taste for pleasure and the fine arts was indulged by every possible degree of refinement. Theatres were erected throughout Italy which equalled in magnitude the palaces of kings, and in elegance the monuments of antiquity with which that country abounded. It was there, in order to ornament these theatres, that the art of perspective and decoration was invented. Artists of all kinds strained every nerve to display their talents. Machines the most ingenious, flights the most daring, with tempests, thunder, lightning, and all the delusions of the magic wand, were practised to fascinate the eye, while innumerable voices and instruments astonished the ear.

But with so many means of surprize, the action always remained cold, and the situations uninteresting; as there was no plot or intrigue but what was easily solved by the assistance of some divinity, the spectator, who knew the poet's power of extricating his heroes and heroines from all kinds of difficulty and danger, reposed such entire confidence in him as to remain tranquil during the most perilous situations. Hence, though the apparatus was great, the effect was small, as the imitations were always clumsy and imperfect; for actions out of nature interest us but little, and the senses are never much affected by illusions in which the heart has nothing to do; so that, upon the whole, it is hardly possible to fatigue an assembly at a greater expence.

(1) Diſt. de Muſ. Art. Opera.

This spectacle, imperfect as it was, remained long the admiration of the public, who knew no better. They felicitated themselves on the discovery of so admirable a species of representation, in which a new principle was added to those of Aristotle; for wonder is here added to terror and pity. They did not see that this apparent fertility was in reality but a sign of indigence, like the flowers blended with the corn, which render the fields so gay before harvest. It was for want of a power to move and affect, that they wished to surprise; and this pretended admiration was in fact so childish, that they ought to have blushed at it. A false air of magnificence, Fairyism, and enchantment, imposed on the public, and inclined them to speak with enthusiasm and respect of a theatre which was a disgrace to reason and good taste.

Though the authors of the first operas had hardly any other idea than to dazzle the eyes and stun the ears, it was hardly possible for the musician not to endeavour, sometimes, to express the sentiments interspersed through the poem. The songs of nymphs, the hymns of priests, the din of war, and infernal screams, did not so entirely occupy these coarse dramas, but that he sometimes discovered those interesting moments of situation when the audience was disposed to give way to feeling. And it was soon found, that independent of musical declamation or recitative, a peculiar movement, harmony, or melody, on some occasions, was necessary; and that Music, though it had hitherto only affected the sense, was capable of reaching the heart. Melody, which at first was only separated from poetry through necessity, availing itself of its independence, aimed at beauties that were purely musical; harmony, discovered or perfected, furnished new resources of pathos and expression; and measure, freed from the slavery of syllables, and restraint of poetical rhythm, acquired a species of accent and cadence peculiar to itself.

Music thus becoming a third art of imitation, had soon a language, expression, and images, of its own, wholly independent of poetry. Harmony even began to speak in the symphonies, without the assistance of words, and frequently sentiments were produced by the orchestra equally forcible with those of the vocal performers. Thus relinquishing by degrees the wonders of Fairy tales, the childishness of machinery, and the fantastical representation of things that humanity had never seen, pictures, more interesting and true, were sought in the imitations of nature.

Thus far the opera had been established with a view to gratify the sight, more than the ear; for what better theatrical use was it possible to make of a species of Music that could paint nothing, than to employ it at the representation of things which never existed, and of which we had it not in our power to compare the image with the object? It is impossible to know whether we are affected by the painting of the wonderful, as much as we should be if it were realised; whereas every man may judge for himself whether an artist has been able to make the passions speak their own language, and if the objects of nature are well imitated.

In 1680, seven theatres for the performance of operas were open at Venice, in which nine different dramas were sung. The composers, besides Legrenzi and Pallavicini, were Marc' Antonio Ziani, Pagliardi, Varischino, Agostino, Sajon, and Vitali; the last five principianti (m).

About this time Music had received great improvement in Italy, by the joint labours of Carissimi, Luigi, Cesti, and Stradella, whose productions were in favour all over Europe. In 1683, Marzio Coriolano, the first opera of Giac. Ant. Pertì, a celebrated contrapuntist of Bologna, was performed; besides eleven others, in the different theatres of Venice. From this time to the end of the century, seven or eight new operas were produced at Venice every year. During which period the following composers began to flourish: in 1684 Giuf. Felice Tosi, father of the writer of a treatise on Florid Song, and of extraordinary workmanship: Figure di legno di straordinario artificioso lavoro. Catal. de Drami in Musica.

(m) Damira Placata, an opera set by Marc' Antonio Ziani, was represented this year with figures of wood, as big as the life,

who came to England during the reign of King William, translated by Galliard; 1685, Domenico Gabrieli; 1686, Carlo Fran. Polarolo, author of fifty operas for the several theatres of Venice; 1687, Mich. Ang. Gasparini di Lucca; 1690, Ant. Caldara, afterwards Maestro di Capella at the imperial court of Vienna, and the first who set most of the operas of Metastasio; 1693, Ant. Lotti, a celebrated Venetian contrapuntist and composer for the church, as well as the stage; 1694, Tomaso Albinoni, a composer well known in England about forty or fifty years ago, by some light and easy concertos for violins, but better known at Venice by thirty-three dramas which he set to Music; 1697, Attilio Ariosti, who several years after was an opera-composer in England; and, in 1698, Marc' Ant. Bononcini, brother to Giov. Bononcini the celebrated but unsuccessful rival of Handel, set the opera of Camilla Regina de' Volsci, for Venice.

As more dramas were written and set to Music for this city, from the year 1637 to 1730, than in any other capital of Italy, so the Venetians had more poets and musicians of their own, during that period, than elsewhere; as the following list of their principal authors and composers will shew.

Lyric Poets.	No. of Op.	Composers.	No. of Op.
Aurelio Aurelij	31	Antonio Caldara (n)	5	Fl. from 1677 to 1735
Apostolo Zeno	20	Ant. Lotti	15	1698 1717
Jointly with Pariati	12	— Polarolo	10	1700 1729
Adriano Morfelli	16	— Sartorio	13	1661 1679
Agostin Conte Piovone	8	D. Ant. Vivaldi	14	1714 1728
Andrea Minelli	3	Carlo Grossi, Cav.	3	1669 1676
Antonio Marchi	8	— Pallavicino	21	1666 1687
Antonio Marchese Luchini	9	— Fran. Polarolo	50	1686 1722
Andrea Rossini	3	Fran. Gasparini (o)	25
Apollonio Apollonj	3	Claudio Monteverde	6	1609 1642
Benedetto Pasqualigo	6	Domenico Freschi	10	1677 1685
Cristoforo Jvanovich	4	— Gabriele	7	1685 1688
Fran. Passerini, Veronese	9	Tomaso Albinoni (p)	33	1694 1730
Fran. Salvani, Abate	37	Francesco Cavalli	35	1639 1666
Giacinto And. Cicognini	3	— Luzzo	4	1651 1655

(n) He set, besides these operas for Venice, almost all Apostolo Zeno's operas and oratorios, and many of Metastasio's for Vienna; La Passione, 1730, and Gesù presentato

al Tempio, 1735

(o) A scholar of Legrenzi.

(p) He flourished to the year 1741, and set near fifty operas, chiefly for Venice.

K 2

Giac.

Giac. Fran. Buffani	7	D. Teofilo Orgiani	4	Fl. from 1686 to 1703
Giov. Faustini	14	D. Fran. Rossi	1	1726
Giov. Fran. Bufinello	5	D. Giov. Legrenzi	15	1664	1684
Giov. Palazzi	4	Giov. Porta	12	1716	1729
G. C. Frigimelica Roberti	11	D. Battista Rovettino	3	1659	1664
Giulio Strozzi	5	Gio. Domenico Partenio	3	1669	1682
Girolamo Frisari	3	Salvator Apollonj, a bar-
Matteo Giannini	4	ber, guitar-player, and
Marc' Antonio Gasparini	3	Barcarol composer, set three operas, from		1727	1739
Matteo Noris	40	Giov. Maria Ruggieri	11	1696	1712
Nicolò Conte Minato, Bergamoasco	14	Girol. Polani	10	1704	1717
Novello Bonis	3	Giuf. Benevento	11	1690	1727
D. Rinaldo Cialli	6	Marc'Ant. Ziani	24	1679	1700
		Pietro And. Ziani	15	1654	1683

These make but a small part of the whole number of operas which, in less than a century, amounted to 658; the chief part by poets and composers who were natives of Venice and the Venetian state. We shall have occasion to return perhaps to this delightful and singular city, so abundant in musicians and musical productions, in order to speak more diffusely of the operas performed there during the present century; when not only the poetry and musical composition were greatly superior to those of preceding times, but the performers, whose wonderful and enchanting powers well merit discriminate praise and celebration in a history of the musical art.

Origin and Progress of the musical Drama or Opera in Naples.

Though the comedies, tragedies, and mysteries, or rappresentazioni sacre, without Music, which appear to have been performed at Naples during the last century, are innumerable; yet the Drammaturgia of Leo Allatius furnishes few instances of musical dramas that were performed in that city, till the beginning of the present century (q). And before the time of the elder Scarlatti, it seems as if Naples had been less fertile in great contrapuntists, and less diligent in the cultivation of dramatic Music, than any other state

(q) Leo Allatius, though no musician, has a double right to a niche in a history of Music, as he was not only author of this useful catalogue to the year 1667, when he died, but has written diffusely on the divine offices of the Greek church.

in Italy; though, since that period, all the rest of Europe has been furnished with composers and performers of the first class, from that city. But this seeming sterility may perhaps have been occasioned by the want of some such information as the Indice de Drammi of Venice, and Serie Cronologica de Drammi of Bologna, have furnished to the compiler of the general Drammaturgia of LIONE ALLACCI, augmented and continued to the year 1755; in which, after a regular perusal and examination, the first musical drama performed at Naples that I have been able to find, is entitled Amor non a Legge, composed by different masters in 1646, none of whose names are recorded. In 1655, was performed Il Ratto di Elena, set by FRANCESCO CIRILLI, of whose composition several dramas were exhibited about this time.

About 1686, the abate FRANCESCO ROSSI, of Apulia, set three operas for Venice, which, at that time, were much admired; and in 1690, a drama performed at Palermo, on the nuptials of Charles II. King of Spain, entitled Anarchia dell' Imperio, had only the prologue set to Music, by MICH. DI VIO, the piece chiefly being declaimed. In 1692, an opera entitled Gelidaura, set by FRANCESCO LUCINDA, a Sicilian, and master of the Chapel Royal of Sicily, was performed at Venice; and ANTONIO NOVI, a Neapolitan, between the year 1703 and 1716, set six of his own dramas to Music for different parts of Italy. In 1707, ALESSANDRO SCARLATTI set two operas, Mitridate and Il Trionfo della Liberta, for Venice.

GIUSEPPE VIGNOLA composed Deborah Profetessa Guerriere, in 1698, for Naples, which was much applauded at the time. And between that period and 1709, his name frequently occurs in the annals of the musical drama.

Several of the principal singers in the first operas of Italy have been occasionally mentioned already; I shall, however, finish this chapter with some further particulars concerning the most eminent vocal performers, in soprano, that were employed in the early musical dramas.

Doni and Adami speak of the Cavalier LORETO VITTORI, as excellent nel preferire, or in pronouncing the words; and of CAMPAGNOLA, PAGNOLA, as admirable in tutto. The following evirati are likewise celebrated by Doni and Della Valle. Guidobaldo, Gregorio, Angeluccio, and Marc' Antonio Pasquilino, who, according to Quadrio, sung on the stage, in 1634. Gagliani, in the preface to his Dafne, celebrates the talents of Ant. Brandi, who, with an exquisite counter-tenor voice, sung the part of the Nunzio. But the most eminent singers of the last century were CORTONA, BALARINI, PISTOCCHI, BALDASSARE FERRI, celebrated by Bontempi as the most extraordinary singer who had ever appeared; and Francesco Grossi, detto SIFACE, from his excellent performance of the part of Syphax in the opera of Mitridate. This singer, who was admitted into the Pope's chapel, 1675, was killed in a fray with his postillion, in returning from Ferrara to Modena.

The following were the most celebrated female singers on the opera-stage of the same period: LA CATERINA MARTINELLI, who performed the part of Dafne in Gagliano's opera at Mantua, 1608, and who appears to have been frequently encored: tutti il Teatro richedesi ancora l' esquisitezza del canto, &c. She died the same year, at the age of eighteen, to the great regret of the Duke of Mantua, and of all Italy. And this young person, who would have been excommunicated in France, had a splendid monument erected to her memory in the church of the Carmelites, by the duke, her patron, on which it is said: Nomen mundo, Deo vivat anima. LA VITTORIA ARCHILEI, celebrated by the poet Guarini, was the original performer of the part of Euridice, in Jacopo Peri's opera. She likewise sung in La Disperazione di Fileno, in which, recitando, she is said by the composer, Cavaliere, to have drawn tears from every hearer. FRANCESCA CACCINI, daughter of Giulio Caccini, one of the first opera composers, according to Della Valle, was not only an excellent singer, but composer of Music, and of Latin and Italian verses. Quadrio has given an indiscriminate list of near fifty female singers who performed on the opera stage during the last century.

CHAPTER II.

Rise and Progress of the sacred musical Drama, or ORATORIO.

THE first rappresentatione, or exhibition truly dramatic, that was performed in Italy, according to Apostolo Zeno, was a spiritual comedy, at Padua, 1243, 1244 (s). Another representation of the Mysteries of the Passion of Christ, &c. according to Muratori, was performed at Friuli, 1298 (t). In 1264, was instituted at Rome the Compagnia del Gonfalone, the statutes of which were printed in that city 1554, and of which the principal employment was to act or represent the sufferings of our Lord, in Passion-week, an institution which was long continued there (u).

According to Villani, Vasari, Cionacci, and Crescimbeni, la rappresentazione sacra teatrale had its beginning in Tuscany (x).

Le Chant Royal was invented in France about 1380; it consisted of verses to the Virgins and Saints, sung in chorus by troops or companies of pilgrims returning from the holy sepulchre (y).

(s) Bibl. Ital. p. 487.

(t) Script. Rer. Ital. Vol. XXIV. p. 1205.

(u) See Riccoboni's Reflex. hist. & crit. sur les differens Theatres d'Europe; & Trattato dell'Opera in Musica del Cavalier Plannelli, § i. cap. 1.

(x) See Signorelli's Storia crit. de' Teatri, p. 189. Tiraboschi, Storia della Letterat. Ital. Tom. V. l. iii. cap. 3. claims the origin and invention of every species of drama for the Italians. However, the ingenious and agreeable author of the Biog. Dramatica, or Companion to the Playhouse, (Introd. p. 9.) observes, that "those who imagine the English to have been later in the cultivation of the drama than their neighbours, will, perhaps, wonder to hear of theatrical entertainments almost as early as the Conquest; and yet nothing is more certain, if we may believe an honest monk, one William Stephanides, or Fitz Stephen, in his Descriptio Nobilissimæ Civitatis Londinæ, who writes thus: "London, instead of common interludes belonging to the theatre, has plays of a more holy subject: representations of those miracles which the confessors wrought, or of the sufferings, wherein the glorious constancy of the martyrs appeared. This author was a monk of Canterbury, who wrote in the reign of Henry II. and died in that of Richard I. 1191; and as he does not mention these representations as novelties to the people, for he is describing all the common diversions in use at that time, we can hardly fix them lower than the Conquest; and this, we believe, is an earlier date than any other nation of Europe can produce, for their theatrical representations."

(y) Menestrier, des Représentations en Mus.

There were mysteries represented in Germany 1322. And in the same century, 1378, the ecclesiastics and scholars of St. Paul's school exhibited similar interludes in England.

But though every nation in Europe seems, in the first attempts at dramatic exhibitions, to have had recourse to religious subjects, and an ORATORIO, or sacred drama, is but a mystery or morality in Music, yet those that were written before the seventeenth century seem never to have been entirely sung; but chiefly declaimed, with incidental airs and choruses (z).

Gio. Battista Doni (a), speaking of oratorios, says that by a spiritual representation he does not mean that gross, vulgar, and legendary kind of drama used by the nuns and monks in convents, which deserve not the name of poetry; but such elegant and well-constructed poetical fables as that of St. Alexis, by the ingenious Giulio Rospigliosi, many times represented, and always received with great applause (b).

This description seems to comprehend the poetical virtues and vices of all ancient and modern religious dramas. The Abbé Arnaud, in his Essai sur le Theatre Anglois (c), says that the fathers of the church in the first ages of Christianity, indulging the passion of the people for public spectacles, opposed religious dramas, built on the sacred writings, to the profane, which had been long used by the Pagans.

(z) The late Rev. and learned Mr. Crofts and the Honourable Topham Beauclerc, in their curious libraries had collected a great number of these religious poems or mysteries, in Italian, of which I procured many of the most ancient, at the sale of their books, in order to trace the origin of the sacred musical drama. Some of them, by the gross manner in which the subjects are treated, the coarseness of the dialogue, and ridiculous situation into which the most sacred persons and things are thrown, seem, though printed soon after the invention of the press, to be much more ancient than that discovery.

(a) Trattato della Musica Scenica, c. vi.

p. 15. Op. omn. Tom. II. S. Giovanni e Paolo, one of the Collect, was written by Lorenzo il Magnifico; Santa Domitilla, and Santa Guglielma, by Antonia, wife of the poet Pulci, in the fifteenth century.

(b) This oratorio, which is omitted in the Drammaturgia, though printed in score, in folio, 1634, was set to Music by Stefano Landi, of the Papal Chapel, and performed at the Barberini Palace in Rome, on a stage, and in action, with dances, machinery, and every kind of dramatic decoration, of which a splendid account is given in a preface and letter prefixed to the work.

(c) Varietees Litt. Tom. I. p. 29.

At the revival of theatrical amusements, when the reformers began to disseminate their doctrines throughout Europe, religious plays were made the vehicles of opinion, both by the Catholics and Protestants; and there are Latin dramas of this kind, as well as others in modern languages extant, which might with propriety be called oratorios. At the beginning of the Reformation in England, it was so common for the defenders of the old and new doctrines to avail themselves of plays composed on subjects of scripture, in which they mutually censured and anathematized each other, that an act of parliament passed in the twenty-fourth year of Henry VIII. to prohibit the acting or singing any thing in these interludes contrary to the established religion. It appears, however, in Collyer's History of the Reformation, that after this period, the mysteries of the Roman Catholic religion were ridiculed by the Protestants, on a stage, in Churches (d).

The Conversion of St. Paul, performed at Rome, 1440, as described by Sulpicius, has been, erroneously, called the first opera, or musical drama (e). Abram et Isaac suo Figliuolo, a sacred drama (azione sacra) "shewing how Abraham was commanded by God to sacrifice his son Isaac on the mountain," was performed in the church of St. Mary Magdalen in Florence, 1449. Another on the same subject called Abraham and Sarah, "containing the good life of their son Isaac, and the bad conduct of Ishmael, the son of his hand-maid, and how they were turned out of the house," was printed in 1556. Abel e Caino and Sampson, 1554; The Prodigal Son, 1565; and La Commedia Spirituale dell' Anima, "The Spiritual Comedy of the Soul," printed at Siena, but without date; in which there are

(d) It is related by Cardan, in his eulogy of our young King, Edward VI. that he had written a most elegant comedy, called The Whore of Babylon. The number of comedies, and tragi-comedies, written about this time, is incredible; they are, however, said to have been even more extravagant and gross, than numerous. One is entitled, Jesus the true Messiah, a comedy; another, The new German Ass of Balaam; the Calvinistical Postilion; the Christian Cavalier of Eislebn, a dilectable, spiritual comedy, including the history of Luther and his two greatest enemies, the pope and Calvin. A pleasant comedy of the true old Catholic and Apostolic church, &c.

Storia Crit. de' Teatri, p. 248.

(e) Hist. de la Mus. Tom. I. p. 241. and Menestrier, sur les Repres. en Mus.

near thirty personifications, besides St. Paul, St. John Chrysostom, two little boys who repeat a kind of prelude, and the announcing angel who always speaks the prologue in these old mysteries. He is called l'angelo che nunzia, and his figure is almost always given in a wooden cut on the title-page of printed copies. Here, among the interlocutors, we have God the Father, Michael the archangel, a Chorus of Angels, the human Soul with her guardian Angel, Memory, Intellect, Free-will, Faith, Hope, Charity, Reason, Prudence, Temperance, Fortitude, Justice, Mercy, Poverty, Patience, and Humility; with Hatred, Infidelity, Despair, Sensuality, a Chorus of Dæmons, and the Devil.

None of these mysteries are totally without Music, as there are choruses and laudi, or hymns, that are sung in them all, and sometimes there was playing on instruments between the acts. In a play written by Damiano and printed at Siena, 1519, according to Crescimbeni (f), at the beginning of every act there was an octave stanza, which was sung to the sound of the lyra viol, by a personage called Orpheus, who was solely retained for that purpose; at other times a madrigal was sung between the acts, after the manner of a chorus.

It was, however, by small degrees that entire musical mysteries had admission into the church, or were improved into ORATORIOS. All the Italian writers on the subject agree, that these sacred musical dramas had their beginning in the time of San Filippo Neri, who was born 1515, and founded the congregation of the Priests of the Oratory at Rome, in 1540 (g). During the service, and after ser-

(f) Tom. I. p. 107.

(g) This saint, who died 1595, is numbered among Italian improvvisatori, by Quadrio, Tom. I. p. 163. He was originally intended for a merchant, but was drawn from commercial pursuits by Vocation. Oratorio, Ital. Oratorium, Lat. implies a small chapel, or particular part of a house or church, where there is an altar. The space between the arches of Romish churches, are called Oratorii, Ital. Oratoires, Fr. Anglicè chapels. The Congregation of the Oratory, established at Rome, and in some other cities of Italy by S. Phil. Neri, about 1558, originated from the conferences which this pious ecclesiastic held in his own chamber at Rome.

The great number of persons who attended these meetings obliged St. Phil. to request the administrators of the church of San Girolamo della Carità to grant permission to hold these assemblies there, which was granted. In 1574, they were transferred to the church of the Florentines; and in 1583 to Santa Maria della Vallicella. By degrees this establishment spread itself all over Italy, where it has still many houses. The members are bound by no vow.

Dict. des Cultes Relig.

It appears that these fathers, in whatever city of Italy they had an establishment, entertained their congregations with good Music.

mon,

mon, it was usual for this faint, among other pious exercises in order to draw youth to church and keep them from secular amusements, to have hymns, psalms, and other spiritual laudi, or songs, sung either in chorus or by a single favourite voice, divided into two parts, the one performed before the sermon, and the other after it.

But though this devout practice was begun in so simple a manner, with only spiritual cantatas, or songs, on moral subjects; in order to render the service still more attractive, some sacred story or event from scripture was written in verse, and set by the best poets or musicians of the times. These being composed in dialogue, and rendered interesting to the congregation, such curiosity was excited by the performance of the first part, that there was no danger during the sermon that any of the hearers would retire, before they had heard the second.

The subjects of these pieces were sometimes the good Samaritan; sometimes Job and his friends; the prodigal son; Tobit with the angel, his father and his wife, &c. all these, by the excellence of the composition, the band of instruments, and the performance, brought this oratory into such repute, that the congregations became daily more and more numerous (b). And hence this species of sacred musical drama, wherever performed, in process of time, obtained the general appellation of ORATORIO (i).

(b) In the church of San Girolamo della Carita at Rome, oratorios are still constantly performed on Sundays and festivals from All Saints Day till Palm Sunday; as well as in the church of La Vallicella, or la Chiesa Nuova, where they are likewise performed from the first of November till Easter; Oratorj in Musica, e sermoni, every evening on all festivals. See Roma moderna by Venuti, 1766, p. 207. These are the two churches in which such spiritual spectacles had their beginning; but the practice has since been so much extended to the other churches of Rome, that there is not a day in the year on which one or more of these performances may not be heard. And as lists of Oratorios and other Funzioni to be performed in the several churches in the course of the year are published, like our lists of Lent preachers, great emulation is excited in the directors and performers, as well as curiosity in the public.

(i) The first collection of the words of hymns and psalms, sung in the chapel of San Filippo Neri, was published at Rome 1585, under the title of Laudi spirituali stampate ad istanza de' R. R. P. P. della Congregatione dell' ORATORIO. The second in 1603: Laudi Spirituali di diversi, solite cantarsi dopo Sermoni da' PP. della Cong. dell' Oratorio; among these were Dialogues, in a dramatic form. Crescimbeni, Introd. all' Istoria della Volg. Poesia. Vol. I. lib. iv. p. 256.

To what kind of melody the solo parts of these early dramas were sung, previous to the invention of recitative, I know not; but the rest was doubtless in chorus like the ancient motet, or full anthem. Though I am in possession of the words of several sacred dramas which seem to have been entirely sung: such as L'Annunziazione della beata Virgine, 1556, and Il Figliuolo Prodigo, 1565, both printed at Florence, and severally called Dramma Musicale, yet none of the Music of any sacred drama has been preserved in the archives of the churches where they were first performed, which have been carefully searched, previous to the Rappresentazione di Anima, et di Corpo dal Sig. Emilia del Cavaliere, per RECITAR CANTANDO, which was performed and printed at Rome, in the year 1600; and which is generally thought to have been not only the first sacred drama that was entirely sung, but the first in which there was an attempt at recitative.

Having been so fortunate as to find a printed copy of this oratorio in one of the churches at Rome, and to obtain leave to have it transcribed, I shall be somewhat minute in my account of it, as it is become so scarce, that many Italian writers, as well as others, trusting to tradition or conjecture, have spoken of it without seeming to have seen either the poetry or the Music.

The patriotic zeal of every inhabitant of a great city or state for the honour of the place of his birth or residence, has operated powerfully on Giovanbattista Doni, who, in giving a history of the Italian musical drama, assigns all the merit of the invention of recitative, or narrative melody, to Jacopo Peri and Giulio Caccino, inhabitants of Florence, his own native place; and says (k), that “the Music of the oratorio of l'Anima et di Corpo was very different from that which was afterwards used on the stage, which “was recitative: Emilio’s consisting of ariets, with many contrivances and repetitions of echoes and such things as have nothing “to do with the drama,” which is so far from true, that I find in it almost every form and phrase of musical recitation which occurs in (k) Tem. II. Append. p. 13.

J. Peri, G. Caccini, and Claudio Monteverdi, the three other claimants for the invention.

Indeed, it is confessed by Peri himself, in the preface to his Euridice, that Emilio del Cavaliere “introduced the same kind of “Music on the stage before any one else that he had ever heard “of (1):” and instances his pastorals called il Satira, and la Desperatione di Fileno, performed at Florence in 1590, and il Gioco della Cieca, in 1595. But without mounting to these early attempts, Cavaliere seems better entitled to the invention of narrative Music than the Florentine composers by the very date of the two dramas, which form an æra in the history of the opera or oratorio: l'Anima e Corpo, the first sacred drama or oratorio, in which recitative was used, having been performed in the oratory of the church of Santa Maria della Vallicella at Rome, in February 1600; and Euridice, the first secular drama, or opera, at Florence, in December of the same year.

And this seems to settle the long disputed point of priority in the invention of recitative, which, since the year 1600, has been regarded as essential and characteristic in the musical drama, sacred and secular; as an oratorio, in which the dialogue was spoken, and the songs and choruses merely incidental, would only be a mystery, morality, or sacred tragedy; and an opera, declaimed, with occasional songs, a masque, or play with singing in it.

That this first oratorio, set by Emilio del Cavaliere, Romano, was represented in action, on a stage (in Palco) in the church of La Vallicella, with scenes, decorations, and acting chorus, à l'antique, and analogous dances, appears from the editor's dedication to Cardinal Aldobrandini, and the composer's instructions for the performance, from which I shall present the reader with extracts.

Emilio del Cavaliere, as well as the rest of the early composers of dramatic Music, imagined that he had recovered, in his recitative, that style of Music which the ancient Greeks and Romans used in their theatres. And a singer of such Music is required by Cavaliere, to have a fine voice, perfectly in tune, and free from all defects in the delivery of it; with a pathetic expression, the power of swelling and diminishing the tones, and an equal respect for the composer and poet, in singing plain, and being particularly attentive to the articulation and expression of the words.

(1) Dal Signor Cavaliere, primo che da ogn' altro che io sappia, con maravigliosa inventione ci fusse fatta udire la nostra Musica su le scene.

It is recommended to place the instruments of accompaniment behind the scenes, which in this first oratorio were the following:

Una lira doppia A double lyre, perhaps a viol da

Un clavicembalo gamba A harpsichord

Un chitarone A large or double guitar

Dui flauti, o vero due tibiae all'antica Two common flutes

No violin is mentioned here; but what excites the most surprize, at present, in these instructions for the performance of an oratorio on the stage in a church, are the directions for the dances. However, there are examples of religious dances in the sacred writings, as well as in the history of almost every ancient people, in which their religious ceremonies are mentioned. Most of these dances are performed to the Music of choruses, which are singing in the manner of those in the old French operas.

On many occasions it is recommended for the actors to have instruments in their hands, as the playing, or appearing to play on them, would help illusion more than a visible orchestra.

Besides these general rules for such as might wish to write or bring on the stage other poems of the same kind, Cavaliere gives the following instructions for the representation of this particular musical drama.

1. The words should be printed, with the verses correctly arranged, the scenes numbered, and characters of the interlocutors specified.

2. Instead of the overture, or symphony, to modern musical dramas, a madrigal is recommended as a full piece, with all the voice-parts doubled, and a great number of instruments.

3. When the curtain rises, two youths, who recite the prologue, appear on the stage, and when they have done, Time, one of the characters in this morality, comes on, and has the note with which he is to begin given him by the instrumental performers behind the scenes.

4. The chorus is to have a place allotted them on the stage, part sitting and part standing, in sight of the principal characters. And when they sing, they are to rise and be in motion, with proper gestures.

5. Pleasure, another imaginary character, with two companions, are to have instruments in their hands, on which they are to play while they sing, and perform the ritornels.

6. Il Corpo, the Body, when these words are uttered: Si che hormai alma mia, &c. may throw away some of his ornaments: as his gold collar, feathers from his hat, &c.

7. The World, and Human Life in particular, are to be very gayly and richly dressed; and when they are divested of their trappings, to appear very poor and wretched; and at length dead carcases.

8. The symphonies and ritornels may be played by a great number of instruments; "and if a violin should play the principal part "it would have a very good effect (m)."

9. The performance may be finished with or without a dance. If without, the last chorus is to be doubled in all its parts, vocal and instrumental; but, if a dance is preferred, a verse beginning thus: Chioftri altissimi, e stellati, is to be sung, accompanied sedately and reverentially by the dance. These shall succeed other grave steps and figures of the solemn kind. During the ritornels the four principal dancers are to perform a ballet, saltato con capriole, "enlivened with capers or enterchats," without singing. And thus, after each stanza, always varying the steps of the dance; and the four principal dancers may sometimes use the galiard, sometimes the canary, and sometimes the courant step, which will do very well in the ritornels.

(m) Un violino sonando il soprano per l'apunto, farà buonissimo effetto.

10. The

10. The stanzas of the ballet, are to be sung and played by all the performers within and without.

These instructions will give the reader an idea of the manner in which the oratorio was performed in its infant state, as the following specimen will of the kind of narrative melody to which the words were set for a single voice.

The word air never occurs in this oratorio ; but though there are fewer recitatives and more choruses in it, than in the first operas, the choruses are all in plain counterpoint, without a single attempt at fugue or imitation ; so that the words are more intelligible and free from confusion than in an air for a single voice that is loaded with accompaniments.

From the time when this spiritual drama was performed, 1600, till examples of composition can be produced, I shall merely give a list of such musical rappresentationi, or plays, on sacred subjects for Music, as have been recorded, and of which the words only of some have come to my knowledge.

Il gran natale di Cristo Salvator nostro, at Florence, 1625. This sacred drama was written by the elder Cicognini, (Il Dot. Jacopo) author of several other sacred rappresentationi: as Il Trionfo di David; Il Martirio di S. Agata; La Celeste Guida, &c. But of these only the choruses, and some incidental songs, were set to Music, by Gugl. Conti, Giovambatista da Gagliano, Filippo Vitali, and Francesca Caccini, daughter of the celebrated Giulio Caccini detto Romano, one of the inventors of recitative, and first opera composers. Being in possession of all Cicognini's dramas, I was tempted to read his oratorio entitled Il gran Natale di Christo, and found the poetry admirable ; the ideas are grand and elevated, the characters strongly marked, and the personifications ingenious. Lucifer, who rising from the infernal regions, speaks the prologue, resembles, in his daring language and impious sentiments, Milton's Satan. Human Nature personified, opens the first act with a speech much resembling that of Adam at the end of the tenth book of Paradise Lost. Sin and Death are likewise personified, and speak Miltonic sentiments :

First scene of the first Oratorio, Set to Music by EMILIO DEL CAVALIERE, and printed at Rome 1600. 91

Il tempo, il tempo fug - - ge la vi - ta si dif - trug - ge e

già mi par fen - ti - re l'ul - tima tromba e di - re U - sci - te da la fos - -

- - fa ce - ne - ri sparfe et of - fa for - - ge - - te a - nime an - co - ra

Pren - dete i cor pi hor' ho - ra Ve - ni - te a dir il ve - ro se fu miglior pen -

- fie - ro Servire al mon - do va - no O al Rè del ciel fo - -

- pra - no Si che ciascan in - ten - da a - pra gli occhi e comprenda che questa vita e un ven - to che vo - - - la in un momen - - to 6 Il 10# #

* La Pausa serve per pigliar fiato, et daz un poco di tempo a fare qualche Motivo.

hoggi vien fo-re Doman fi mo-re hoggi n'appa-re Doman dif-pa-re Fac -

-cia dunque ognun pro - va Mentril tem-po li gio - va Laf - ciar quant'

b6 II.10

e nel mon-do Quan tunquin se gio-con-do et o-pri con la man o-pri

#6 II.10#

col co-re per che del ben' o prar frut to e' I'ho - no - re

6 II.10# # #6 II.10# #

Coro

Quef - ta vi - ta mor - ta - le per fug - - gir pref - to ha' L'a - le

Quef - ta vi - ta mor - ta - le per fug - - gir presto ha' L'a - le

Quef - ta vi - ta mor - ta - le per fug - gir per fug - gir presto ha' L'a - le

Quef - ta vi - ta mor - ta - le per fug - - gir presto ha' L'a - le

6 #6 II.10#

+

Five-voice musical score. The lyrics are: "E con tal fret-ta pas-sa ch'a dietro i ven-ti e le fa-et-te las-sa." The score is written for five staves, each with a different clef (Soprano, Alto, Tenor 1, Tenor 2, Bass). The music is in a common time signature. Below the staves, there are some markings: #6, #, 13, and 11 10 #.

Chorus in the Oratorio dell' Anima et di Corpo

Five-voice musical score for a chorus. The lyrics are: "Fa-te fes-ta al fig-no-re Or-ga-nie cor-de Tim-pa-no." The score is written for five staves, each with a different clef (Soprano, Alto, Tenor 1, Tenor 2, Bass). The time signature is 3/2. Below the staves, there are some markings: 6, #, #, 7 #6 #, #, 6 #.

Five-voice musical score for a chorus. The lyrics are: "Ce-tre e Trom-be il Salmoe Lhin-no in ar-mo-nia con cor-de in." The score is written for five staves, each with a different clef (Soprano, Alto, Tenor 1, Tenor 2, Bass). The time signature is 3/2. Below the staves, there are some markings: 7 #6 #.

fiem con fuon rim - hom - be Can - ti og - ni lin - gua e di - ca in fiem col

fiem con fuon rim - hom - be Can - ti og - ni lin - gua e di - ca in fiem col

fiem con fuon rim - hom - be Can - ti og - ni lin - gua e di - ca in fiem col

fiem con fuon rim - hom - be Can - ti og - ni lin - gua e di - ca in fiem col

13

fuo - no Be - ne di - te il Sig - nor per che e gli e buo - no

fuo - no Bene di - te il Sig - nor per che e gli e buo - no

fuo - no Be - ne di - te il Sig - nor per che e gli e buo - no

fuo - no Be - ne di - te il Sig - nor per che e gli e buo - no

7 #6 # 13 II 10#

Be - ne di - te il Sig - nor per che e gli e buo - - - no.

Be - ne di - te il sig - nor per che e gli e buo - - - no.

Be - ne di - te il sig - nor per che e gli e buo - - - no.

Be - ne di - te il sig - nor per che e gli e buo - - - no.

entiments : accusing Human Nature of giving them their foul existence. Death says :

*Tù pur fusti colei
Che prima mi chiamasti ;
Anzi col tuo fallire
La Morte non creata allor formasti.*

Again : *Da tua Colpa infinita
Da te, che rappresenti ogni mortale,
Io che la Morte sono hebbi la vita.*

And Sin says :

*Rammenta, ch' io son parto
Di tua disubbidienza——
Io qual serpe mortale
Cerco d' infettar l' alme,
E come il tarlo ogn' hor consumo, e rodo
La coscienza impura.*

Milton calls Death the fin-born monster ; and Sin, speaking to Death, says :

———Thou, my shade
Inseparable, must with me along ;
For Death from Sin no pow'r can separate.

In Cicognini, La Morte says :

*Ed io, che un' ombra sono
Pronta ti seguo, come l' ombra il corpo.*

Lamento di Maria Vergine, accompagnato dalle lagrime di santa Maria Maddalena, e di S. Giovanni per la morte di Giesù Cristo, rappresentato in Musica in istile recitativo nella Chiesa de' santi Innocenti, di Mantua, 1627. This drama was set to Music by Michelagnolo Capollini.

Il Martirio de' santi Abundio prete, Abbundanzio Diacono, Marziano, e Giovanni suo figliuolo, Dramma, in Roma, 1631. Set by Domenico Mazzocchi, one of the most eminent and learned contrapuntists of his time. The madrigals which he printed at Rome in score, 1638, have been already described, Vol. III. chap. viii.

There are many new harmonies, for that period, in these compositions ; and he seems to have been one of the first old masters who felt the beautiful effect of the flat fifth with the sixth, and other discords in ligature. He is justly celebrated by Kircher for these madrigals, and for his pathetic recitative, of which he gives the following specimen from his spiritual cantata called the Tears of Mary Magdalen, a composition, says Kircher, so affecting and expressive, that when performed by such exquisite fingers as the Cavalier Loreto Vittorij, Bonaventura, or Marcantonio, it never failed to draw tears from all who heard it.

Domenico Mazzocchi.

RECIT.

Ben vuol sa - nar - la il Re - den - to - re San - gue ma indarno sparfi il pre - ti - o - so ri - o sa - rà per lei di quel be - a - to sangue senza il doglioso bu - mor del pian - - - - - to mi - o senza il doglio - so bu - mor

Il S. Alessio Dramma Musicale, set to Music by Stefano Landi, and performed at the Barberini palace at Rome, 1634. This oratorio was printed at Rome, in score, the same year, with a long preface by the composer, who tells us that the ritornels for violins are in three parts; but that sometimes there is a base added to them which often moves in eighths and fifths with one of the parts, on purpose, for the beauty of the effect. After this declaration the musical reader will perhaps have as little eagerness to see such Music as I had to transcribe it, after examining the score.

L'Annunciato, Drama sacro per Musica, Bologna. The composer of the Music to this drama is not mentioned.

Erminia sul Giordano, Drama Musicale, performed likewise in the Barberini palace, and printed in score, at Rome, 1637. Though the Music of this piece is somewhat better than that of Alexis, I saw nothing in it worth transcription. It was composed by Michel Angelo Roffi, a celebrated performer on the violin, who played the part of Apollo in this drama: and we are told, in a descriptive letter prefixed to the work, that Signor Roffi, the author of the Music, played on the violin with such sweet and grateful melody, as proved his just title to dominion over the Muses, at the head of whom he was placed in a car.

Sanfone, dialogo per Musica, Palermo, 1638. The composer is not mentioned.

No musical drama, under the title of Oratorio, can be found in print, says the diligent Quadrio (n), before the time of Francesco Balducci, who died in 1642; among whose poems are found two: the one called la Fede, on the subject of Abraham's sacrifice, and divided into two parts: the other entitled Il Trionfo, or the Coronation of the blessed Virgin, in one act, or part, only. These resembling the dramas performed at the church of the fathers of the oratory, he calls ORATORIOS, an appellation which was soon adopted by many others (o).

(n) Tom. V. 405.

Yet still several sacred musical dramas appear in the Drammaturgia, and elsewhere, about this time, under the ancient title of Dramma sacro, or Rappresentazione, which was originally given to the mysteries and moralities: as La Pellegrina costante, Dramma sacro, written and set to Music by the celebrated singer Loreto Vittorj, at Rome, 1647; and Il Sacrificio d'Abramo, rappresentazione tragi-comica, recitata in Musica, at Rome, 1648.

Debbora, melodramma sacro, Ancona, 1651.

Dialoghi sacri e morali, del Cavalier Loreto Vittorj. These dialogues were dramatic, and written and set expressly for the Chiesa nuova at Rome, in which the author himself, one of the first and most eminent sopranos, who sung in the early operas, performed. Quadrio tells us (p), that Giano Nicio Eritreo, speaking of Loreto Vittorj, an excellent singer and good poet of Spoleto, relates the having once heard him in the oratory of S. Filippo Neri, in Rome, sing a Querimonia of Mary Magdalen weeping for her sins, and throwing herself at the feet of Christ. And it seems as if this was the spiritual cantata set by Domenico Mazzocchi, to which Kircher alludes in speaking of the excellence of the recitative. Loreto was admitted in the Papal chapel 1622. And in 1655, he set for Spoleto, the place of his nativity, the opera of Galatea, which, according to Adami (q), was in great favour at that time, and, being printed, was dedicated to Cardinal Barberini.

Eufrosia, l'Innocenza di Susanna, another Debbora, Maddalena al Sepolcro, and L'Annunciazione della B. Vergine, all performed in different parts of Italy in 1656, are simply called musical dramas.

Indeed, the first time the word oratorio occurs to a poem on a sacred subject for Music, in the Drammaturgia, is to a piece per-

(o) The poems of Francesco Balducci were published at Rome, in two parts: the first in 1630, and reprinted in 1645; the second in 1646; and both together at Venice, 1655 and 1663.

(p) Tom. V. 495.

(q) Osserv. per ben reg. il Coro.

formed.

formed at Messina, soon after the middle of the last century ; and, as the title of this drama is curious, I shall give it at full length : Fede di Zanca, ORATORIO nella solennità della Festa della sacra Lettera, scritta dalla Gloriosa Vergine Maria a' Messinesi, Palermo, 1659. In 1662, several religious dramas, that were performed in Italian at Vienna, in the imperial chapel, were called oratorios : as Il Diluvio, ORATORIO, a cinque Voci ; Santa Caterina, Oratorio ; and Le Lagrime della Vergine nel sepolcro di Cristo, set to Music by Marcantonio Ziani. The same year was performed at Messina, La Sensualità depressa, Oratorio. In 1667, Sifara, Oratorio, recito nella Capella Maggiore del Palazzo publico di Bologna, Musica di Maurizio Cruciati, Maestro di Capella di S. Petronio. In 1670, La Sposa Vergine, Oratorio, for the feast of St. Cecilia, in Cremona.

In 1675, Santa Caterina d' Alessandria, rappresentazione sacra per Musica, was performed at Venice ; but from the year 1637, when the Music of S. Alessio was printed, I was unable, with the utmost diligence of research, to find throughout Italy any vestiges of Oratorio-music till 1676. Of this date is still preserved at Rome in the archives of the church of S. Girolamo della Carità, where S. Pilippo Neri first instituted his Congregation of the Fathers of the Oratory, and where the performance of oratorios has since been constant, the Music of two sacred dramas of that kind among many others of more modern times.

The title of the first is : Oratorio di santa Cristina, di D. Francesco Federici, 1676, con stromenti. There is no overture ; the performance begins with an accompanied recitative, à ritornelli, played by two violins, tenor, and base ; which is the first attempt, that has come to my knowledge, of this species of interstitial accompaniment. The violins never play with the voice, but always in symphonies or repetitions of particular portions of the vocal melody. There is only one short chorus in the first act ; the second ends with a duo. The terms Da Capo never occur, except when several stanzas are sung to the same melody, and then it is said, si repete da Capo la seconda stanza, &c.

The second of these early oratorios is for five voices, and is entitled Santa Caterina da Sienna, di D. Fran. Federici, 1676. This oratorio, like the other, begins by a recitative without overture or symphony. The copy which I found having no other accompaniment than a base figured throughout, was probably only a half-score; as there is a movement at the end of the first act, said to be à quattro, to which only the base is given. The personifications in this drama resemble those of the ancient mysteries and moralities: as the principal characters are St. Catherine, an Angel, the World, Vanity, and Repentance.

Though these compositions are not the productions of a composer of eminence, as there is a grave and soothing simplicity in them which seems well suited to the subject and place of performance, I shall insert two of the airs on the following plates: the one sung by the Guardian Angel of the Saint, exhorting her to renounce the pleasures and vanities of the world; and the other by St. Catherine herself, during her conflict with her own heart.

As musical materials for this period of my enquiries after the sacred musical drama or oratorio are scarce, I thought myself extremely fortunate at Rome in meeting with a production of that kind, by the celebrated and unfortunate Stradella, with whose story it seems necessary to present the reader here, previous to any farther account of this composition.

ALESSANDRO STRADELLA, of Naples, was not only an excellent composer, but a great performer on the violin, and, besides these qualifications, was possessed of a fine voice and an exquisite manner of singing. His compositions, which are all vocal, and of which I am in possession of many, and have examined a great number more in other collections, seem superior to any that were produced in the last century, except by Carissimi; and, perhaps, if he had enjoyed equal longevity, he would have been inferior in no respect to that great musician.

Though it has been said by Bourdelot, in his Histoire de la Musique, Tom. I. p. 41. and by others after him, that Stradella was engaged engaged by the Republic of Venice to compose for the opera in that city; it does not appear by the correct and regular list of the musical dramas performed at Venice from the year 1637 to 1730, that an opera, or any part of an opera, of his composition, was ever performed in that city. Nor does his name occur as a dramatic composer for any other part of Italy, in the Drammaturgia di Lione Allacci, augmented and continued to the year 1755. His compositions are chiefly miscellaneous, consisting of single songs, cantatas, duets, trios, and madrigals of four and five parts. One opera, and one oratorio, of which farther mention will be made hereafter, comprise the whole of his dramatic Music, sacred and secular, that I have been able to find.

This musician, probably at an early period of his life, having acquired great reputation at Venice by his talents, was employed by a noble Venetian to teach a young lady of a noble Roman family, named Hortensia, to sing. This lady on whom nature had bestowed a beautiful person and an exquisite voice, notwithstanding her illustrious birth, having been seduced from her friends, had submitted to live with this Venetian in a criminal manner.

Hortensia's love for Music, and admiration of the talents of her instructor, by frequent access, soon gave birth to a passion of a different kind; and, like Heloisa, she found, that though at first

Guiltless she gaz'd, and listen'd while he sung,
While science flow'd seraphic from his tongue;
From lips like his the precepts too much move,
They Music taught—but more, alas! to love!

and accordingly she and her master became mutually enamoured of each other. Before their secret was disclosed, of which the consequences might have been equally fatal to Stradella with those which followed the discovery of Abelard's passion, they agreed to quit Venice together, and fly to Naples; and after travelling in the most secret manner possible, they arrived at Rome in their way to that city. The Venetian seducer, on discovering their flight, determined to gratify his revenge by having them assassinated in whatever part

part of the world they could be found; and having engaged two desperate ruffians to pursue them, by a large sum of ready money and a promise of a still greater reward when the work was accomplished, they proceeded directly to Naples, the place of Stradella's nativity, supposing that he would naturally return thither for shelter, preferably to any other part of Italy. But after seeking him in vain for some time in that city, they were informed that he and the lady were still at Rome, where she was regarded as his wife. Of this they communicated intelligence to their employer, assuring him of their determination to go through with the business they had undertaken, provided he would procure them letters of recommendation to the Venetian ambassador at Rome, to grant them an asylum as soon as the deed should be perpetrated.

After waiting at Naples for the necessary letters and instructions, they proceeded to Rome, where, such was the celebrity of Stradella, they were not long before they discovered his residence. But hearing that he was soon to conduct an oratorio of his own composition, in the church of St. John Lateran, in which he was not only to play, but to sing the principal part; and as this performance was to begin at five o'clock in the evening, they determined to avail themselves of the darkness of the night when he and his mistress should return home.

On their arrival at the church, the oratorio was begun, and the excellence of the Music and its performance, joined to the rapture that was expressed by the whole congregation, made an impression and softened the rocky hearts even of these savage beasts, to such a degree, as to incline them to relent; and to think that it would be a pity to take away the life of a man whose genius and abilities were the delight of all Italy. An instance of the miraculous powers of modern Music, superior, perhaps, to any that could be well authenticated of the ancient.

Both these assassins being equally affected by the performance, alike inclined to mercy, and accosting him in the street when he quitted the church, after complimenting him upon his oratorio, confessed to him the business on which they had been sent by the Venetian

Venetian nobleman, whose mistress he had stolen; adding, that charmed by his Music, they had changed their minds; and then, advising him and the lady to fly to some place of safety as soon as possible, they determined to relinquish the rest of the reward that was promised them, and tell their employer, that Stradella and his mistress had quitted Rome the night before their arrival in that city.

After this wonderful escape, the lovers did not wait for new counsel to quit Rome, but set out that very night for Turin, as a place most remote from their implacable enemy and his emissaries. And the assassins returning to Venice, told the enraged Venetian that they had traced the fugitives to Turin, a place where the laws being not only severe, but the difficulty of escaping so much greater than in any other part of Italy, on account of the garrison, they should decline any further concern in the business. This intelligence did not, however, incline the offended nobleman to relinquish his purpose, but rather stimulated him to new attempts: he therefore engaged two other assassins in his service, procuring for them letters of recommendation from the Abbé d' Estrade, at that time the French ambassador at Venice, addressed to the Marquis de Villars, ambassador from France to Turin. The Abbé d' Estrade requesting, at the desire of the Venetian ambassador, protection for two merchants, who intended to reside some time in that city, which being delivered by the new assassins, they paid their court regularly to the ambassador, while they waited for a favourable opportunity to accomplish their undertaking with safety.

The Duchess of Savoy, at this time regent, having been informed of the sudden flight of Stradella and Hortensia from Rome, and their arrival at Turin, and knowing the danger they were in from the vindictive spirit of their enemy, placed the lady in a convent, and retained Stradella in her palace as her Maestro di Capella. In a situation apparently so secure, Stradella's fears for his safety began to abate; till one day, at six o'clock in the evening, as he was walking for the air, on the ramparts of the city, he was set upon by two ruffians, who each gave him a stab in the breast with a dagger, and immediately flew to the house of the French ambassadors, as to a sanctuary.

The assault having been seen by numbers of people who were walking in the same place, occasioned such an uproar in the city, that the news soon reached the Dukes, who ordered the gates to be shut, and the assassins to be demanded of the French ambassador; but he insisting on the privileges granted to men of his function by the law of nations, refused to give them up. This transaction, however, made a great noise all over Italy, and M. de Villars wrote immediately to the Abbé d' Estrade to know the reason of the attack upon Stradella by the two men whom he had recommended; and was informed, by the Abbé, that he had been surprised into a recommendation of these assassins by one of the most powerful of the Venetian nobility. In the mean time Stradella's wounds, though extremely dangerous, proved not to be mortal, and the Marquis de Villars having been informed by the surgeons that he would recover, in order to prevent any further dispute about the privileges of the corps diplomatique, suffered the assassins to escape.

But such was the implacability of the enraged Venetian, that never relinquishing his purpose, he continued to have Stradella constantly watched by spies, whom he maintained in Turin. A year being elapsed after the cure of his wounds, and no fresh disturbance happening, he thought himself secure from any further attempts upon his life. The Dukes Regent, interesting herself in the happiness of two persons who had suffered so much, and who seemed born for each other, had them married in her palace. After which ceremony, Stradella having an invitation to Genoa to compose an opera for that city, went thither with his wife, determining to return to Turin after the Carnival; but the Venetian being informed of this motion, sent assassins after them, who watching for a favourable opportunity, rushed into their chamber early one morning, and stabbed them both to the heart. The murderers having secured a bark, which lay in the port, by instantly retreating to it, escaped from justice, and were never heard of more.

This

This tragical event must have happened considerably later than 1670, the date that has been assigned to it by all the musical writers who have related the story. For being in possession of the drama which he set for Genoa previous to his murder, which is entitled La Forza dell' Amor paterno, and dated Genoa MDCLXXVIII, it appears that the dedication of this opera to Signora Teresa Raggi Saoli, was written by Stradella himself. And at the conclusion of the editor's advertisement to the reader is the following eulogium on the composer of the Music: bastando il dirti, che il concerto di sì perfetta melodia sia valore d'un Alessandro, cioè del Signor Stradella riconosciuto senza contrasto per il primo Apollo della Musica: "Nothing further need be offered in defence of the work, than to say that it had received the advantage of the perfect melody and harmony of an Alexander, that is of Signor Stradella, indisputably acknowledged to be the magnus Apollo of Music."

This chapter being chiefly confined to the subject of oratorios, as I am in possession of the score of the only composition of that kind which has come to my knowledge among the works of Stradella, and which is generally believed to have saved this charming composer's life for some time by its effects on the hearts of the first assassins that were employed to murder him at Rome on the night of its performance, I shall be somewhat minute in my account of it, and liberal in extracts; as the Music is superior to that of any similar production of the time.

ORATORIO di S. Gio. Battista, à 5, con stromenti, del Signor Alessandro Stradella. There is a sinfonia or overture in four parts, consisting of three short movements all in fugue, and the composition very neat and clear; but as the powers of the violin were at this time but little known, however superior it may be to any thing of the kind by his cotemporaries, to exhibit a score of it here would impress the admirers of modern symphonies with but little reverence for the instrumental Music of Stradella.

The first scene opens with a short recitative and air by St. John, in the counter-tenor clef, which unless sung with expression by a fine voice, would now have but little effect. These are followed by another short recitative and a short chorus of the Saint's disciples, and then a dialogue between him and one of the chorus. After this we have a spirited song in eight parts; the accompaniments being very ingeniously contrived, like Correlli's Concertos, for two violins and violoncello del concertino, and two violins, tenor, and base del concerto grosso. There is not much elegant or graceful melody in this song, but it is a very elaborate composition, and full of masterly contrivance.

After a short recitative, there is a chorus in five parts, sung by St. John's disciples, which is truly admirable. It begins with eight or ten bars of excellent counterpoint, in which is a very early, if not the first, use of the extreme sharp sixth; and then bursts into a fugue on two excellent subjects, which are reversed and otherwise admirably treated. Except Handel's, I never saw a better vocal chorus, for its length. Then follows a piece of flattering recitative, by the Consigliere of Herod; which is succeeded by a lively air on a ground-base by Herodia, his daughter. After which, on another ground-base, the Counsellor sings an air of a graver cast, in which are many ingenious, and then new and elegant passages.

To all these airs on a ground-base the voice has no other accompaniment: for, as he meant that this base should be distinctly heard, he not only leaves it clear and unloaded with harmony, but recommends the doubling it con tutti i bassi del concerto grosso. The next air, however, consisting of two movements, is very richly accompanied. It is sung by Herodia, and begins with a slow symphony fugata in four parts, admirably written, and when the voice comes in, is in five real parts. The second movement is a kind of gavot, allegro, and is supported with ingenuity and spirit, in fugue and imitation, to the end. This kind of writing is certainly not dramatic; but though it is often Gothic and dull, in the hands of composers of limited abilities, yet, when a Carissimi, a Stradella, a Purcell, or a Handel writes a fugue on any subject, it becomes interesting to every master and judge of good composition.

Then follows a trio, by the Figlia, Madre, and Consigliere, in a very pleasing Sicilian style, full of imitations, good harmony, and contrivance.

contrivance. After which there is a magnificent blustering base song for Herod, à due cori. In the latter part of which there is a very busy accompaniment for the two principal violins, while the base only fortifies the voice part in unison, or in the octave. This air is followed by a good chorus of two movements in fugues of four parts; and the first act ends with a duet between Herod and his daughter in triple time, of which the passages, though now antiquated, were sufficiently new in the last century for Corelli, and other composers posterior to Stradella, to adopt them.

The second part opens with a single air, sung by Herodia, not devoid of grace, at the time it was composed. But melody was then little cultivated; for as scarce any movement, not in fugue, was deemed worth hearing by the critics of those days, every master thought it necessary to manifest abilities in that way which was most likely to increase his reputation. Yet, notwithstanding the attention necessarily given to fugue and imitation at this time, Stradella has introduced a greater variety of movement and contrivance in his oratorio, than I ever saw in any drama, sacred or secular, of the same period. The second air in this act has a base in constant division, which contrasts well with the preceding air, and with the plain and simple melody to which it is applied.

The subsequent air accompanied by two violins in perpetual imitation, is on a ground-base, which, after several repetitions, is reversed, and still made subservient to the original theme. There is a second part to this air in a different measure, but still upon a ground-base.

In a duo between Herod and his daughter, the harmony, modulation, and contrivance, are so admirable, that I shall give part of it as a specimen of the perfection to which this species of writing was brought by Stradella anterior to the productions of Purcel, Clari, Steffani, and Alessandro Scarlatti, whose road to fame he very much contributed to point out and smooth*.

The air of Herod concertata, with six real instrumental parts, is spirited, clear, and masterly. This oratorio rises in merit the further we advance. The recitative is in general excellent; and there is scarce a movement among the airs in which genius, skill, and study do not appear. This is the first work in which the proper sharps and flats are generally placed at the clef. The modulation in the recitative, however, is less timid than that of Stradella's predecessors, and he neither thought it necessary to place flats nor sharps at the clef of his recitative, nor to begin and end in one key; but let the sentiments and passion of the words alone govern his modulation with the true spirit of declamation.

* See the plates at the end of this chapter.

After an animated and almost elegant duet, between St. John and Herodia, followed by a spirited air, I expected this oratorio would have ended with a chorus; but found it terminated by a duet (r).

Since Oratorios have been enriched by the choruses of Colonna, Alessandro Scarlatti, Leo, Jomelli, and above all Handel, we are disappointed whenever they do not abound; as this species of drama, in still life, is peculiarly calculated to display the powers of harmony and resources of a great composer; for the performers being allowed to read their parts, instead of acting them by memory, exempts the author of the Music from all fear of difficulty or complication, which might embarrass the performer, and occasion confusion in the representation. The early oratorios being intended for exhibition on a stage, had as few choruses, and as short and simple as an opera. Whether this sacred drama was acted in the church of St. John Lateran, or no, does not appear; but long, frequent, and accompanied choruses, seem not to have been thought necessary either by the poet or composer of this, in other respects, admirable oratorio.

Interested and surprised as I was by the new and unexpected beauties of Stradella's compositions, compared with those of his contemporaries, it is to be feared that those who have them not before their eyes, or who only compare them with modern productions, will think my account of this oratorio too long; I shall

(r) If the story be true, as there is little reason to doubt, of Stradella's long persecution and final murder, we may conclude that this sacred drama was performed about 1676; as he is said to have survived the plan of his assassination, at Rome, two or three years.

therefore hasten to his other works, in which I find the germe of many favourite compositions that were produced long after the fatal catastrophe, which so prematurely put an end to his existence.

It will, I hope, however, afford some satisfaction to curious collectors to be informed, that besides Stradella's opera and oratorio, already mentioned, there are still extant the following compositions of this excellent master: in the Museum Collection, No 1265 and 1272, Se nel ben (s); Se l'ama Filli (t); Gode allor Tranquilla; La Ragion. In Christ-church, Oxon: Fulmini quanto sà; Ardo, sospiro, e piango, duetti (u). In the possession of Mr. Bailey, organist of Chester, and collected by the late Mr. Wright of that city, the traveller, who bequeathed them to the late Mr. Orme: Io che lascero fur; non è al certo novità; Riderete sotto vedovo cielo; Ti Lasciero. In the Collection of the Academy of ancient Music: Clori son fido amante, madrigal à 5. And in my own collection, transcribed from copies in the possession of the late Dr. Pepuch: Ecco ritorno a i pianti, à 3; Chi dirà che nel veleno, duo; Piangete occhi dolenti, madrigal à 5.

The more I examine the works of this excellent artist, the more I am convinced that Purcell had made him his model; not in detail, in order to imitate his passages, but general style of composition. Purcell was extremely fond of writing upon a ground-base, a species of chaconne, which the Italians call basso costretto, and the French basse-contrainte: and in Stradella's oratorio, it appears that more than half the airs in that admirable production are built upon a few bars or notes of base perpetually repeated. Purcell may have been stimulated to exercise his powers in such confined and difficult enterprizes as themes, by viewing the works of an author who, according to tradition, was his greatest favourite; but he has never made use of the same ground, or series of notes, in any of his

(s) In this air the natural and clear style of vocal melody appears, which was afterwards much improved by Haffé and Vinci.

(t) Here Stradella seems to have furnished the comic motivo, which Pergolesi afterwards perfected in the duet of his Serva Padrona.

(u) These are full of ingenious imitations, elegant passages, and new expression of words and modulation, at the time they were composed.

numerous compositions of this kind ; indeed, his subjects are not only new, but more pleasing and difficult to work upon, than any of Stradella's, that I have seen (x).

Besides the legendary subjects which the lives of saints have furnished, there is scarcely an event in the sacred writings, which during the last century did not give birth to an oratorio. San Tommaso di Canturbia (Canterbury) ; Tommaso Moro ; and Maria Stuarda Regina di Scozia, were likewise the subjects of several oratorios, tragedies, and cantatas, in Italy, during the last century.

In 1678, Giustizia sposata alla pace, in the coronation of Solomon, dialogo per Musica, Palermo. S. Agata, oratorio, sung in the Imperial Chapel.

1679. I dolorosi pianti dell' anime del purgatorio, oratorio, Vienna.

1680. Eresia avvelenata, oratorio, Cremona.

After this time the title of oratorio, for a sacred musical drama, became general.

1681. La Luce nata al giusto ; 1682, L' Angelo custode, Mantua ; 1683, Bersabea, set by Don Gaspar Torelli, at Imola (y) ; 1684, L' Annunciata, Modena ; 1689, La Pietà trionfante nella nascita del monarca Britanno, Modena ; 1690, Il Martirio di S. Eustachio ; Ester, ovvero la Caduta di Amanno, azione sacra per Musica, in Mantua ; 1693, La santa Vergine Rosalia. And in 1695, another Ester, at Bologna ; 1699, Eresia discacciata, Napoli ; 1700, L' Innocenza ravvivata in Adamo pentito, at Todi.

The poet Pariati, who shared the imperial laurel with Apostolo Zeno, wrote three oratorios, about the beginning of the present century for the Emperor's Chapel, at Vienna ; the Jesuit Ceva produced sixteen or eighteen ; and Lelio Orfini many that were chiefly performed and printed in Germany.

(x) Writing and playing on a ground seem to have been rendered very common practices in England, by Purcell's works and his imitators, about the beginning of the present century.

(y) Not the violinist Torelli, of Verona, whose name was Giuseppe, and who had a brother, Felice Torelli, who published his Concertos 1709, con una pastorale per il santissima natale, on the death of his brother Joseph.

Bernino, Balducci, Mazzei, Stellati, Bernini, and De Totis, were authors of a considerable number, which are specified in Quadrio (z); as are those of Massimi, Bergamori, Lemene, Baviera, Gigli, and Bernardoni. After these the number that were written about the beginning of the present century, is prodigious.

Arcangelo Spagna, in 1706, published fifteen oratorios, or melodrammi sacri, with a preliminary discourse concerning this species of poetical composition, dedicated to his holiness pope Clement XI.

In the first parabolical oratorios, says Quadrio (a), allegorical and ideal personages were introduced, as Patience, Charity, Faith, Hope, &c. in the same manner as in the ancient mysteries; and sometimes a mixture of real and imaginary characters: when our Saviour, the Holy Ghost, and even the supreme Being were introduced speaking the language of mortals, and singing trivial and profane airs. This irreverend abuse has, however, been reformed during the present century, in which oratorios have been written that are not, indeed, perfectly dramatic, but in which the interlocutors are real personages, who have been made to speak with more reason, probability, and propriety than formerly.

In Italy, oratorios are usually divided into two parts only, in order that their performance may not exceed two hours; for being performed during divine service, more time could not conveniently be allowed. Malatesta Strinati, and Giulio Cesare Grazzini, both men of literary abilities, have, however, printed oratorios, the first, St. Adrian, in three acts, and the second, St. George, in five. Apostolo Zeno has reduced his sacred dramas within the limits of time and place, and written them in such a manner that they may not only be sung without action, but represented on a stage; so that if they were somewhat lengthened, and the several parts well cast, they might reasonably be called sacred musical tragedies.

And such, indeed, oratorios ought to be, even when sung in still life: as, when the laws of time and place are observed, the events of the piece interesting, and the characters well supported, the attention of the audience will be the more easily excited. Indeed, as these pieces are at present performed without action, the figures of the personages are not presented to the eye, as in other dramas, but the ear.

(z) Storia d' Ogni Poesia, Tom. V. 498.
et seq.

(a) Ubi supra.

The interlocutors, says Spagna, should not exceed five, nor be fewer than three, to prevent confusion and lassitude in hearing almost always the same voices. In the beginning of oratorios, the vocal parts were constantly of four different kinds: soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass; and as it would be extremely ridiculous to give to a soprano voice, the part of St. Ilarion, or Paul the Hermit, unless some event were presented which happened in their youth; and it would be equally absurd to assign the part of St. Cecilia, or St. Agnes, to a bass; great care should be taken, not to write the characters or compose the Music, till it is known who are to perform the several parts.

In the dramatic works of Apostolo Zeno there are seventeen oratorios, all of which were originally set to Music by Caldara, except two: David by Porfili, and Ezechia by John Bononcini, 1737.

Zeno's oratorio of Sifara, set by Caldara, was performed in the Imperial Chapel, 1719. And the author himself says, that the great favour which this drama enjoyed at Vienna, "was chiefly due to the composer of the Music, che mi ha servitò assai bene (b)." This testimony is the more honourable for Caldara, as Apostolo Zeno, in general, joins with other learned Italians in complaints of the degeneracy and abuse of Music.

Metastasio was author of eight sacred dramas, which have been set by the greatest masters of modern times, but with more force and learning by Jomelli, perhaps, than any other; as he particularly studied an elaborate choral style, and his long residence in Germany obliged him to a constant exercise in learned counterpoint; for which, though unjustly censured by his countrymen, he has acquired great reputation among the lovers of harmony, elsewhere (c).

(b) Lettera, xli. Tom. II.

(c) La Passione di Giesù Christo, of Sant'

Sant' Elena al Calvario was admirably set by Leo. His Music to Sacri orrori, is in the sublime style, and equal in solemnity and effects to any thing of the kind that has perhaps ever been produced. This composition was admired by our exquisite poet Gray, who first brought it to England.

I have been more fortunate in finding the words than the Music of the oratorios that were written during the last century. Next to that of Stradella, Il Trionfo della Castità, dedicated to Cardinal Ottoboni, and set to Music by Carlo Pallavicini, is the most ancient. The score of this oratorio was brought to England by the late Mr. Wright of Chester, the traveller, and is now the property of Mr. Bailey, organist of that city.

There were two composers of the name of Pallavicini: BENEDETTO PALAVICINI, the elder, was a voluminous madrigalist, about the beginning of the last century. I have seen eight different books and scored several of his madrigals for five and six voices, all published between the year 1595 and 1612 (d). There is no great variety of style, melody, harmony, or modulation, discoverable in these productions. They are all of one cast and colour; and like the works of the chief part of his contemporaries, breathe no enthusiasm, or spirit of invention; contented with the old and common harmonies and the few dry and simple passages in melody which would admit of fugue and imitation, no air, or symmetry of measure, was aimed at by the masters of these times; which rendered almost all their madrigals as like each other, as peas in the same bushel, or bullets of the same caliber. If the common track was ever quitted, it was not in search of more beautiful or pleasing melodies, but difficult and elaborate contrivances in the texture of the parts, which afforded the ear but little amusement, in proportion to the trouble it cost the mind in disentangling them. This species of composi-

Metastasio, was first set by Caldara, 1730. Sant' Elena al Calvario, 1733. Giuseppe riconosciuto, 1733, Musica di Porfili. Betulia liberata, 1734, Musica di Giorgio Reuter. Gioas, 1737. La Morte d'Abel, 1740, Musica di D. Domenico Valentini. Per la Feslivita del Santissimo Natale. Isacco

Figura del Redentore, 1740, Musica di Predieri. Betulia liberata, Isacco, & La Passione, have been since remarkably well set by Jomelli.

(d) Most of this author's works are preserved in Dr. Aldrich's Collection, Christchurch, Oxon.

tion was more calculated to gratify pedantry and surprise the eye, than excite passion, or delight the ear.

CARLO PALLAVICINI, the younger, began to flourish in 1666, when he composed Demetrio, his first opera for Venice. Between this period and the year 1687, he set twenty-one dramas for that city. The oratorio, mentioned above, must have been composed about the latter end of the last century, as the prelate to whom it is dedicated was not admitted into the conclave till 1689, at only twenty-four years of age. If Carlo Pallavicini, the author of this Music, ever had any genius, it was exhausted when he set this oratorio, which has neither invention nor learning to recommend it.

The next oratorio, of which I have been able to find the Music, is entitled Maria Vergine addolorata, composed by FRANCESCO ANTONIO PISTOCCHI, of Bologna, one of the greatest stage-fingers of the last century, who began to flourish both as a composer and vocal performer about the year 1679. He was retained some time at the court of the Margrave of Brandenburg, as Maestro di Capella; but late in life, after establishing a school of singing at Bologna, which was continued by his scholar Bernacchi, he retired to a monastery, where he ended his days.

There is no date to his oratorio, which is now before me; but by the elegance and simplicity of the style, it seems to have been produced about the end of the last century. Recitative now freed from formal closes and in possession of all its true forms, in this production is extremely pathetic and dramatic; and Pistocchi seems a more correct contrapuntist than the generality of opera singers whom the demon of composition seizes at a period of their lives, when it is too late to begin, and impossible to pursue such studies effectually, without injuring the chest, and neglecting the cultivation of the voice.

This oratorio has neither overture nor chorus. The interlocutors are an Angel, the Virgin Mary, Mary Magdalen, and St. John. As a specimen of Pistocchi's style, on the next plates I shall present the reader with the first air of Mary Magdalen, in which, at this mark + a passage occurs that Corelli, in the saraband of his eleventh concerto, to, and Geminiani in "Gently touch the warbling lyre," have used as their own property.

At the termination of this oratorio, which is truly pathetic and solemn, all the degrees of the diminution of sound are used: as piano, più piano, pianissimo, equivalent to the diminuendo, calando, and smorzando, of the present times.

The oratorio of St. Basil, composed about this time, by PAOLO COLONNA, is come to my hand, from the same collection, by the favour of Mr. Bailey. It was a disappointment to me, not to find in this composition any choruses; as it was natural to expect, from so learned a contrapuntist, that they would have been excellent. There is, indeed, but little melody or expression in the songs, which are almost all upon subjects that have been long rendered common and vulgar by frequent use. Great learning, study, and experience, indeed, appear throughout this composition; but not the genius, facility, and expression of Stradella, whom Colonna survived at least twenty years.

In the manuscript oratorio of ALES. SCARLATTI, which I found in the archives of the Chiesa nuova, at Rome, there is an admirable overture, in a style totally different from that of Lulli, which, at this time, was the general model for all Europe. The modulation and expression of the recitatives, many of which are accompanied with interstitial symphonies, are admirable, and such as might be expected from a man of his original, bold, and cultivated genius, who always disdained insipidity, and the common passages of the times. The airs are almost all pathetic, as the subject required, and richly accompanied. A cavatina is given as a specimen on the following plates.

Among the songs of a different cast, there is one, accompanied by a trumpet, in which the beauties and true genius of that instrument have been studied, and all its defects avoided, by using only the key-note, the second, third, and fifth of the key, all which are alternately sustained so long, that if the fourth and sixth had been equally employed, the harmony would have been intolerable.

JOHN BONONCINI composed many oratorios before he arrived in England. I found one in the archives of S. Girolamo della Carità, rità, at Rome, with his name to it, which, by its simplicity, seems to have been one of his first productions. The sharps and flats of the recitatives are written at the clef; the instrumental parts are thin, and seldom have any thing to do but in the symphonies and ritornels, in which great use is made of the violoncello, which was his instrument. It has but two acts or parts, which is the case with all the Italian oratorios; as at the end of the first, there used to be a sermon, or discourse in prose, which is printed with the first oratorio dell' Anima, e del Corpo. The overture has but two movements like those of Lulli; and it seems as if Handel had been the first to introduce the minuet, or final air; in his first oratorio there is none. Alexander Scarlatti was a much more elaborate writer, and gave more movement to his basses, and to all his instrumental parts, than Bononcini, who continued during his whole life a friend to the voice, and a lover of simplicity. Though there were frequently, in the first oratorios, short choruses in plain counterpoint, I seldom find any in those of the latter end of the last century, and the beginning of present; each act usually ending with a duet: so that it seems as if we were not only obliged to Handel for the best choruses that were ever composed, accompanied by instruments, but for the having any choruses at all.

There is no composer of oratorios, anterior to Handel, of whose choruses I have any great expectations, except Caldara; who, from his other productions, which are come to my knowledge, seems to have been admirably qualified for enriching choral compositions with harmony, contrivance, great effects, and every species of learning which renders this elaborate style of composition grand and majestic in its public performance, and curious and improving to the student, in his private studies.

Though Caldara set fifteen of Apostolo Zeno's oratorios, and several that were written by other poets, I have never been able to procure a complete score of any one of them; which I the more wished to do, as, upon a perusal of the words of the sacred dramas of Apostolo Zeno, and Metastasio, there appear to be choruses in them all.

Air. In the Oratorio of Santa Caterina da Siena.

117

see above p. 100.

Alla morte ti destina il gioir chi ti presenta solo intenta solo in - tenta a - fe - guir a - fe - guir Chi gioisce e la ru - i - - na solo in - tenta a fe - guir a fe - guir Chi gioisce e la ru - i - - na.

Aria.

Santa Caterina da Siena 1676.

Che ri - solvi o mio pensiero - dubbio core a che t'appig - li chi se - guace e de perig - li Lungi va dall' E - mi - se - - ro Che ri - solvi o mio pensiero - che ri - sol - vi che ri - solvi o mio pen - sie - ro

STRADELLA.

Adagio assai

Nel fe - ren - de tuoi con - tenti nel fe - ren - de tuoi con - ten -

Nel fe - ren - de miei con - tenti nel fe - ren - de miei con - ten -

- ti da piu ven - ti com - bat - tu - ta è la tua Na -

- ti da piu Ven - ti combat - tu - ta è la mia na - ve da piu Ven - ti

- ve da piu Ven - ti combat - tu - ta da piu Ven - ti da piu Ven - ti

com - bat - tu - ta è la mia na - ve la mia na - ve da piu Ven - ti combat - tu - ta è la tua na - ve da piu ven - ti da piu Ven - ti da piu Ven - ti combat - tu - ta è la mia na - ve da piu ven - ti combat - tu - ta è la tua na - ve e la tua Na - ve. Sdegno amor pieta - de ed combattu - ta è la mia Na - ve e la mia Na - ve.

First system of musical notation. The top staff is in treble clef and the bottom staff is in bass clef. Both are in B-flat major (two flats). The lyrics are: i-ra mal f'aggi-ra mal f'ag-gi-ra nel tuo fen Sdegno a-

Second system of musical notation. The lyrics are: - mor pietade ed i-ra mal f'aggi-ra nel tuo fen do-len - - - te e - - gi-ra entro il fen do - - len - - te do-len - -

Third system of musical notation. The lyrics are: gra - - ve. Sdegno a - - te e gra - - ve. Sdegno amor pietade ed i-ra mi f'ag-gi-ra mi f'ag - -

Fourth system of musical notation. The lyrics are: - mor pietade ed i-ra mal f'ag-gi-ra mal f'ag-gi-ra nel tuo fen mal f'ag - - gi-ra en tro il fen. Sdegno - a mor pietade ed i-ra mal f'ag -

Fifth system of musical notation. The lyrics are: - gi-ra mal f'ag-gi-ra nel tuo fen Sdegno a - - gi-ra mal f'ag-gi-ra Sdegno a - mor pietade ed i-ra mi f'ag-gi-ra mi f'ag -

Two vocal staves with lyrics. The first staff has lyrics: - mor pie-ta-de ed i-ra mal f'ag-gi-ra mal f'ag-gi-ra entro il fen do-len. The second staff has lyrics: - gi-ra en-tro il fen do-len - - te do-len.

Two vocal staves with lyrics. The first staff has lyrics: - te e gra-ve. The second staff has lyrics: - te e gra-ve.

Ritornello.

Four instrumental staves for the Ritornello. The staves are labeled: Viol: 1º, Viol: 2º, Alto Viola, and Basso. The music is in C major and 4/4 time.

Four instrumental staves, likely for the same instruments as the Ritornello, continuing the musical piece.

Maddalena.

Aria del PISTOCCHI.

121

E che fa-re-i mi-se-ra me! mi-se-ra me! E che fa-re-i mi-se-ra me!

Ripreso il fie-ro volto pri-miero il mio de-

-litto tor-nar ve-dra-i dentro a quest' Ani-ma che più non v'è E che fa-rei mi-se-ra me! Il mio de-lit-to tornar ve-dre-i dentro a quest' Ani-ma che più non v'è

E che fa-re-i mi-se-ra me! mi-se-ra me! E che fa-re-i mi-se-ra me!

Aria.

dell'Alessandro SCARLATTI.

Lento

Il mio figlio o-v'è che fa . dove sta la mia gioja il mio tesor. Figlio ov'è che fà. Figlio che fà dove sta? dove sta la mia gioja.

The first system of musical notation consists of five staves. The top two staves are vocal parts in treble clef, and the bottom three staves are instrumental parts in bass clef. The music is in a key with one sharp (F#) and a common time signature. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves.

il mio tesor il mio figlio la mia gioja il mio tesor ov'è che fà? dove sta? che fa dove sta - - - il mio te - for . il mio tesor .

The second system of musical notation consists of five staves, continuing the vocal and instrumental parts from the first system. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves.

The third system of musical notation consists of five staves, concluding the piece. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves. The system ends with a double bar line.

C H A P. III.

Of the OPERA BUFFA, or Comic-opera, and Intermezzi, or musical Interludes, during the seventeenth Century.

IT was the opinion of Muratori^(e), that a musical drama or farce, called L'Anfiparnaso, written and set by the celebrated Orazio Vecchi, and acted and printed at Venice, 1597, was the origin of the OPERA BUFFA, or comic-opera, in Italy; and that learned antiquary seems implicitly to have founded his opinion upon the author's own words; who, in the preface, says, that his performance is an accoppiamento di Comedia e di Musica, non più stato fatto, ch' io mi sappia, da altri, e forse non imaginato: "A union of comedy and Music, never attempted, to his knowledge, nor perhaps ever thought of before." The several Italian states being under different governments, and having but little communication with each other, may account for Orazio Vecchi's ignorance of any attempt at a musical drama before; but Muratori, in later times, should have known what every stranger is able to learn from the general register of dramas of every kind in the Drammaturgia di Lioni Allacci, that besides the Sacrifizio of Beccari, set to Music by Alfonso Viola, at Ferrara, in 1555, there are innumerable musical dramas upon record of a higher date than l'Anfiparnaso of Orazio Vecchi: as I PAZZI AMANTI, rappresentata in Musica in Venezia, 1569; LA POESIA RAPPRESENTATIVA, componimento per Musica, Ven. 1574; LA TRAGEDIA, componimento, Poesia di Frangipani, Musica di Claudio Merula, Ven. 1574 (f); LA POESIA RAPPRESENTATA, componimento Musicale cantato in Venezia, l' anno 1578;

(e) La Perfetta Poesia, lib. iii. cap. 4.

(f) This was performed before Henry III. of France, in his way back to Poland, and is often called the first Italian opera. The personifying tragedy, comedy, and poetry, in the entertainments given to this prince, accounts for the confused narrations of that event: some tell us, that Zarlino set a drama to Music on this occasion, which is very probable, as no less than fifteen pieces, in Latin and Italian verse, were written by various authors to celebrate the arrival, or for the entertainment, of this royal guest.

IL RE SALAMONE, rappresentazione Musicale, cantata in Ven. 1579 (g); PACE, E VITTORIA, rappresentazioni cantata in Musica, in Ven. 1580; PALLADE, componimento per Musica, in Venezia, 1581; and IL FIORE, rappresentazione cantata in Musica, Ven. 1582, &c. most of which were probably sung to the same kind of Music as Vecchi's Comedia Armonica; but to none of them can the title of opera be accurately given, as they all preceded the invention of narrative melody, or recitative, which, in my opinion, can only constitute an opera serious or comic.

As this musical drama seems to have escaped the notice of many Italian writers on the theatre, and as the Music has never been examined by the rest, it renders a discussion of the subject necessary. And in order to give a clear idea of the kind of Music to which this comedy, which now lies before me, was set, I shall score a scene of it for the satisfaction of my readers (b).

The Music of this piece is printed in five separate parts, which are all employed throughout, even in the prologue, which in modern times, is usually a monologue. So that each scene is nothing more than a five-part madrigal in action: for though the whole is in measure, and in five parts, yet all the characters never appear on the stage together, except in the finale or last scene. There are excellent wooden cuts at the beginning of every scene, by which the number of persons employed in it, and their principal business appear.

Drammatis Personæ.

Prologue.
Pantaloön, an old man.
Little Peter, his servant.
Hortensia, a courtesan.
Lelius, a young lover.
Nisa, beloved by Lelius.
Doctör Graziano.

Lucius, a young man in love with Isabella.
Captain Thistle, a Spaniard.
A Burgamask Buffoon.
Isabella, beloved by Lucius.
Frulla, servant to Lucius.
Pickle, servant to Pantaloön.
Jews.

In

(g) This drama may be well called an oratorio.

(b) It is neither mentioned by Crescimbeni, nor in the Drammaturgia; and though Walther gives a list of twelve works which Orazio Vecchi printed between the year 1580 and 1613, the Anfiparnaso is not included. Nor is it enumerated among this author's works by his scholar, our countryman, Peacham. Vecchi ranked very high among the composers of his time; and, according to Santarelli, was the first who used the B quadro or ♮, not merely to express the sound B natural in the diatonic scale, to which it had till then been wholly confined; but as a moveable character, applicable

In the cut preceding the prologue, and several scenes of the piece, as only one figure is represented, though the Music is in five parts, the other four must have been sung behind the scenes.

And as there is nothing like a solo air, or recitative, in the whole performance, it appears that the drama had not yet got out of the trammels of fugue, imitation, and perpetual chorus; and that so much of the church style was still preserved as to render modulation equivocal, and the keys difficult to determine by any rules in present use. The time, too, is as unmarked and doubtful as the modulation; and what little melody there is, by being divided among so many parts in dissimilar motion loses its effect, and must have rendered the words unintelligible even to the natives of Italy.

As there is no overture to this or any of the first musical dramas, we may suppose that the prologue supplied its place. Indeed, no part for an instrument of any kind is printed throughout the piece; consequently, as there was no orchestra, there could be no symphonies or ritornels to the songs, or rather choruses, of each scene.

Every movement throughout this drama begins in common time, and very seldom changes into triple measure. There are no bars, or flats and sharps at the clef. But though it is very seldom that any other sign than that for common time appears: as C, or ♩, yet I am convinced that the measures must frequently have been changed, by agreement, in the performance, to make melody of some passages practicable; which, though extremely difficult and unmeaning in common time, become easy, pleasing, and expressive in triple. And it is not perhaps so much from the change of style and general cast of the melody, that we have lost the expression of old Music, as from our ignorance of the time, not only of the movements, but of the notes themselves, to which great latitude must frequently have been given in the performance; though the composers had not discovered the art of expressing this latitude by the different characters or technical terms, which have since become general. The fragment of a scene, inserted on the following plates, though in five parts, is taken from a soliloquy. If the cable to any other sound that had been altered by a flat or a sharp, which it has the power of restoring to its original pitch in the scale.

author had strictly composed in plain counterpoint, the effect might have been pleasing, though ridiculous. When a single key of an organ is pressed down, as many sounds are produced as there are stops out; so that when the diapason, principal, twelfth, fifteenth, and tierce are out, we have, for each note that is struck, unison, octave, fifth of the octave, double octave, and its sharp third. Fontenelle, in his History of the French Theatre, giving an account of the mystery, or Comedy of the Passion, written by the bishop of Angers about the middle of the fifteenth century, tells us, that “this piece was a kind of opera; for after the baptism of our Saviour, God the father speaks, and it is recommended that his speech should be pronounced very audible and distinctly and at once with three voices, treble, counter-tenor, and base, all well in tune, and in this harmony the whole scene which follows should be sung.” Orazio Vecchi supposing himself the inventor of this harmonious speech, did not know what high authority there was for the practice: however, not content with a triple union, for one of his characters, his interlocutors had all polyphonic voices; which, by his quintuple alliance, rendered the voice of each individual performer a full organ.

Vecchi lived in an age when an opportunity for fugue and imitation was irresistible. In scenes of dialogue such contrivances might have been turned to account; but there is little diversity of style or movement from the beginning to the end of the piece. The language is in general Modenese and not intelligible even to many Italians.

By comparing these specimens with those given of the narrative or recitative style, for a single voice, from Emilio del Cavaliere, Jacopo Peri, Giulio Caccini, and Claudio Monteverde, the legislators of dramatic Music, it appears that Muratori has been guilty of two mistakes in his account of Orazio Vecchi's musical comedy: first, in supposing it to have been the earliest of the kind that was wholly sung from the beginning to the end, without any mixture of declamation, as instances have been produced of eight anterior pieces of the same kind; secondly, in imagining that Rinuccini took this drama for a model, as the dramas which Emilio del Cavaliere set for Florence so early as the year 1597 offered him an example of a

Extract from the Anfiparnaso of Horazio Vecchi. 1597.

127

Atto II^{do} scena I^{ma} Lucio Solo.

Canto.  Mi-fe-ro che fa-ro' Lu-cio in fe-li-ce s'ognomio

Alto.  Mi-fe-ro che fa-ro' Lu-cio in fe-li-ce s'og-

Quinto.  Mi-fe-ro che fa-ro' Lu-cio in fe-li-ce s'ognomio ben Tenore.  Mi-fe-ro che fa-ro' Lucio in fe-li-ce

Baffo.  Mi-fero che fa-ro' Lu-cio in fe-li-ce s'ognomio

 ben m'è tol-to Ah finto A-mor'e ftol-to Ah crudel I-fa-no mioben m'è tol-to Ah finto A-mor'e ftol-to Ah crudel Ah cru-m'è tol-to Ah finto A-mor'e ftol-to Ah cru-del s'ognomio ben m'è tol-to Ah crudel

 ben m'è tol-to Ah finto A-mor'e ftol-to Ah cru-del I-fa-bel- - - ia che per novello Amore che per novell' Amor mi del I-fa-bella che per novello Amor mi

 che per novello Amore novello Amor mi

 I-fa-bella che per novello Amor mi bel- - - ia che per novell' Amor mi fei fei rubel la. Ma nel più alpestre mon - te io vad' hor hora fei ru - bella. Ma nel più alpestre mon - te i' vad hor ho - ra Perche rubella. Ma nel più alpestre monte ma nel &c per - che fei ru - bel - la. Ma nel &c vad' i' vad' hor hora per che ru - bel - la. Ma nel più alpestre mont' i' vad hor ho - ra perche

Don - na cru - del Don - na nel' ultim' hora fia fati o il tuo de fio Don - na cru - del col preci - pi - tio mio Don - nel' ultim' hora fia &c Don - na cru - del Don - na
 &c Don - na cru - del
 &c fia fati o il tuo de fio col preci pi tio mio Don - na crude col preci - pi - tio mio col preci - pi - tio mi - o.

 nel crudel col preci pi - tio mio col preci - pitio mi - o.
 cru - del col preci - pi - tio mi - o col precipi - tio mi - o.
 col pre - ci - pi - tio mio col precipi - tio mi - o.
 cru - del col preci - pi - tio mi - o.

species of Music much more dramatic than the madrigal style of Vecchi, which was precisely that which Rinuccini and his learned Florentine friend wished to avoid.

When and where the first opera buffa was performed, in stilo recitativo, I have not been able to ascertain. There was a mixture of comic characters in almost all the musical dramas of the last century; however, in 1641, soon after the introduction of serious operas upon the Venetian stage, we find the comic-opera of La Finta pazza, written by Claudio Strozzi, and set by Saccati, and La Ninfa avara, written and set to Music by Benedetto Ferrari, in the list of the musical dramas of that year. And among those performed at Rome and Bologna, about the same time, though the Music is not easy to find, the words have been preserved in many collections of poems. The famous opera of Orontea, first set by Cesti 1649, as mentioned elsewhere, was a tragi-comedy; as was the opera of Erismena set by Cavalli in 1655, of which also an ample account with specimens of the Music have been given. But at this time, air, which was scarcely separated from recitative, had not two distinct characters, as at present, for serious and comic purposes; for the subjects of comic-operas, during the last century, were seldom so farcical as those of modern burlettas, and therefore were less likely to suggest such gay, grotesque, and frolicsome measures (i). Indeed, we learn but little of the burletta Music of Italy till the comic-operas of Latilla, Ciampi, and Galuppi, were performed on our stage, of which we shall have occasion to speak hereafter.

Intermedii or Intermezzi.

The ancient Romans frequently had satiræ performed between the acts of their regular comedies; and these were afterwards exhibited as farces, at the end of pious pieces (k).

(i) Tragi-comedies in Music had a very early admission on the stage at Bologna, during the last century: as Andromeda Tragico-comedia, set by Girolamo Giacobbi, Maestro di Capella of S. Petronio, and founder of the academy de' Filomusi in that city, was performed in 1610, and Amore vuol gioventù, Scherzo drammatico, at Viterbo, 1659; Musica di Giambatista Mariani, 1659. But the only real burlettas, which I have met with, are Girella, Dramma burlesco, set by Pistocchi, 1672, which was represented at Venice by little figures of wax; I due Diogeni, Dramma burlesco per Musica, and Agrippina in Baja, Scherzo Drammatico per Musica, were both performed at Ferrara, 1687.

(k) See Quadrio, Tom. V. p. 43.

The mimes at first supplied the place of choruses in Roman dramas; and to these succeeded singing, according to Diomedes (l). Of what this singing consisted, is not known, as none of the songs are come down to us; but it is natural to imagine it to have been a species of cantata, resembling perhaps the ancient scolia of the Greeks, written upon some moral subject.

The modern Romans or Italians can deduce all their dramatic customs and characters in a regular series from their ancestors, except Music in counterpoint. And in their most early attempts at theatrical exhibitions in the vulgar tongue, they had intermezzi between the divisions of each piece. In many of the most ancient mysteries that were declaimed without Music, hymns or psalms were sung between the acts, and printed with these pieces. And in their first regular comedies, they had singing and instrumental Music between the acts. Crescimbeni (m) says, that in a farce written by Damiano, and printed 1519, there were verses in ottava rima prefixed to every act, which were sung to the sound of the lyre or guitar, by a personage called Orpheus, who had no other employment. At other times a madrigal was sung between the acts, under the title of chorus, in imitation of the ancient comic writers, who introduced singing and Music between the acts in the time of Horace instead of the choruses, which the Greeks had to their comedies as well as tragedies. Each act of the old Italian comedies had an argument or prologue, and sometimes both. In the old mysteries this argument or prologue was always spoken or sung by an Angel: l'Angelo nunzio.

Short pieces, called Intermezzi in Musica, preceded operas in air and recitative, near fifty years (n). Quadrio, however, says that they were at first only madrigals and canzonets (o). And adds, that in later times, recourse was had to intermedij or madriale between the acts of a play or opera, chiefly when the principal piece was feeble, or the performers not of the first class.

(l) Lib. iii.

(m) Coment. Vol. I. p. 197.

(n) Risorgimento d' Italia, Tom. II. p. 277. But Quadrio, Tom. III. p. 83, mentions Intermedij by Giambatista Strozzi, in a comedy called Il Comodo, by Landi, printed at Florence 1539.

(o) Tom. V. p. 503.

In a book entitled Descrizione degl' Intermedii, for the arrival of the arch-duke of Austria, in Florence, 1569, "composed by the "most learned and ingenious Alessandro Striggio, nobilissimo gentiluomo," as he is called in the preface, these intermezzi are mere madrigals (p).

Intermezzi were written for the Aminta of Tasso, and printed with several editions of that celebrated pastoral; as were those written by Guarini himself for his Pastor fido. And these, as well as the Intermezzi of the Filli di Sciro of Bonatelli, printed 1619, were nothing but simple madrigals. The public, however, being soon tired of these eventless and inactive choruses, more animated scenes of humour and character were instituted in their stead.

But they do not seem always to have been confined to subjects of low humour and buffoonery: in 1623, L'Amoroso Innocenza, a tragi-comic pastoral was acted at Bologna, con gl' Intermezzi della Coronazione di Apollo, per Dafne convertita in Lauro, written by the author of the piece. The Music of the intermezzi was composed by Ottaviano Vernizzi, organist of the church of S. Petronio, in the same city.

However, buffoon intermezzi in Music were in high favour during the early part of the present century. What they were at Venice about the year 1721 is very well described by Mr. Wright, a good judge of Music (q).

"The intermezzi, or intermediate performances, which they "have in some of their smaller theatres between the acts, are very "comical in their way, which is somewhat low, not much unlike
"the farces we see sometimes on our stage. They laugh, scold,
"imitate other sounds, as the cracking of a whip, the rumbling
"of a chariot wheels, and all to Music. These intermezzi are in "recitativo and song, like the operas. But such entertainments, "between the acts of an opera, similar in the manner but different "in subject, seem to interrupt the unity of the piece itself. And

(p) Alessandro Striggio's compositions were in great favour in England during the reign of Queen Elizabeth; and his works are often cited by Morley in his Introduction.
(q) Travels into Italy, Vol. I. printed 1730.

“ if they will have such mirth excited, it should seem better at the “ end of the performance, as the petite piece in France, and the “ farces, with us, after a serious drama.”

A collection of these scenes, or little dramas, was published at Amsterdam, in two volumes, 1723, at which time few operas would go down without this coarse fauce. Indeed, their favour continued increasing in Italy, for more than ten years after this period, as I find Pertici and Fozzi employed at Rome in the year 1732, to sing in the intermezzi of the operas of Berenice and Cajo Fabrizio, set by Sarro and Hasse; and about the year 1734, was first performed at Naples, the celebrated intermezzo of La Serva Padrona, set by Pergolesi, which, sixteen years after, made so many converts to Italian Music in France, and gave birth to Rousseau's excellent Lettre sur la Musique Francoise, and to disputes which are not yet ended. But this charming Music, which all the rest of Europe so much admired, was so little noticed in Italy during its first performance, that the name of the Serva Padrona, as an intermezzi set by the celebrated Pergolesi, is not to be found in the last edition of the Drammaturgia accresciuta e continuata fino al l'anno, 1755!

It seems, however, as if Pergolesi's success in this little musical farce had been the despair of all his brethren; for we hear of no more intermezzi after the year 1734, about which time they seem to have been superseded in favour of dancing, and indeed of good taste, to which these farces, however comic the words, and ingeniously set, acted, and sung, must have been always offensive. Rousseau has well observed, that when the action of a drama is interrupted, either by an intermezzo, a dance, or any other amusement foreign to the principal subject of the piece, every art becomes independent, and the interest of the audience entirely annihilated. For this reason, says he, the Italians have at length banished comic intermezzi from their opera: for however agreeable, piquant, and natural such spectacles may be in themselves, they are so ill placed in the middle of a tragic action, that the two pieces mutually destroy preceding effects, as the one can only interest at the expence of the other.

C H A P. IV.

Of CANTATAS, or narrative Chamber-Music.

THE secular Music of Italy, has never been in an absolute rude state for more than two centuries. It has been burnishing during that period, but can hardly be said to have wanted a file. On the contrary, ours, and that of every other part of Europe, a hundred years ago wanted a rasp, a pruning-knife, a pair of sheers, a mattock, and a spade. Indeed, that of Germany before Keyser, of France before Lulli, and of England before Purcell, wanted every thing which cultivation, imitation, and a total change of style have since given it.

As cantatas were first suggested by the musical recitation of the opera in which the chief events were related in recitative; in like manner they received several progressive changes during the last century, previous to their perfection. First, they consisted, like opera scenes, of little more than recitative; with frequent formal closes, at which the singer, either accompanied by himself or another performer on a single instrument, was left at liberty to shew his taste and talents.

The next change was in having a single air, generally in triple time, distinct from the recitative, and repeated to different stanzas after each narrative part of the poem, like modern ballad airs. At this time the term Da Capo not being in use, the air was written over again, as often as it was wanted, sometimes in exactly the same notes, but more frequently, with little changes and embellishments to the same base, and to different stanzas.

It has been said (r), that "Da Capo is a new invention; that it was unknown to Colonna in 1688, and was first used by Alessandro Scarlatti, in his Theodora, 1693; and that in 1715, there was not an air without it in Gasparini's opera of I Tartara

(r) Traité du Melodrame, p. 142. note *.

" alla

“ alla China.” But this chronology is by no means exact, as may be proved in the cantatas as well as operas of the last century.

In Cesti's opera of Orontea, performed at Venice 1666, there are frequent returns to particular portions of the airs, more indeed in the manner of a refrein or burden, than Da Capo, or Rondo; but in the opera of Enea, performed at Genoa 1676; in that of Aurora, set by Zanetti, and performed in the same city 1678, there is a constant Da Capo, or return to the first part of each song. And this is a more early period than that of any opera that I have found set by Alessandro Scarlatti. The practice seems to have begun about the year 1660; and in 1661, I find it sometimes used in the opera of Clearco, set by Tenaglia, and performed at Rome. In the motets, à voce sola, di Monferrato, printed 1673, Da Capos occur; about which time it grew frequent; and before 1680, it appears to have been in constant use.

It has been observed, that madrigals for voices alone, and afterwards for instruments in unison with the several vocal parts, constituted the chief Music that was performed in the chamber, and in private concerts, till solo songs, accompanied by a single instrument, were brought into favour by Caccini and his imitators, in Italy and other parts of Europe.

Giulio Caccino detto Romano tells us, in 1615, that though he was born at Rome, he had spent thirty-seven years at Florence, and had begun to sing solo songs in his plain but expressive manner, in order to make the words more intelligible than they were in the madrigals and motets of the times. He does not seem to claim the invention of recitative, though it is given to him by the poet Grillo, who, in a letter of thanks to him for the admirable manner in which he had set some of his poems, particularly I Pietosi affetti, which had been sung before the pope, and some other madrigals of his writing, says, “ we are indebted to you for the “ invention of a new species of Music; for singing without air, or “ rather for a melodious kind of speech, called recitative, which is “ noble and elevated, neither mangling, torturing, nor destroying “ the life and sense of the words, but rather enforcing their energy
“ and

“and spirit. This most beautiful manner of singing is your own,
 “and perhaps a lucky recovery of the ancient and long lost method
 “of singing used by the Greeks and Romans; an idea in which I “am the more confirmed, by hearing the beautiful pastoral of Ri“nuccini sung to your Music; which all those who complain of “the absurdity of always singing in chorus, even in dramatic poetry “and representation, agree to admire. In short, this new Music is “now universally adopted by all persons of good ears and taste;
 “from the courts of Italian princes it has passed to those of Spain, “France, and other parts of Europe, as I am assured from un“doubted authority (s).”

In the second volume of Doni's works is inserted (t) a discourse, sent by Giovanni de' Bardi, to Giulio Caccini, upon the Music of the ancients, and the art of singing. It discovers the author's great reading, but conveys little other information. Indeed, the parade of having studied the Music of the ancients is always more likely to gratify the vanity of a superficial Dilettante, than augment the useful science of an able professor. Caccini, I think, must have been a young student indeed, to be dazzled by such learning; when, in order to recommend simplicity to him, Bardi says, that in the many hundred songs composed by the great musician Olympus, he never touched more than four strings of his lyre (u).

The reader may perhaps be curious to know what kind of Music it was that Caccini, the best singer of the last century, produced; particularly, as he is said by Doni, Bardi, and all the Florentine writers and musical reformers, to have been the chief inventor of that grace and refinement in composing and singing monodie, monologues, or single songs, which had been adopted by persons of taste all over Italy. And being in possession not only of his opera of Euridice, printed in score at Venice 1615, but of his Nuove Musi-

(s) This letter is dated 1600.

(t) Page 233.

(u) The late Jean Jacques Rousseau did me the honour to send me an air of his own composition, Sur trois notes. But this was an experiment, and sent as a curiosity; not that the author, fond as he was of the Spartan customs, wished, in imitation of their treatment of Timotheus, to cut the super-numerary strings of every lyre, to his own standard in this trichord song.

che, or new Compositions for the Voice, published likewise in that city the same year, I shall give specimens from this last work, upon which a judgment may be formed of the justice with which these praises were bestowed; and a comparison made between his Music and that of his predecessors and contemporaries, as well as modern productions.

Two things seem likely to happen in the perusal of this Music: those who are acquainted with the operas of Lulli, will find a great similarity between his style and that of Caccini; and contrapuntists will soon discover, that however his melody was admired at the time, the composition is neither correct, nor ingenious (x). We must therefore ascribe some of its success to simplicity, poetry, and expression; and the rest to that spirit of party against madrigalists, and the authors and admirers of other kinds of full and learned Music, which at this time ran high in Italy.

Though we are now inclined to wonder how pleasing effects could be produced by such simple, unadorned, and almost unaccompanied melodies; yet, when we consider what raptures were long after excited in France by a similar Music in the operas of Lulli, our wonder will cease; particularly, if we recollect that the passages of taste and embellishment, which are now antiquated and vulgar, were then new and elegant; and that the expression of the Music of this period in Italy is so entirely lost, that, like a dead language, no one is certain how it was pronounced.

The first detached narration that I have found, in stilo recitativo, is the Lamento di Didone, or complaint of Dido, in a work entitled Le Musiche del Cavalier Sigismondo d' India, lib. v. printed in Venice 1623, folio. This story, as well as the Lamentation of Jason over his children, murdered by Medea, and the Complaint of Olimpia to Bireno, from Ariosto, are all set by this composer, who was like-

(x) Pietro Della Valle, the most candid and best judge of Music of all the writers on the subject at this time, after speaking of the share which Caccini had in the invention of recitative, and improvement of dramatic Music, says, "but for his own more early composition, con buona pace di lui, "non ci trovo tanto buono."

Op. di Doni II. 251.

For

Deh, deh dove son fu-gi-ti Deh dove son spa-ri-ti gl'oc-chi de' quali er-
 - ra-i Io son cener o-ma-i au-re aure di-vi-ne ch'errate pe-re-grine in questa parte in quel-la Deh re-ca-te novel-la dell'al-ma lu-ce Io-ro Au-re ch'io mene mo-ro Deh re-Au-re ch'io-mene mo-ro.

Madrigale, a voce sola.

Dolci-fi-mo fospi-ro ch'esci da quella bocca ove d'amor o-ve d'a-
 -mor d'ogni dol cezza-fioc-ca deh-deh vieni a raddol-
 -ci-re l'a-ma-ro mio do-lo-re Ecco ch'io ta-pr' il co-

Aria

wife his own poet, in pure recitative, without the least change of measure or mixture of air, except now and then a formal close, of which recitative was not as yet divested.

Adami tells us, page 194, that Giovanni Domenico Poliaschi Romano, admitted into the pope's chapel 1612, composed several cantatas in a good style, and in the best taste of singing, which were printed 1618; and page 195, that the Cavalier Loreti Vittorij da Spoleto, soprano in the pope's chapel 1622, and one of the first evirati employed in musical dramas on the stage, was a celebrated composer of Arie, e CANTATE da Camera.

The first time, however, that I have found the term CANTATA, used for a short narrative lyric poem, was in the Musiche varie a voce sola del Signor Benedetto Ferrari da Reggio, printed at Venice 1638; which is twenty years more early than the period at which the invention of cantatas is fixed by some writers, who have given the honour to BARBARA STROZZI, a Venetian lady, who, in 1653, published vocal compositions, under the title of CANTATE, Ariette, e Duetti. Ferrari, detto della tiorbo, for his excellence performance on that instrument, was one of the earliest composers of operas for Venice. Of the two first musical dramas that were performed in that city, 1637 and 1638, Ferrari was only the poet; but in 1639, he was author both of the words and Music of the opera of Armida, as he was of several subsequent musical dramas.

In 1638, a line seems to have been drawn between recitative and air, in the burlesque cantata of the Cavalier Tarquinio Merula, on the subject of Marcus Curtius leaping into the gulf: Curtio precipitato (y). Here we have not only long divisions at the closes

(y) This composer abounded in whimsical conceits; he has composed a four-part song to the article hic, hæc, hoc, as it is declined in the Latin Grammar, through all its cases, singular and plural. And, as if one such piece of pleasantry were not sufficient to amuse himself and friends, he has likewise made a madrigal of qui, quæ, quod. If this had been done in order to ridicule the almost total indifference of contrapun-tists in general, about this time, as to the choice and expression of the words they set to Music, the satire would have been just and laudable; but in his serious compositions he seems to have been possessed of no more delicacy or intelligence in these particulars than his contemporaries. It must, however, be owned that there is rather more melody and motion given to the several parts of his compositions, than theirs.

in the recitative, but frequent changes of measure, and movements in triple time, distinctly different from recitation (z).

The word CANTATA, according to Du Cange, was used in the church as early as the year 1314, to express what we at present mean by anthem, with which it is still synonymous in Germany; being chiefly confined in the Lutheran church to sacred Music. The Romish church had many admirable sacred cantatas during the last century, by Carissimi, Graziani, Bassani, and others. And during the present century, Domenico Scarlatti set one at Rome for Christmas Eve, which was performed in the Apostolic palace, 1717. Bononcini set another, 1729, for the same occasion and place. The difference at present between sacred cantatas and motets seems to be the recitative.

The secular cantata is a species of composition extremely well suited to the chamber, in which fewer parts and great effects, and less light and shade are necessary, than in ecclesiastic or dramatic Music; for the performance being in still life, and the poet and musician without an orchestra or choir to assist in painting the stronger passions, composers aimed, for a long time, at no effects out of the power of a single voice and a single instrument to produce.

Cantatas of considerable length, accompanied by a numerous band are usually performed in Italy on great occasions of festivity: as the reconciliation of princes after long disunion, or the arrival of great personages in the capital of a state. Thus, when pope Ganganelli and the King of Portugal were reconciled, in 1770; and soon after, when the present Emperor arrived at Venice, on his first visiting

(z) These mixtures of recitative and air, were afterwards called Arie se Cantate, in a work published at Venice 1655, by SEBASTIAN ENNO, which is called libro secondo. In this little book, in long 8vo, of only four staves on each page, I find, for the first time, the following musical terms to express the different degrees of quick and slow in the performance of the several movements: Adagio, for adagio; Più adagio; Affettuoso; Presto; Da Capo se piace; Allegro. And in the Cantate da camera a voce sola, published at Bologna 1677, by GIO. BAT. MAZZAFERRATA, not only all these technical terms occur, but Vivace, Largo, and Ardito. Though these songs are called cantate, in the title-page, yet in the running-title they are styled canzonette; a name that Metastasio has given to his charming lyric poems called La Primavera, L'Estate, La Libertà, La Palinodia, and La Partenza, which have been often set as cantatas, and so called, when recitative and different airs have been employed.

Italy,

Italy, cantatas were sung at Rome and Venice equal in length to an opera. But these differ essentially from what is usually meant by a cantata or monologue for a single voice, consisting of short recitatives, and two or three airs at most; as they are occasional poems in which several singers are employed; but though in dialogue, they are performed, like oratorios, without change of scene, or action.

Such languid and whining recitative as that of Emilio del Cavaliere, Jacopo Peri, and Caccini, is now only fit for the serious French opera, where it has been continued, from the time it was first brought to Paris by Lulli, to the death of Rameau, and by his disciples and admirers, to the present time. At first it was not sufficiently distinguished from air in Italy, if any thing then might be called air; but it would perhaps be more accurate to say, that it then admitted too much singing, too many long notes and formal closes, for dialogue and narration. Monteverde accelerated its march a little; but it was not till after the middle of the seventeenth century, that recitative received its last laws and true character from the productions of the admirable Carissimi and Stradella.

Recitative and air being separated, and brought to a general standard in the composition of cantatas about the middle of the last century, specimens of style need only be given when a composer of superior genius considerably outstripped his contemporaries, and by some bold and vigorous effort, added to the common stock of melody, harmony, modulation, or contrivance, something that has been generally approved by the public, and adopted by professors. To trace invention and improvements of this kind to their source, seems at once the most necessary and difficult part of a musical historian's business.

No composer of the last century was more the delight of his contemporaries or more respected by posterity than GIACOMO CARISSIMI, Maestro di Capella of the German college at Rome. Kircher, in his Musurgia (a), describes his Music and its effects in terms of high panegyric; and speaks of him as a master then living, 1650, who had long filled the place of composer to the Collegio Apollinare with great reputation. He began to flourish about the year 1635, and, according to Mattheson (b), was living in 1672. His productions are very numerous, though it does not appear that he ever composed for the theatre.

(a) Tom. I. p. 603.

(b) Chrenpforte, p. 135.

His sacred and secular cantatas, and motets, have always had admission in every collection of good Music. It has been often asserted by musical writers that he was the inventor of cantatas; but it has already been shewn, that these scene da camera, or monodies, had a more early origin. Carissimi, however, must be allowed not only the merit of transferring the invention from the chamber to the church, where he first introduced cantatas on sacred subjects, but of greatly improving recitative in general, rendering it a more expressive, articulate, and intelligible language, by its approximation to speech and declamation.

Many of Carissimi's works are preserved in the British Museum(c), and in Dr. Aldrich's Collection, Christ-church, Oxford.

In a beautiful cantata on the death of Mary Queen of Scots, beginning: Ferma, lascia, ch'io parli (d), he seems to have been the first who gave the true form to the cadence of recitation, at this passage:

He has, however, in the same cantata several formal closes, which belong only to air and melody, such as:

The following passage, which connects with the preceding, is however very beautiful and pathetic (d):

as is the last close of this recitative:

(c) No. 1265, 1272, and 1501.

(d) British Museum, No. 1265.

(e) Carissimi never writes a sharp at the clef, nor a flat, unless on B; though he frequently composes in keys that require three or four.

— à Dio ru - bel - le di mia Tra - ge - dia, e spet - ta - trice, e fce - na.

The airs of this cantata are simple and pathetic, of which the following fragment is a specimen.

Air by CARISSIMI, in his Cantata on the Death of Mary Queen of Scots.

Adagio.

A mo - ri - re, à mo - ri - re, à mo - ri - re - -

Per ser - bar - - Giustizia, e Fede più non: va - glion le co - ro-ne. Che se be - ne,

Io ref - to e sangue la cof - tanza al mio duol mesce Eli - fi - re che se be - ne Io resto e - sangue la cof - tanza al mio duol mesce Eli - fi - re. A mo - ri - re, à mo - ri - re, à mo - ri - re - Ee

There is something interesting in the most trivial compositions of this admirable master, and in his works may certainly be traced more traits of fine melody than in those of any composer of the seventeenth century. Of twenty-two of his cantatas preserved in the Christ-church Collection, Oxon. there is not one which does not offer something that is still new, curious, and pleasing; but most particularly in the recitatives, many of which seem the most expressive, affecting, and perfect, that I have seen. In the airs there are frequently sweet and graceful passages, which more than a hundred years have not impaired. It is, however, in the divisions of this, and of all old Music, that the time when it was composed, and the changes of taste, are chiefly discoverable. These are the fashionable forms and trimmings, which soon give way to others; but the principal ground-work, or materials, if good at one time, would not lose their value at another.

hundred

A commentary on these cantatas would occupy too much space in this work; and, unless I could exhibit them, entire, to the musical reader's view, would convey but little information; however, some fragments are so beautiful and fresh, that I cannot help allotting them a place, on the following plates, as authentic memorials of musical expression and refinements with which the genius and intelligence of Carissimi had enriched the art, about the middle of the last century.

The fragments No I. II. and III. are from pathetic movements in his cantatas, preserved in the Brit. Mus. and which seem as if they could never be old or common. No III. according to Pacchierotti, still constitutes a part of the musical language of the Sicilians.

IV. Pathetic expression, and curious modulation, from the Oxford manuscript.

V. and VI. Fragments of Siciliana.

VII. Is plaintive and can never be vulgar.

VIII. Puts us in mind of Purcell; and IX. of more modern composers.

X. Elegant imitations.

XI. The whole movement, whence this is taken, furnishes melody, harmony, and modulation, to the beauties of which the greatest masters of modern times have added but little.

XII. Is a graceful and pleasing air, the motivo of which has been often used in the present century. The divisions in this and in several of Carissimi's chearful movements were not disdained, long after, by Corelli and Handel.

XIII. This single air, without recitative, seems the archetype of almost all the arie di cantabile, the adagios, and pathetic songs, as well as instrumental slow movements, that have been since made.

XIV. Is a musical phrase that still retains its bloom.

The XIX. of his cantatas, in the Ch. Ch. Col. is truly a curiosity, throughout, for the recitative, modulation and comic cast of some traits in the melody. This seems the finest model for a base song, that I have ever seen. It was certainly composed for a voice of that kind, of uncommon compass and flexibility (f); all the closes are particularly of that character, and in a grand and majestic style; it begins Olà, pensieri.

The last of these twenty-two cantatas contains many refinements and subtilties of composition, that are thought new and recherchés at present, when used by the first professors in Europe.

XV. Is taken from a dialogue, or duet, between Democritus and Heraclitus, in which Carissimi has given a curious example of the contrast and effects of our two genera of major and minor keys; for nearly the same melody, which is chearful in a major key, when repeated in the minor, has all the pathetic of a different style, time, and arrangement of notes.

Besides his numerous cantatas, duets, trios, and four-part songs, Carissimi's compositions for the church, where he first introduced instrumental accompaniments, discover more genius, elegance, and design, than those of any preceding or cotemporary composer. Stradella's untimely death perhaps only prevented him from writing as much, and as well, as Carissimi.

Kircher (g), the cotemporary of Carissimi, after a just eulogium on his compositions in general, and telling us that he had the power of exciting in his hearers whatever affection he pleased, speaks of his oratorio of Jephtha, and the new and admirable effects produced in it by his knowledge of harmony, modulation, and happy expression of the passions. The chorus in his sacred drama: Plorate filie Israel, which follows the lamento della figlia di Jephtha, is as remarkable for the accuracy of fugue and imitation, as for its plaintive expression.

According to Mattheson (b), the famous German composer, (f) The compass, of two octaves, from the highest D in the base to the lowest, is the same as that of Purcell's famous anthem, "Out of the deep."

(g) Musurgia, Tom. I. p. 604.

(b) Chrenpforte, p. 135.

Mus. Collect. N^o 1272. N^o 17. Fragment I.

Al meno un pen fiero che iam - - po del core fi doni fi doni fi doni a chi mo - - ri fi doni fi doni a chi mo - - ri.

Ib. N^o 9.

Sovrail fend'a la - ta prora fidar l'alma ad auram ta - bile e partir da chi s'ado - ra e in tormento impare - - gia - bi le e in tormen - - to impa - - re gia - bi le

Ch. Ch. Collect. Cantata 9

Ib. Cantata I

Jo disse sempre che la mare e mor - - te. IV In sonno placido le luci languide

Ib. Cantata III

già l'addormenta - no. V E bello l'ardire d'un'anima forte d'incontra la morte per no bil de - fi - re.

Ib. Cantata XVI

da che la beltà mostrando pie - tà bel tempo per me sen'an - do.

VII. Deh deh contentatevi ch'io mi lamenti VIII. Quanto colui s'in gan na che quest anima amante per Nobile fsembiante per troppo teme raria hoggi con danna quanto quanto co - lui s'in gan na è un a qui la il mio core che l'occhio del pensier IX. Si con giu - ri contro me la for tu na quanto fa f'armi a dan - ni di mia fe in geg - no - fa crudel tà ingegno - fa crudel - tà Per fi degna ca gion glo ria di mo - ri - re Per fi degna ca gion glo - ria di mo ri re. X. Non chie - de al - tro che vi - ta un che fi mo - re che vi - ven cel ci - tà,

Ib. 10.

XI. E fardo Cupido a nostri tormen - ti con tanti lamenti nulla impe -

Musical notation for system XI, measures 10-11. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

- tro l'ab - ban - do - nata Di - do E muto Ve muto Cupi - do languite esclama te chiedi te pietà te Musical notation for system XII, measures 12-13. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

Ib. 14.

XII. Si dia bando alla speran - za alla speran - za Si dia bando alla spe Musical notation for system XIII, measures 14-15. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

Più ran - za alla spe - ran - za e del feno e dal core chin a - mo - re non val più fe - de no - non Musical notation for system XIV, measures 16-17. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

val più fe - de no - non val costan - za non val cof - tan Musical notation for system XV, measures 18-19. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

- za chin a - mo - re non val più fede no - non val più fe de no - non Musical notation for system XVI, measures 20-21. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

val costan - za non val cof - tan - za Si dia

Musical notation for system XVII, measures 22-23. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

bando alla speran - za al la speran - za Si dia bando alla spe - ran - za

Musical notation for system XVIII, measures 24-25. Treble and bass staves with lyrics.

XIII.

XV.
Democritus

Duet.

From Kircher's Musurgia.

Heraclitus

Kerl the younger, was sent by the Emperor from Vienna to Rome, in 1649, to receive lessons from Carissimi; who is said to have acquired a considerable fortune by the exercise of his profession, and to have lived to the age of ninety (i).

He appears to have been the favourite composer and model of Dr. Aldrich, who was possessed of a complete collection of his works, which he scored with his own hand, and seems to have studied with great attention. And Purcell manifestly formed his style on the productions of Carissimi and Stradella, particularly in his recitative and secular songs.

Fra MARC' ANTONIO CESTI has already been honourably mentioned as an opera composer; but he is entitled to more distinction as an early improver of recitative and vocal melody in cantatas. There is a great collection of the cantatas and motets of Cesti in Christchurch, Oxford, by which it appears that recitative was much polished by this composer, who furnished it with many new idioms and forms of musical speech which are not to be found in the musica narrativa of his predecessors. Instead of several formal closes, which are so common in the recitation of the first operas, we frequently find in the cantatas of Cesti the true cadence of musical speech distinct from air; as in the following passage of the Christchurch manuscript, page 6.

Del ricercar qual sorte su la mano dis - te - sa il ciel mi scrisse

Donna Egizia mi disse.

(i) Essai sur la Mus. Tom. IV. p. 460.

And as for melody, were a collection to be formed of the most elegant and striking passages of the best composers of the last century, which are still, and ever must remain, pleasing, in the same manner as the beauties of our best poets and moral writers have been selected, the works of Cesti would supply a very considerable number. Indeed, such a collection would leave but little to subsequent composers who have been the most celebrated for originality and invention. It might check modern vanity, and stop disputation concerning unjust claims; individuals would have their proper station allotted them; and justice would be done to those gifted mortals whose inspirations have been adopted by the most judicious and accomplished musicians of succeeding times. But such a compilation, with whatever integrity it may be made, and however just the design, might have an invidious appearance, and instead of being regarded as the only true and intelligible history of musical invention, might seem the work of a partizan, undertaken with the invidious view of injuring the reputation of posterior artists.

I shall, however, on the following plates, give a few fragments from the works of Cesti, in the same manner as has already been done from those of Carissimi.

LUIGI ROSSI, one of the earliest composers of cantatas, is celebrated in 1640, by Pietro della Valle, in his letter to Guidiccioni cited above, for his grave canzonnette, particularly that which begins: Or che la notte del silenzio amica. Many of his cantatas are preserved in all collections which include the Music of the last century, particularly in the Brit. Mus. Bibl. Harl. 1265 and 1273, and in Dr. Aldrich's Collection, Christ-church, Oxon.

His cantata, la Fortuna, in the Museum Collection, No 1265, is of an immeasurable length. The recitative, however, with formal closes, has pleasing expressions in it, that still live. No Da Capo, or sign of reference appears in his cantata, and he writes twice or three times over, the same airs; a trouble which these expedients would have spared. He seems to have started several flimsy divisions, which afterwards became common; and, indeed, it appears from his cantatas, that as soon as secular Music had di-

FRAGMENTS

This, with another Close, will be always graceful and pleasing.

N^o 1.

Se non cu - ri il parlar mi - o vedi il prato e fen - ti il ri - o

II.

D'a - maran - to ric - co manto fe m'ingan - na April ri -

CORELLI and HANDEL adopted this Base.

den - te po - co du - ra mia ven - tu - ra al - fof &c

III.

Bel - ta fu - ga - ce. Ben - mio da morte Ben mio da morte

V.

In fegna - te mia mo - ri - re crudelis - si - me crudelis - si - me stel - le In feg - nate mia mori - re amo - ri - re.

VI.

Ah ftere fe - ve - re almen almen per non ve dermi si col tanti fof - fri - re.

These were favorite Passages with STEFFANI.

VHS

VII. Sol dun - que i miei tor - men - ti per me resi immor - ta - li.

VIII. Quanto siete per me pi - gri pi - gri o mor - men - ti.

Curious changes of Measure.

IX. Per des - tar mi agl' affan - ni il tem - po dor - me il tem - po dor -

- me per des - tar mi agl' affan - ni il tem - po dor - me il tem - po dor - me.

Division in a Motet by CESTI. used by HANDEL in his Overture of Saul.

X. &c

From the same Motet. see CORELLI'S Sonatas.

XI. &c

Another favorite Passage with CORELLI.

D^o HANDEL.

XII. &c

vested itself of the pedantry of perpetual canons, fugues, and multiplied parts, another vice crept into the art, by the frequent and excessive use of divisions. Luigi, in songs for a single voice, has some of this kind as long as those in modern bravura airs.

In the Magliabecchi library at Florence, I found the scene of an oratorio called Giuseppe figlio di Giacobbe, Opera spirituale, fatta in Musica da Aloigi de Rossi, Napolitano, in Roma. And under the name of Rossi many of his compositions may be found in the Museum.

The following plates will exhibit some of his peculiarities and happy licences, which have been adopted by subsequent composers, as well as others which should be avoided.

Luigi, in his motets that are preserved in Christ-church Collection, appears to have been as able to write, à capella, in many parts with learning, as with elegance in few.

Don GIOVANNI LEGRENZI, of Bergamo, has been already mentioned as a dramatic composer, at Venice, for the theatres of which city he produced fifteen operas, between the year 1664 and 1684. He was likewise a favourite composer of cantatas, of which he published at Venice two books: one of ten, in 1674; and a second book containing fourteen, in 1679. During his youth he was some time organist of Santa Maria Maggiore, in his native city of Bergamo; then Maestro di Capella of the church dello Spirito santo, in Ferrara; and lastly of St. Mark's at Venice, and master of the Conservatorio de Mendicanti. He was the master likewise of the two great musicians, Lotti, and Francesco Gasparini, both of whom are said to have resided in his house at Venice, in the year 1684, in order to receive his instructions.

Among the musical manuscripts, purchased at Rome in 1770, one that ranks the highest in my own favour, was the music-book of SALVATOR ROSA, the painter, in which are contained, not only airs and cantatas set by Carissimi, Cesti, Luigi, Cavalli, Legrenzi, Capelline, Pasqualini, and Bandini, of which the words of several are by Salvator Rosa; but eight entire cantatas written, set, and transcribed by this celebrated painter himself. The book was purchased of his great grand-daughter, who inhabited the house in which her ancestor lived and died. The handwriting was ascertained by collation with his letters and satires, of which the originals are still preserved by his descendants. The historians of Italian poetry, though they often mention Salvator as a satirist, seem never to have heard of his lyrical productions; and as this book is not only curious for the Music it contains, but the poetry; I shall present my readers with a particular account of its contents, which, being chiefly cantatas, belong to this chapter.

ed

The first composition in this manuscript was luckily a scene in Cesti's opera of Orontea, which it would have been difficult to have found elsewhere; for of the many hundred operas that were composed for the different theatres of Italy during the last century, except two or three that have been printed, an entire copy in score of any one of them, before the time of Alef. Scarlatti and Bononcini, has hardly been preserved (k).

II. Is a cantata by Capellini, a composer of no great eminence; yet there is in it a very pleasing air in triple time of $\frac{3}{2}$, in which the crotchets are expressed by minims hooked or tied like quavers.

III. Is an elegant simple air, by Legrenzi, sung to two different stanzas; and as the vocal compositions of this master are somewhat scarce, I shall present my readers with a copy of it.

IV. Is a beautiful Siciliana by Cavalli, the composer of Erismena, of which an account is given in treating of the Venetian theatre. As the movement is short and characteristic, I cannot resist the desire of inserting it.

V. Is a cantata, written by Salvator Rosa, and set by Cesti. Recitative had not, as yet, banished formal closes, or regular modulation, which encroached too much upon air, and destroyed its narrative and declamatory plainness and simplicity.

Salvator was either the most miserable, or the most discontented of men. Most of his cantatas are filled with the bitterest complaints, either against his mistress, or mankind in general. In this he says that he has had more misfortunes than there are stars in the firmament, and that he has lived six lustres (thirty years) without the enjoyment of one happy day.

(k) For the scene in Orontea, see p. 67.

Fragments from Luigi Rofsi's Cantatas.

157

Example of the 7th resolved upwards

Early use of the extreme Sharp 6th.

Questo picciolo rio che con lingua d'argento mormo

Divisions which first appeared in his works, & which afterwards became very common.

rando accompagna il mio la men to Stelle che rimi ratte con pieto fo pal

Only one b placed at the Clef in C Minor.

Iore il mio grave languire il mio do lo re. Gelosia di a poco a poco nel mio cor fer pan do va'

Aria del Legrenzi.

Dolce pace del cor mio, dove fei? dove fei? chi ti ru bò, chi ti ru bò. dimmi al' menqual fato rio fuor del fen-ti di fac ciò dimmi almenqual fato rio fuor del fen ti di fac'

Air by Cavalli.

Fragment of a Cantata written by Salvator Rosa & set by Bandini see p. 160.

VI. Is a cantata set by Luigi, almost wholly in recitative, which, but for the formality of the closes, would be admirable.

VII. Another cantata by the same composer, of which the words are very beautiful. After promising eternal constancy to his mistress, he says.

*E se la natura avara
Del suo mortal tesoro
Da questa crin mai ti rubasse l'oro,
Povero, ma contento,
Lo vedrò bianco
E l'amerà d' argento (l).*

VIII. A cantata set by Carissimi, in which the melody is impassioned, and the recitative admirable. Too many specimens have already been exhibited of this author's genius and abilities, to render an extract from this composition necessary.

IX. Is a pleasing and natural air, by Marc' Antonio Pasqualini, which is repeated to different stanzas. The composer of this air was admitted into the Papal chapel in 1630; and from the year 1643 to 1670, he was a favourite stage-finger, with a soprano voice. Many of his compositions are preserved in the collections of the time, in which more grace and facility appear than force and learning.

X. A cantata, in which the words are by Salvator Rosa, and the Music by Cesti. There is great strength and imagination in this poetry.

In the church of Santa Maria degli Angeli de' PP. Certosini, at Rome, where Salvator Rosa was buried, there is an inscription on his tomb, at which Crescimbeni, a Florentine, is angry; as it gives him il primato sopra tutti i Rimatori Toscani (m). This, like almost all monumental praise, is certainly hyberbolic; but Salvator's poetry seems to have great merit for its boldness and originality: it is, indeed, somewhat rough, even in his lyrics; and his satires are often coarse; but he appears to me always more pithy than his cotem-

(l) If Nature, niggard of her treasure,
Should rob thy hair of all its gold,
Poor, but content, I still with pleasure
Thy silver tresses shall behold.

(m) Comment. alla Stor. della Volg. Poes.
Vol. IV. p. 213.

poraries, whom Marini's affectation had perhaps enervated and corrupted.

Salvator's cantata, of which we are now speaking, is the incantation of a female, distracted with love, disappointment, and revenge. This lyric poem seems to have furnished ideas to the author of Purcell's Mad Befs.—"By the croaking of the toad," &c. And in Salvator all the charms and spells of the witches in Macbeth are invoked.

— all' incanto, all' incanto,
E chi non Mosse il ciel mova Acheronte.
Io vo magici modi
Tentar profane note
Erbe diverse, e nodi,
Ciò che arrestar può le celeste rote,
Mago circolo
Onde gelide
Pesci varij
Acque chimiche
Neri balsami
Miste polveri
Pietre mistiche
Serpi e nottole
Sangui putridi
Molli viscere,
Secche mummie
Ossa e vermini.
Suffumigij ch' anneriscano,

Voci orribili che spaventino,
Linfe torbide ch' avvelenino
Stille fetide che corrompino
Ch' offuschino,
Che gelino,
Che guastino,
Ch' acidano
Che vincano l' onde Stigie.
In quest' atra caverna
Ove non giunse mai raggio di sole Dalle Tartaree scuole
Trarro la Turba inferna
Farò ch' un nero spirito
Arda un Cipresso un Mirto
E mentre a poco a poco
Vi struggerò l' imago sua di cera
Farò che à ignoto foco
Sua viva imago pera
E quand' arde la finta, arda la vera.

XI. Is a gloomy, grumbling history of this painter and poet-musician's life, in which the comic exaggeration is not unpleasant; but it is rather a satire on the times in which he lived, than a lyric composition. However, it is set by Bandini; but being chiefly narrative, the Music is almost wholly recitative; scarce any measured melody being introduced, except to the first line, which serves as a refrain, or burden.

Cantata. Parole del Salvator Rosa.—Musica del Bandini.

Translation.

*Non a tregua ne fine il duolo mio.
Ricordati Fortuna che son nel mondo,
E son di carne anch' io.
Venne solo alla vita*

No end or truce to grief I find—
O Fortune! bear my case in mind!
Nor let a man of flesh and blood,
Forever o'er his miseries brood;

Per

*Per stentar e partir
Sudar da cane
E tra pene infinita
Speme non ho d'assicurarmi un pane.*

*Per me solo si vede sordo il ciel,
Scuro il Sol, secca la Terra,
Ov' io di pace ho fede
Colà porta il gran diavolo la guerra.
S' io fo' l' Bucato piove (n);
S' io metto il piè nel mare
Il mar s' adira.
Se andasse à l' Indie nove,
Non vale il mio teston più d'una lira.*

*Non vado al macellaro
Benche avessi à comprar di carne un grosso
Che per destino avaro
Non mi pesi la carne al par dell' ossa.
S' io vo à palazzo à sorte
L' anticamera og' nor mi mostra à dito
I satrapi di corte
Con le lingue mi trinciano il vestito.*

*Son di fede Cristiano
E mi bisogna credere a l' Ebreo
Sallo il Ghetto Romano
E il guardarobba mio ser mardocheo.
Non a tregua, &c.*

*S' io non desto, o nel letto
Sempre ho la mente sivalata e varia,
Senz' esser architetto
Fabbrico tutto il di castelli in aria.
Villa non ho ne stanza,
Altri an' d' argento in fin' a l' orinale,*

(n) As the author is not very poetical in telling us that it rains whenever he bucks, that is, washes his linen, he has not been closely followed in the translation. It is curious, however, that bucato should be so nearly Eng-

VOL. IV.

Or hither come to toil and sweat
Merely to pay great nature's debt,
And crowd the mansions of the dead
Before his labours give him bread!

Is heaven deaf to me alone?
Barren the earth, and dark the sun?
And where to peace there seems no bar
Shall devils wage eternal war?
If I step forth to see a friend
The clouds a deluge instant send,
And ship I have never been on board
But winds and waves have furious roar'd.
Yet over begg'ry to prevail
Should I to India ever sail,
And coming back 'scape rocks and killing
In purse I should not have a shilling.

At market when provisions fresh
I buy, the bones outweigh the flesh:
And if perchance I go to court
The attendants at my dress make sport,
Point at my garb, thread-bare and shabby,
And shun me, like a leper scabby.

My faith is Christian, sound and true,
Yet, like an unbelieving Jew,
I'm seiz'd without the least contrition,
And hurried to the inquisition.
No end or truce to grief, &c.

Awake, in bed, I castles build,
Which to reflexion instant yield;
And, if asleep, in dreams I feel
More torture than on rack or wheel.
While I have neither house nor home,
Others can dwell in lofty dome;

lish as to imply that kind of washing at a river with lye, which is called bucking, and which gave the name to the basket in which Falstaff was carried to Datchet mead.

S

Ma

*Ricco son di speranza
E per fede commisso ho l' ospidale.*

*Ma di grazia osservate
Quando si sente un caldo dell' inferno,
In mezzo dell' estate
Io marcia col vestito dell' inverno.
Suol dir chi a da mangiare
Che i commodi e i quattrini,
Alfin son sogni che dolce minchionare
Haver pari l' entrate à suoi bisogni.
Oh Dio son pur pittore,
Ne posso figurarmi un miglior sogno!
Sto sempre d'un colore
Ne mi riesce mai alcun disegno.*

*Legni Iberi e Francesi,
Col nocchiero pennello a l' onde io spalmo,
Dono ad altri i paesi,
In tempo ch' io non ò di terra un palmo.*

*Non so che sia Fortuna,
Pago à prezzo di stenti un dì felice,
Non ho sostanza alcuna
E ch' io spero, e ch' io soffro, ogn' un mi dice.*

*Credete al vostro Rosa,
Che senza versi e pitture,
Il mondo è bello e la più sana cosa
In questi tempi e non aver cervello.*

*Ve le dirò più chiare,
Hoggi il saper più non si stima un fico.*

Where e'en of silver, for parade,
The vilest utensils are made.
No other wealth have I than hope
Which shews a work-house, or a rope.

But, pray, observe, when heat infernal,
In summer threats our towns to burn all,
And marrows melt of man and brute,
How I still trudge in winter's suit.
Happy I thought the life I led
If not in want of daily bread,
And that conveniences and wealth
Were useless things in time of health—
And could a painter, senseless wretch?
A plan of life, no better sketch?
Against my skill the powers combine,
Nor let me finish one design.

I woods create in France and Spain,
And vessels riding on the main;
And though I find it hard to live,
With ease to others vineyards give;
With flocks and herds, and fields of corn,
And all that nature's works adorn;
Can set a prince upon a throne—
While not an inch of land's my own.

Fortune to me's a stranger quite,
And makes me pay each short delight
With pain and tears. Substance I've none,
Nor can I from misfortune run.
While all, to whom I tell my tale,
In kindness thus my ears regale:

"And are you, Rosa, so unwise (prize?
"To think the world should pictures
"Or in these giddy thoughtless times
"A value set upon your rhymes?
"No, no, they hate all toil and pains,
"And he'll thrive most who's fewest brains,
"For knowledge none at present dig,
"Nor for your talents care a fig."

Then learn from me, ye students all,
Whose wants are great and hopes are small,

Da

*Da me ciascuno imparare
Che assai meglio è morir ch' esser mendico.
Non a tregua, &c.*

That better 'tis at once to die,
Than linger thus in penury;
For 'mongst the ills with which we're curst
To live a beggar is the worst.
No end or truce to grief, &c.

XII. Is an excellent cantata on the torments of jealousy, set by Luigi, in which there is more air and less recitative than usual at this period.

XIII. Is a single air by Alef. Scarlatti, which must have been produced early in that composer's life; as Salvator, in whose handwriting it is entered in his book, died in 1675 (o); some writers say in 1673. This air contains many beautiful, and then new, traits of melody, of which Vinci afterwards availed himself when he set deb respirar lasciatemi in Metastasio's opera of Artaserse.

Such frequent occasions will present themselves hereafter of bearing testimony to the abilities of this great musician, particularly in setting cantatas, which, in their number and excellence, surpassed perhaps those of all the masters in Europe of his time, that no addition to his character need be made here.

XIV and XV. Are two single airs by Legrenzi, of which the melody is pleasing; they were perhaps sung in operas. The Music of all the rest of the cantatas and songs in this book amounting to eight, is of Salvator's own composition, and is not only admirable for a Dilettante, but, in point of melody, superior to that of most of the masters of his time.

The two first are cantatas, but so ill written as to be difficult to read.

The third begins with a very pleasing air, of which I shall present the reader with the motivo, at No I.

The fourth begins with such a spirited air as the last century seldom produced, see No II. The other two airs in the same cantata are well accented and pleasing, see No III and IV.

In the recitative of the fifth cantata, some of the first true closes occur, that I have met with, in narrative melody, see No V.

(o) Orlandi, Abcdario Pittorico.

There are several airs in this and the rest of the cantatas, on pleasing subjects, and treated in a manner above mediocrity, see No VI. VII. and VIII.

The last is chiefly remarkable for its moving base, see No IX. If we only suppose this cantata to have been composed just before Salvator's death, it will be of a higher date than the publication, or perhaps the existence, of any of Corelli's works, who is supposed to have been the inventor of this kind of pendulum base; which, however, frequently appears in the cantatas of Cesti.

The celebrated singer PISTOCCHI published six cantatas, with two duets, and two airs, one to French and one to German words, about the year 1699; but I have never been able to find the book.

Of the thirty-one different works that were published by GIAMBATISTA BASSANI of Bologna, the last was entitled XII Cantate amoroſe à voce ſola con violini, 1703. Bassani was one of the first who composed cantatas with an accompaniment for the violin, which is so truly adapted to the genius of that instrument, that it is fit for no other; as he has availed himself of the compass of the violin, and the facility which it has in performing passages composed of distant intervals. I shall insert the first symphony to two of his cantatas, No I. and II. to shew the use he has made of the violin in accompanying the voice.

We are now arrived at the golden age of cantatas in Italy, a species of Music that was brought to the greatest degree of perfection, without accompaniments, about the end of the last century and beginning of the present, by the genius and abilities of Alex. Scarlatti, Francesco Gasparini, Giovanni Bononcini, Antonio Lotti, the Baron d' Aſtorga, and Benedetto Marcello; and, at a later period in a more elaborate style, with accompaniments, by Nicolo Porpora, and Giovanbattista Pergoleſi, who seem to have been the last eminent composers that cultivated this species of chamber drama, till it was revived by Sarti.

The most voluminous and most original composer of cantatas that has ever existed, in any country to which my enquiries have reached,

Specimens of SALVATOR ROSA's Composition. 165

Nº I.

Sel - ve voi che le spe - ran - te al gio - ir lie - te fer - ba - te del pia - cer fie - te le stan - te o - ve pas - far degg'io l'ho -
 - re be - a - to del pia - cer fie - te le stan - te do - ve pas -
 - far - - - degg'io l'ho - - - re be - a - te.

Nº II.

Vado ben speso can - giando lo - co ma non so mai cangiar de - fi - o Vado ben speso cangiando lo - co ma non so mai ma non so mai ma - non so mai cangiar de - fi - o.

N^o III

Ne men ti laf cie - ro - quan do mi mo - ro - quan -

- do mi mo - ro - ne men ti laf cie - ro quan do mi mo -

- ro quan do mi mo - ro Ne ro Sem -

- pre fe de le a mante &c

N^o IV.

Vorre i lafciar d'a ma re e vo dicendo al co re e vo di cendo al

N^o V. Recit

co re ritorna in liber ta &c I'alma ma non fo chi di loro av ra la palma.

Recit

grazie lieta f'op po ne alla nemi ca Ar dita.

Salvator Rosa.

167

NO
VI.

Clo-ri bel-la mi lu-fing-a e cor-te-fe Irene al-let-ta quef-to cor quef-to cor che in du-bio fta mi lu-fing-a Clori bel-la Clori bel-la mi lu-fing-a e cor-te-fe Irene al-let-ta quef-to cor - - - quef-to cor che in du-bio fta.

VII.

Cor-tefe un guardo che volga I-re-ne al mio de-fi-re tut-te le pe-ne tutte le pene puo di-le-gar puo di-le-gar - - -

Cortefe un guardo che volga Ire-ne tutte le pe-ne tutte le pene puo di-le-gar star vi - cino al bell' I - dol che f'a - ma è il più Va - go di - let - to d'a -

N^o VIII.

- mor è il più Va - - - - - go di - let - to d'a - mor.

N^o IX.

Più che penfo a tuoi bei rai

più mac - cen - do e m'in - namo - ro più m'ac - cendo e m'inna - mo - ro. &c

Symphonies in BASSANI's Cantatas, for a Violin.

Fragment N^o 1.

Vivace &c

Fragment N^o 2.

Adagio ma spiritoso.

&c

reached, seems to have been ALESSANDRO SCARLATTI (p). Indeed, this master's genius was truly creative; and I find part of his property among the stolen goods of all the best composers of the first forty or fifty years of the present century.

Of this fertile musician's cantatas I was so fortunate, when at Rome, as to purchase an original manuscript containing thirty-five in his own hand writing, that were chiefly composed at Tivoli during a visit to Andrea Adami, Maestro di Capella to the pope, and author of Osservazioni per ben regolare il Coro de i Cantori della Cap. Pontif. published at Rome, 1711. Each of these cantatas is dated; by which we learn that he frequently produced one every day for several days together, and that the whole number was composed between the month of October, 1704, and March, 1705.

In the first of these cantatas it appears, that Scarlatti had not quite discontinued formal closes in his recitatives, nor rosalia in his airs. But many of his most natural and graceful passages are still in use, though the more uncommon and far-fetched have never been adopted; and these are therefore still new.

The violoncello parts of many of these cantatas were so excellent, that whoever was able to do them justice was thought a supernatural being. Geminiani used to relate, that Franceschilli, a celebrated performer on the violoncello at the beginning of this century, accompanied one of these cantatas at Rome so admirably, while Scarlatti was at the harpsichord, that the company, being good Catholics and living in a country where miraculous powers have not yet ceased, were firmly persuaded it was not Franceschelli who had played the violoncello, but an angel that had descended and assumed his shape.

The complaints at present of want of variety and movement in the bases of opera songs compared with old cantatas, which being the sole accompaniment are busy and often beautiful, is unfair. In songs of many parts, if all the parts are busy the ensemble is noise and confusion. In order to preserve a unity of melody in the cantilena, the business of the instruments must be distributed in such a manner as never to render it inaudible.

(b) See 115.

The

The cantatas of Scarlatti are much sought and admired by curious collectors. It must not, however, be dissembled that this author is not always free from affectation and pedantry. His modulation, in struggling at novelty, is sometimes crude and unnatural, and he more frequently tried to express the meaning of single words than the general sense and spirit of the whole poem he had set to Music (q). Yet I never saw one of them that was not marked by some peculiar beauty of melody or modulation. Durante, his scholar, after his decease worked several of his cantatas into duets of the most learned and curious kind, which the greatest masters now living continue to study and teach to their favourite and most accomplished scholars (r).

Having instanced some of his defects, candour requires that a few of his many beauties should be exhibited to the musical reader. I shall, therefore, cite a few short airs and fragments from his cantatas, that appear to me still graceful and elegant, though produced more than fourscore years ago.

No I. Is a short air where the word lungi is expressed by the wide interval of a ninth, but which, in other respects, is pleasing and masterly: see the following plates.

II. Is an elegant air, in which Scarlatti seems the first to omit the shake at a common close, when it is of a pathetic cast, which, at present, is a very fashionable refinement. See the places marked with a +.

III. A Sicilian strain from the same cantata. There is something arch and uncommon at the repetition of the word poco, at the end of the second part.

IV. Scarlatti's recitative is, in general, excellent; for in that, bold modulation is wanted. And in the fragment given at this (q) The word lungi, for instance, in the second and fourth cantata of my collection, he expresses by wide intervals, as he constantly does lontano. At the words cangio in dolore, we have a sudden, violent, and extraneous modulation. And dura, cruda, dolente, strano, &c. were irresistible temptations to wring the ear with crudities.

(r) Several musicians have doubted whether the ground-work of these very elaborate studj was Scarlatti's, among whom was Pacchierotti; but in turning over different volumes of his cantatas in the presence of this admirable singer, while he resided in London, I found, and shewed him, the subjects of every one of the movements.

NO. I. Adagio

Va pur l'un - gi l'un - gi da me l'un - gi da me Liberta

ca - ra Liberta ca - ra ca - ra ca - ra - va pur l'un - gi l'un - gi da me Liberta ca - ra ca - ra Liberta ca - ra.

NO. II. Aria. Adagio e Staccato

Fortunati miei martiri pegni

certi di mia fede Fortunati miei martiri pegni certi di mia fede non partire non partire no non partire non partire mai da me Fortunati miei martiri miei martiri fortunati vere pegni di mia fede non partire mai da me non par - ti - re mai da me vere pegni di mia fede non partire mai da me non parti re mai da me. Clori

VII.

So-li tu-dine a-me - - - ne So-li tu-dine a-me - - - ne ber -

- faglio d'empia forte, ber faglio d'empia forte ec-covi eccovi Irene eccovi eccovi I -

- rene ma che giova oh Dio nar-rarvi l'incoftan-za onde Fi-le-no lafciammi d'ampia filva entro gl'orrori a mi-lurar col pianto i miei do-lo-ri.

VIII.

Adagio

Chiede poco po-co

poco in tan-ti affan-ni questo fido a-man

- te questo fido a-mante cor chiede poco in tanto affanno questo fido fido fido questo fi-do a-mante cor a-man-te a-mante cor.

number, he seems to have expressed the words with peculiar felicity.

V. Corelli, in composing the fine adagio of his eighth concerto, certainly was obliged to this cantata of Scarlatti for more than a hint.

VI. This air is natural, plaintive, and masterly.

VII. Is a curious mixture of air and recitative.

The whole twenty-sixth cantata in my collection is so beautiful, that, if I had room, I should give it entire. Thus far I have allowed composers to speak for themselves as often as possible; but if I continued giving examples of composition as frequently as I wish, and have hitherto done, my work would have more the appearance of a music-book, than a history of the art. The thirty-first, Alfin m' ucciderete, has been transformed into a duet by Durante, and occupies the eleventh place among his celebrated riffattamenti.

VIII. Is the first part of an air in a beautifully simple style, inserted here to shew that Scarlatti is not always scrambling at novelty through unbeaten tracks; indeed, he is never difficult or recherché in his opera airs; and his son, who is so wild and eccentric in his lessons, is uncommonly natural and easy in his songs.

None of these cantatas have ever been printed to my knowledge, or I should not have been so liberal of extracts. Walther specifies only two works, of all this master's productions, that were printed: Cantate a una e due Voci; and Motetti a una, due, tre, e quattro Voci con Violini, both published at Amsterdā; but these are now become more scarce than manuscripts. Indeed, Walther, with all his diligence and exactitude, was totally ignorant of almost all the vocal works of the best and most voluminous Italian composers. Of the instrumental, the Dutch catalogues furnished him with many of the titles; but he never seems to have heard of one of Alex. Scarlatti's hundred and nine operas, or indeed of those of Bononcini, Albinoni, Vivaldi, or even Caldara; though these last were chiefly composed in Germany.

During the residence of Scarlatti at Naples, he had so high an opinion of Francesco Gasparini, then a composer and a harpsichord master of great eminence at Rome, that he placed his son Domenico,

nico, while a youth, to study under him in that city. This testimony of confidence in his probity and abilities gave birth to a singular correspondence between these two great musicians. Gasparini composed a cantata in a curious and artful style, worthy the notice of such a master, and sent it as a present to Scarlatti: Cantata inviata dal Signor Francesco Gasparini al Signor Alef. Scarlatti.

To this musical epistle Scarlatti not only added an air, by way of postscript, but replied by another cantata of a still more subtil and artificial kind, making use of the same words: Cantata in risposta al Signor Gasparini, del Sig. Alef. Scarlatti, Eumana(s). This reply produced a rejoinder from Gasparini, who sent Scarlatti another cantata, in which the modulation of the recitative is very learned and abstruse.

Scarlatti seemingly determined to have the last word in this cantata correspondence, sent him a second composition to the same words, in which the modulation is the most extraneous, and the notation the most equivocal and perplexing perhaps that were ever committed to paper. This is entitled Seconda Cantata del Signor Alef. Scarlatti in Idea Eumana, ma in regolo Cromatico, ed è per ogni professore (t)

FRANCESCO GASPARINI's twelve cantatas, of which the second edition was printed at Lucca, 1697, were the first productions that he published. They are graceful, elegant, natural, and often pathetic; less learned and uncommon than those of Alef. Scarlatti; but, for that reason, more generally pleasing and open to the imitation and pillage of composers gifted with little invention. There is a movement in his second cantata which would remind all who are acquainted with Dr. Pepusch's celebrated cantata, Alexis, of the air "Charming sounds that sweetly languish."

GIOVANNI BONONCINI, whose long residence in England and contentions with Handel are well known, was perhaps the most voluminous composer of cantatas, next to Alef. Scarlatti, which Italy

(s) The word is not in the Crusca nor any other Italian dictionary that I have been able to consult; if it does not imply extraordinary, uncommon, inhuman, it may perhaps be some assumed name of Scarlatti as the member of an academy.

(t) On shewing this very composition to Sacchini, he seemed to see its merit through all its pedantry; and said that it was necessary to look at such Music sometimes, per non essere sorpresa.

can boast. At present none of his compositions will bear any comparison with those of Handel for strength and vigour of genius ; but during his life many of them were more admired on the continent in every part of Europe, for taste, expression, and grace, than by his most violent partizans in England.

In 1721, he published in London Cantate e duetti, dedicated alla sacra Maestà di Giorgio Re della Gran Bretagna. The work is finely engraved on copper in long quarto ; and contains many pleasing and elegant passages for the time when they were composed, with some ingenious harmonies and imitations ; but being less recherchées than the cantatas of the elder Scarlatti, and less elaborate than the songs of Handel, easy and natural were then construed by his opponents into dulness and want of science. However, even Handel himself condescended to use many of his passages and closes in opera songs which he composed several years after this publication. Many of Bononcini's recitatives are masterly and expressive, particularly in his first and eleventh cantatas, where the modulation is bold and learned.

The whole ninth and tenth of these cantatas would be pleasing even now to candid judges of good Music and refined taste, particularly if they attended to the expression and nice accentuation of the Italian language.

In a large manuscript collection of Italian cantatas made in Germany, and already mentioned, there are six by John Bononcini, all with an accompaniment for a violin or violoncello, in which the able and experienced master appears. In several of them there are many pleasing, graceful, and vocal passages, but they are too frequently repeated. His accompaniments to these cantatas for the violin, as well as violoncello, which was his particular instrument, and on which he had acquired great reputation by his performance, shew a knowledge of the bow and finger-board. Among his compositions in this collection, there is a Cantata spirituale for a contralto voice, with a violin accompaniment, of a peculiar character. There are some excellent cantatas extant, by his brother ANTONIO

BONONCINI, which Geminiani and others used to prefer to those of Giovanni.

ANTONIO LOTTI was a composer of cantatas; but upon examining them, it appears that his melody is gone, though his harmony will always be excellent. It is generally in complication, fugue, and Music of many parts, that we must now seek for pleasure from the works of old masters.

His disciple, however, the illustrious BENEDETTO MARCELLO, composed a great number of cantatas, of which the vigour of conception and ingenuity of design please me more than his celebrated psalms.

The cantatas of BARON D'ASTORGA are much celebrated; yet several that I have lately examined did not fulfill the expectations excited by his high character and the composition of his elegant and refined Stabat Mater. The three best that I have seen begin: Quando penso; Torne Aprile; and In questo core. In these there is expression, grace, and science devoid of pedantry. But late refinements in melody have rendered our ears fastidious and unjust to the simplicity of the last age, however elegant its garb. At some of the closes, the Baron's good taste in singing is very manifest.

ANTONIO CALDARA, so many years composer to the emperor at Vienna, published twelve cantatas at Venice, 1699, six for a soprano, and six for a contralto voice. There is a copy of this work in Dr. Aldrich's Collection, Christ-church, Oxon. but having never heard or examined them, I am unable to speak of their merit. However, the compositions of other kinds which I have seen of this author are so excellent, that there is great reason to presume them worthy the rank he bears among the professors of his time.

D. ANTONIO VIVALDI merits a place among the candidates for fame in this species of composition: several are inserted in the collection mentioned above; but these, and all that I have seen elsewhere, are very common and quiet, notwithstanding he was so riotous in composing for violins. But he had been too long used to write for the voice, to treat it like an instrument.

The

The cantatas of NICOLA PORPORA have been always much esteemed, on account of the excellence of their recitatives, and the good taste and truly vocal style of the airs. But by confining himself rigidly in his songs and cantatas to such passages as are only fit for the voice, his cantatas will seem to want spirit when tried upon an instrument. And perhaps the art is more indebted to this master for having polished and refined recitative and measured air, than for enriching it by the fertility of his invention.

PERGOLESI's cantatas will be considered elsewhere. But cantatas, which were composed with more care, and sung with more taste and science than any other species of vocal Music, during the latter end of the last century and beginning of the present, seem to have been wholly laid aside, after the decease of Pergolesi, till revived by Sarti, who has set, in the manner of cantatas, several of Metastasio's charming little poems, which he calls canzonette. These exquisite compositions were produced by Sarti expressly for the voices of Pacchierotti, Marchesi, and Rubinelli, and are, in all respects, the most perfect and complete models of chamber Music that have ever come to my knowledge.

Indeed, it is to be lamented that a species of composition so admirably calculated for concerts as the cantata, should now be so seldom cultivated: as it contains a little drama entire, having a beginning, a middle, and an end, in which the charms of poetry are united with those of Music, and the mind is amused while the ear is gratified. Opera scenes, or single songs, now supply the place of cantatas in all private concerts; but, besides the loss which these sustain when taken out of their niche, as they were originally calculated for a numerous orchestra, they can seldom be completely accompanied by a small band.

C H A P. V.

Attempts at DRAMATIC MUSIC in England, previous to the Establishment of the Italian Opera.

ALL theatrical representations and public amusements having been suppressed by the parliament in 1647, no exhibition was attempted till 1656, when Sir William D'Avenant's Entertainment of Declamation and Musick after the Manner of the Ancients, seems to have escaped molestation more by connivance than the protection of government. For though Ant. Wood has asserted, that Sir William D'Avenant had obtained leave to open a theatre for the performance of operas in the Italian language, during the Protectorship, when all other theatrical exhibitions were suppressed; "because being in an unknown tongue they could not corrupt the morals of the people;" yet on a careful scrutiny into the validity of the fact, it seems to be wholly a mistake. Ant. Wood, at this time, had never been in London, and seems but little acquainted with its amusements at any time.

Being in possession of the first edition of Sir William D'Avenant's Entertainment performed at Rutland-house, and printed in 1657, the year after, I shall give an account of the manner in which it was disposed and arranged, from the work itself; which informs us, that "after a flourish of Music, the curtains are drawn and the prologue enters," who speaks in English verse, and talks of the Entertainment being an opera, the only word that is uttered in the Italian language throughout the exhibition. He desires the audience, indeed, to regard the small theatre as "their passage, and the narrow way, to our Elysian field, the OPERA." But not a line of this introduction is set to Music, either in recitative or air; though, after it has been spoken, and the curtains are again closed, "a consort of instrumental Musick, adapted to the sullen disposition of Diogenes, being heard awhile, the curtains are suddenly "opened,

“ opened, and, in two gilded rostras, appear Diogenes the Cynic, and “ Aristophanes the poet—who DECLAIM against and for publique “ entertainments by moral representations.” Then in two prose orations that were spoken, not sung, public exhibitions are censured and defended in the style of that celebrated philosopher and comic writer.

Operas are, indeed, frequently mentioned and described: Dioge- nes manifestly alluding to the splendid manner in which they were then exhibited in Italy, when he says, “ Poetry is the subtle en“ gine by which the wonderful body of the opera must move. I “ wish, Athenians! you were all poets, for then if you should “ meet, and with the pleasant vapours of Lesbian wine, fall into “ profound sleep, and concur in a long dream, you would every “ morning enamel your houses, tile them with gold, and pave them “ with aggots!”

When the Cynic has finished his declamation, “ a consort of Mu“ sick, befitting the pleasant disposition of Aristophanes, being “ heard, he answers him,” and defends operas, their poetry, Music, and decoration, with considerable wit and argument. After which “ the curtains are suddenly closed, and the company entertained by “ instrumental and vocal Musick, with a song.”

“ The song being ended, a consort of instrumental Musick, after
 “ the French composition, being heard a while, the curtains are sud“ denly opened, and in the rostras appear, sitting, a Parisian and a “ Londoner, in the livery robes of both cities, who declaim concern-
 “ the pre-eminence of Paris and London.”

When the Frenchman has finished his Philippic against our capital; after “ a consort of Musick, imitating the waites of London, “ he is answered by the Londoner.” In neither of these harangues is the opera mentioned, which, as yet, had not found its way into either capital. When the Englishman has terminated his defence, there is another song; an epilogue; and, lastly, a flourish of Music;
 after which the curtain is closed, and the entertainment finished.

At the end of the book we are told, that “ the vocal and instru“ mental Musick was composed by Dr. Charles Colman, Captain “ Henry Cook, Mr. Henry Lawes, and Mr. George Hudson.”

By

By this account it appears, that the performance was neither an Italian, nor an English, opera. That there was no recitative, and but two songs in it, the rest being all declaimed or spoken, without the least assistance from Music. It seems, indeed, as if Sir William D'Avenant, by this Entertainment, as it was called, had some distant design of introducing exhibitions similar to the Italian opera, on the English stage, for which these declamations were to prepare the way.

Pope tells us (u), that "The Siege of Rhodes, by Sir William D'Avenant, was the first opera sung in England."

"On each enervate string they taught the note
To pant, or tremble, through an eunuch's throat."

What foundation our great poet had for this opinion, I know not, unless he trusted to the loose assertion of Langbaine, who, in An Account of the English dramatic Poets, says that the Siege of Rhodes, and some other plays of Sir William D'Avenant, in the times of the civil wars, were acted in stilo recitativo.

The first performance of the Siege of Rhodes was at Rutland-house, in 1656. It was revived in 1663, and a second part added to it. In the prologue the author calls it "our play," and the performers, players, not singers. The first part is divided into five entries, not acts; each preceded by instrumental Music. But I can find no proof that it was sung in recitative, either in the dedication to Lord Clarendon, in the folio edition of 1673, or the body of the drama.

It was, indeed, written in rhyme, which, after the Restoration, became a fashion with theatrical writers, probably to imitate the French, and gratify the partiality of Charles II. for Gallic amusements. Such dramas were called heroic plays, and the verse dramatic poesy.

Upon the whole, it seems as if this drama was no more like an Italian opera than the masques, which long preceded it; and in which were always introduced songs, choruses, splendid scenes, machinery, and decorations. But if we might believe Mr. Pope, in the lines just cited, this opera, as he calls it, was not only set to recitative and florid Music, but sung by eunuchs (x)!

(*) Imitations of Horace, Epist. i.

In another piece, however, of Sir William D'Avenant's, The Playhouse to be let, a musician who presents himself as a tenant, being asked what use he intended to make of it? replies, "I would have introduced heroique story in stilo recitativo." And upon being desired to explain himself further, he says, "recitative Music is not composed of matter so familiar, as may serve for every low occasion of discourse. In tragedy, the language of the stage is raised above the common dialect; our passions rising with the height of verse; and vocal Musick adds new wings to all the flights of poetry."

In the third act of this piece, which we are told was in stilo recitativo, we have the history of Sir Francis Drake expressed by instrumental and vocal Music, and by art of perspective in scenes, &c.

Such were the first attempts at Dramatic Music to English words in this country, long before the Music, language, or performers of Italy were employed on our stage.

The word Opera seems, however, to have been very familiar to our poets and countrymen, during the chief part of the last century; stilo recitativo was talked of by Ben Jonson, so early as the year 1617, when it was a recent innovation even in Italy (y). After this it was used in other masques, particularly scenes of plays, and in cantatas, before a regular drama, wholly set to Music was attempted.

But the high favour to which operas had mounted in France by the united abilities of Quinault and Lulli, seems to have given birth to several attempts at Dramatic Music in England.

Sir William D'Avenant dying in 1668, while his new theatre in Dorset Gardens was building, the patent, and management, devolved on his widow, Lady D'Avenant, and his son Mr. Charles, after-

(x) Downes, the prompter, tells us that in 1658, Sir William D'Avenant exhibited another entertainment, entitled The Cruelty of the Spaniards in Peru, expressed by vocal and instrumental Music, and by art of perspective in scenes. These scenes and decorations, according to Downes, were the first that were introduced (on a public stage) in England. Roscius Anglicanus. Mr. Malone (Sup. to Shakspeare) imagines that Cromwell, from his hatred to the Spaniards, may the more readily have tolerated this spectacle.

(y) See Vol. III. p. 346.

wards Dr. D'Avenant, well known as a political writer and civilian, who pursued Sir William's plans. The new house was opened in 1671; but the public still more inclining to favour the King's company at Drury-lane than this, obliged Mr. D'Avenant to have recourse to a new species of entertainments, which were afterwards called Dramatic Operas, and of which kind were the Tempest, Macbeth, Psyche, Circe, and some others, all "set off," says Cibber, "with the most expensive decorations of scenes and habits, and "with the best voices and dancers."

"This sensual supply of sight and sound," continues he, "coming in to the assistance of the weaker party, it was no wonder they should grow too hard for sense and simple nature, when it is considered how many more people there are, who can see and hear, than can think and judge."

Thus men without taste or ears for Music ever comfort themselves with imagining that their contempt for what they neither feel nor understand is a mark of superior wisdom, and that every lover of Music is a fool. This is the language of almost all writers on the subject. The ingenious author of the Biographica Dramatica tells us, that "the preference given to D'Avenant's theatre, on account of its scenery and decorations, alarmed those belonging to the rival house. To stop the progress of the public taste, and divert it towards themselves, they endeavoured to ridicule the performances which were so much followed. The person employed for this purpose was Thomas Duffet," (a writer of miserable farces) "who parodied the Tempest, Macbeth, and Psyche; these efforts were, however, ineffectual." This is fair and historical; but after saying that "the Duke's theatre continued to be frequented;" when he adds, "the victory of sound and shew over sense and reason was as complete in the theatre at this period, as it has often been since," it seems as if sense and reason had for a moment quitted this agreeable, and, in general, accurate and candid writer. Opera is an alien that is obliged silently to bear the insults of the natives, or else she might courteously retort, that nonsense without Music is as frequently heard on the English stage, as with it on the Italian;

Italian; indeed, when Metastasio is the poet, who will venture to say that either good sense or good poetry is banished from the stage?

But it does not clearly appear, because Music and decorations were added to Shakspeare's Tempest and Macbeth, that one theatre was in greater want of sense at this time than another. I have seen the dramas as they were altered by Shadwell and Sir William D'Avenant, and in the latter find that little was curtailed from the original play, or sung, but what is still sung, and to the same Music set by Matthew Lock, of which the rude and wild excellence cannot be surpassed. In the operas, as they were called, on account of the Music, dancing, and splendid scenes with which they were decorated, none of the fine speeches were made into songs, nor was the dialogue carried on in recitative, which was never attempted on our stage during the last century, throughout a whole piece. Indeed, it never fully succeeded in this, if we except the Artaxerxes of the late Dr. Arne; whose Music, being of a superior kind to what our stage had been accustomed, and better sung, found an English audience that could even tolerate recitative. In the censure of these musical dramas, which has been retailed from one writer to another, ever since the middle of Charles the Second's reign to the present time, the subject seems never to have been candidly and fairly examined; and, indeed, it appears as if there had been no great cause of complaint against the public taste for frequenting such representations, particularly those written by Shakspeare, in which the principal characters were performed by Mr. and Mrs. Betterton, as was the case in Macbeth, though Music, machinery, and dancing were profusely added to the treat (z).

The Tempest, the first of these semi-operas, was given to the public early in 1673. And in February of the same year, Psyche. This last was a close imitation of a musical drama written in French by Moliere, and set by Lulli in 1672, in the manner of the Italian operas which Cardinal Mazarine had had performed to Louis XIV.

(z) Of Betterton's merit as an actor every one has heard and read; but Mrs. Betterton, according to Cibber, was "at once "tremendous and delightful," in the part of Lady Macbeth. See his Life, chap. v.

during his minority. The Music of Psyche, as performed in London, was not printed till 1675, when it was published with the following title: "The English Opera; or the vocal Musick in "PSYCHE, with the instrumental therein intermix'd. To which "is adjoyned the instrumental Music in the TEMPEST. By Mat"thew Lock, composer in ordinary to his Majesty, and Organist
 "to the Queen." This publication is dedicated to James duke of Monmouth. There is a preface of some length by the composer, Matthew Lock, which, like his Music, is rough and nervous, exactly corresponding with the idea which is generated of his private character, by the perusal of his controversy with Salmon, and the sight of his picture in the music-school, at Oxford. It is written with that natural petulance which probably gave birth to most of the quarrels in which he was involved. He begins with a complaint of the tendency of his brother musicians "to peck and carp
 "at other men's conceptions, how mean soever may be their own.
 "And expecting to fall under the lash of some soft-headed or hard-
 "hearted composer,"—he sets about removing "the few blocks at "which they may take occasion to stumble," with a degree of indignation that implies an irascible spirit under no great governance. The first objection which he thinks likely to be made, is to the word opera, to which he answers that it is a word borrowed from the Italian, who by it distinguished this kind of drama from their comedies, which, after a plan is laid, are spoken extempore; whereas this is not only designed, but written with art and industry; and afterwards set to suitable Music. In which idea he has produced the following compositions, which, for the most part, are "in their "nature soft, easie, and, as far as his abilities could reach, agreeable "to the design of the poet. For in them there is ballad to single
 "air, counterpoint, recitative, fugue, canon, and chromatick Mu-
 "sick, which variety, without vanity be it said, was never in court "or theatre, till now presented, in this nation." He confesses, however, that something had been attempted before in this way of composition, but more by himself than any other. And adds, "that the author of the drama prudently considering, that
 "though

“ though Italy was and is the great academy of the world for Music and this species of entertainment, yet as this piece was to be performed in England, which is entitled to no such praise, he mixed it with interlocutor, as more proper to our genius.”

He concludes his peevish preface by confessing, that “ the instrumental Musick before and between the acts, and the entries in the acts of PSYCHE were omitted by the consent of the author, Signor Gio. Baptista Draghi; and that the tunes of the entries and dances in the TEMPEST (the dances being changed) were omitted for the same reason.”

Here we have a short history of these early attempts at Dramatic Music on our stage, in which, as in the most successful representations of this kind in later times, the chief part of the dialogue was spoken, and recitative, or musical declamation, which seems to be the true criterion and characteristic of Italian operas, but seldom used, unless merely to introduce some particular airs and choruses: as in the modern Comus, the air, “ On ev’ry hill, in ev’ry dale,” is preceded by the short recitative “ How gentle was my Damon’s air.”

Upon examining this Music, it appears to have been very much composed on Lulli’s model. The melody is neither recitative nor air, but partaking of both, with a change of measure as frequent as in any old serious French opera I ever saw. Lock had genius and abilities in harmony sufficient to have surpassed his model, or to have cast his movements in a mould of his own making; but such was the passion of Charles II. and consequently of his court at this time, for every thing French, that in all probability Lock was instructed to imitate Cambert and Lulli. His Music for the Witches in Macbeth, which when produced in 1674, was as smooth and airy as any of the time, has now obtained, by age, that wild and savage cast which is admirably suitable to the diabolical characters that are supposed to perform it.

In his third introductory Music to the Tempest, which is called a curtain tune, probably from the curtain being first drawn up during the performance of this species of overture, he has, for the first time, that has come to my knowledge, introduced the use of cres- cendo (louder by degrees), with diminuendo, and lento, under the words soft and slow by degrees. No other instruments are mentioned in the score of his opera of Psyche, than violins for the ritornels; and yet, so slow was the progress of that instrument during the last century, that in a general catalogue of Music in 1701, scarce any compositions appear to have been printed for its use.

About this time the attempts at Dramatic Music were frequent; and in order to give us a true taste for such exhibitions, CAMBERT, organist of the church of St. Honoré at Paris, and the first French musician who had tried to set an opera, having quitted France in chagrin at Louis XIV. having taken from him the management of that spectacle and given it to Lulli, came to London, and was appointed master of King Charles the Second's band. His opera of Pomone, written by P. Perrin, seems to have been performed in 1672 at court, in its original language, as no record of it occurs in our dramatic writers; but, according to Giles Jacob, his Ariadne, or the Marriage of Bacchus, translated into English, "was presented" by the Academy of Music, at the theatre-royal, in Covent-Garden, 1674, by the gentlemen of the Academy of Music." I know of no theatre-royal in Covent-Garden at this time, nor do we meet with any mention of an English Academy of Music at this period. It is said, in the Histoire de la Musique, Tom. I. that Cambert, who died at London in 1677, broke his heart on account of the bad success of his operas in England.

Downes, the prompter, tells us that the scenes, machines, dresses, and other necessary decorations of Psyche, cost upwards of £.800, so that, though it was performed eight days together, it did not prove so profitable to the managers as the Tempest.

In 1677, Mr. Charles D'Avenant wrote a dramatic opera called Circe, which was set to Music by John Banister, the king's first violin, and performed under the poet's own direction at the Duke's theatre, with considerable applause. The prologue was written by Dryden, and the epilogue by the Earl of Rochester.

Dryden from this time became an advocate for this species of exhibition, and in 1678, he wrote an opera entitled the State of Innocence.

nocence and Fall of Man; but this production, though printed, was never set or brought on the stage. And after the several essays at lyric poetry and Dramatic Music that have been mentioned, the King's theatre languished without Music and, the Duke's ran in debt with it; so that shaking hands, and uniting their performers and interests, they formed only one company at Drury-lane, in 1682. This union, however, does not seem to have been so advantageous to the managers and actors as was expected; and in 1685, the last year of King Charles II. they appear again to have been separated, and the Duke's company renewing their attempts at opera, in Dorset-garden, with the assistance of Dryden for lyric poet. The times were turbulent, and this great writer, firm to the interest, or at least the wishes, of the court, wrote an allegorical, or rather political, drama, which he calls an opera, by the title of Albion and Albanius; and to render it still more grateful to his royal master, he had it set by a French composer of the name of GRABUT, an obscure musician, whose name is not to be found in the French annals of the art.

This drama, written under the auspices of King Charles II. was rehearsed several times, as the author informs us in his preface, before his Majesty, "who had publicly declared, more than once, "that the compositions and choruses were more just, and more "beautiful, than any he had heard in England." I believe this prince was not very skilful in Music, nor very sensible to the charms of any species of it but that of France, of the gayest kind; however, royal approbation is flattering and extensive in its influence. Unfortunately for the poet and musician, his Majesty died before it was brought on the stage; and when it did appear, the success seems not to have been very considerable (a).

Dryden throughout the preface to this piece, in his usual manner, diffuses entertainment and instruction; and though he proba-

(a) Upon a perusal of this drama, it seems hardly possible, so near a revolution, that it should have escaped condemnation upon party principles; as, under obvious allegories, Dryden has lashed the city of London, democracy, fanaticism, and whatever he thought obnoxious to the spirit of the government at that period. Had Orpheus himself not only composed the poem and the Music but performed the principal part, his powers would have been too feeble to charm such unwilling hearers.

bly had never seen or heard a single scene of an Italian opera performed, his definition of that species of drama, and precepts for its construction and perfection are admirable, and in many respects still applicable to similar exhibitions (b).

He tells us, that "this opera was only intended as a prologue to a play of the nature of the Tempest; which is a tragedy mixed with opera, or a drama written in blank verse, adorned with scenes, machines, songs, and dances; so that the fable of it is all

(b) "An opera," says he, "is a poetical tale, or fiction, represented by vocal and instrumental Music, adorned with scenes, machines, and dancing. The supposed persons of this musical drama are generally supernatural, as gods, and goddesses, and heroes, which at least are descended from them, and in due time are to be adopted into their number. The subject, therefore, being extended beyond the limits of human nature, admits of that sort of marvellous and surprising conduct, which is rejected in other plays. Human impossibilities are to be received, as they are in faith; because, where gods are introduced, a supreme power is to be understood, and second causes are out of doors: yet propriety is to be observed even here. The gods are all to manage their peculiar provinces; and what was attributed by the Heathens to one power, ought not to be performed by any other. If the persons represented were to speak on the stage, it would follow of necessity, that the expressions should be lofty, figurative, and majestic; but the nature of an opera denies the frequent use of these poetical ornaments; for vocal Music, though it often admits a loftiness of sound, yet always exacts a melodious sweetness; or to distinguish yet more justly, the recitative part of an opera requires a more masculine beauty of expression and sound: the airs must abound in the softness and variety of numbers; their principal intention being to please the hearing, rather than to gratify the understanding. As the first inventors of any art or science, provided they have brought it to perfection, are, in reason, to give laws to it; so whosoever undertakes the writing an opera, is obliged to imitate the Italians, who have "not only invented, but perfected this sort of dramatic musical entertainment. We know that for some centuries, the knowledge of Music has flourished principally in Italy, the mother of learning and of arts; that poetry and painting have been there restored, and so cultivated by Italian masters, that all Europe has been enriched out of their treasury. —

"It is almost needless to speak any thing of that noble language, in which this musical drama was first invented and performed. All who are conversant in the Italian, cannot but observe, that it is the softest, the sweetest, the most harmonious, not only of any modern tongue, but even beyond any of the learned. It seems, indeed, to have been invented for the sake of poetry and Music; the vowels are so abounding in all words, and the pronunciation so manly and so sonorous, that their very speaking has more of Music in it than Dutch poetry or song. — This language has in a manner been refined and purified from the Gothic, ever since the time of Dante, which is above four hundred years ago; and the French, who now cast a longing eye to their country, are not less ambitious to possess their elegance in poetry and Music; in both which they labour at impossibilities: for nothing can be improved beyond its own species, or further than its own original nature will allow: as one with an ill-toned voice, though ever so well instructed in the rules of Music, can never make a great singer. The English have yet more natural disadvantages than the French; our original Teutonic consisting most in monosyllables, and those incumbered with consonants, cannot possibly be freed from those inconveniences."

"spoken

“spoken and acted by the best of the comedians; the other part “of the entertainment to be performed by the same fingers and “dancers who are introduced in this present opera (c).”

The tragedy here alluded to was King Arthur, which was not performed till about the year 1690 (d); by which time the fame and productions of Purcell had convinced Dryden, that it was not necessary to import composers from France for the support of what were then called operas in England. Further notice has been taken of this musical drama in speaking of our great countryman's productions for the theatre, as well as those of the church and chamber. As to the eulogy bestowed by Dryden on M. Grabut, some of it, I fear, must be placed to the account of flattery to his royal master Charles II. as well as to this artist, who had been set over the King's band at the decease of Cambert; which not being very agreeable to the Antigallicans of this country, or, indeed, to unprejudiced judges of Music, while we were in possession of a native composer whose genius was equal to that of the greatest musicians of Europe; though from his situation, short life, and the barbarous state of secular Music, during the period in which he flourished, his genius was less cultivated than that of many great professors of later times.

By Dramatic Opera, Dryden, and writers of his time, mean a drama that is declaimed or spoken, and in which songs and symphonies are introduced; differing from real operas, where there is no speaking, and where the narrative part and dialogue is set to recitative.

Cibber (e), speaking of the Dramatic Operas of the last century, tells us, that “the sensual taste for sight and sound was lashed by “several good prologues in those days.” This agreeable and lively writer, however, says very spiritedly afterwards, that when the bombast of Nat. Lee, came from the mouth of a Betterton, the multi-

(c) Langbaine, who published his account of English dramas and dramatic poets in 1691, is silent concerning this tragedy.

(d) This is the plan that has of late years been so successfully followed by Bickerstaff, and others, in the comic-operas, that have appeared on the English stage. To say the truth, though recitative was tolerated in Dr. Arne's Artaxerxes in favour of the airs, sung by favourite singers, we have properly no national recitative, as Mr. Mason has well observed; Essay on Cathedral Music, p. 47. a work in which there are many remarks that do honour to the refined taste of the author in all the polite arts; and are well worthy the attention of our ecclesiastical composers.

(e) Apology for his Life, chap. iv.

“tude no more desired sense to them, than our musical connoisseurs think it essential in the celebrated airs of an Italian opera.” But he speaks like a man ignorant of Music and insensible to its effects. Without a voice and poetry, an excellent air, played by an instrument, has its merit; it is not nonsense to musical ears, like a mere speaking voice which only articulates nonsense. But whatever nonsense was sung at the beginning of operas in England, Cibber lived long enough to hear and read the dramas of Metastasio, which deserve a better title. At an opera, modulated sound is the chief language, it is animated by articulation, figure, and gesture; but still the principal ingredient of our pleasure there is found.

Cibber allows, page 91, that “irresistible pleasure may arise from “a judicious elocution, with scarce any sense to assist it,” yet seems to deny, or forget, the possibility of being pleased with judicious and exquisite singing in the same degree and circumstances. Bad actors and bad singers require good writing and composition to render them supportable; but great actors and great singers make every thing they utter interesting. And page 93, just after speaking of Betterton’s powers, he seems to have stumbled on the following reflexion: “if the bare speaking voice has such allurements in it, “how much less ought we to wonder, however we lament, that the “sweet notes of vocal Music should so have captivated even the “politer world, into apostacy of sense to the idolatry of sound”— But why lament? and why are all lovers of good Music, well performed, to be regarded as ideots, and apostates to sense? Did not the Greeks, the wisest and most philosophic race of men to be found in the annals of the world, delight in Music of all kinds? And is not every civilised and polished nation delighted with Music, in proportion to the progress they have made in the cultivation of the mind? Is it a necessary consequence that every lover and judge of Music should be insensible to the merits of a great actor, and the charms of elocution? Had not Betterton, Booth, and Garrick their share of praise and admiration? and has it been denied to Mrs. Siddons? Are not the subscribers’ boxes at the opera frequently empty on the nights she plays, however good the Music and performance? The prejugé du metier is a little too evident in the old comedian’s account of the power of Music, however however he tried to work himself into candour "It is to the vitiated and low taste of the spectator that the corruptions of the stage of all kinds have been owing. If the public were to discountenance and declare against all the trash and fopperies they have been so frequently fond of, both the actor and authors must have served their daily table with sound and wholesome diet."— This is still supposing Music and every species of lyric poetry trash and fopperies. It is not the business of actors or patentees to be convinced that Music vocal or instrumental ever can be good, however well performed, in any theatre but their own. Dramatic, and melodramatic poets, singers and declaimers, have ever been at war; they open different shops, and there is no good ware but what they sell (f). If men were to be reasoned out of their senses by any one of them, the world would not perhaps be a bit the fitter to live or die in. The opera house is the shop I have most frequented of late years, but not from contempt of theatrical merit elsewhere, which has had its full share both of my time and admiration.

The same sprightly writer (g) urges a stronger objection to these musical dramas, than their want of sense, by saying, that notwithstanding Purcell's operas of the Prophetess and King Arthur, in which the patentees had embarked all their hopes, were set off with the most expensive decorations of scenes and habits, with the best voices and dancers, and though their success was, in appearance, very great, yet the whole receipts did not so far ballance their expence, as to keep them out of a large debt contracted at this time, and which found work for a Court of Chancery for about twenty years following.

It is only in times of distress that managers have recourse to Music and dancing: when the actors are good and in favour, they are sure of the national attention and patronage; but if, as is often the case, the attempts at opera on the English stage are awkward, and the agents possessed of but ordinary talents, this good effect is produced, that, after quickening appetite in the public by abstinence, they return with eagerness to their natural food.

(f) "It has been always judged their natural interest, when there are two theatres, to do one another as much mischief

"as possible." Life of Cibber, p. 164.
(g) Ibid, chap. iv.

C H A P. VI.

Origin of the ITALIAN OPERA in England, and its Progress there during the present Century.

IT has been already shewn that whatever attempts were made at musical dramas in England during the seventeenth century, the language in which they were sung, was always English. The stilo recitativo was, indeed, brought hither from Italy early in that century, by Nicholas Laniere (b); but it was applied to English only. And, afterwards, Henry Lawes and others continued to affect this species of narrative melody in their dialogues and historical songs, till the Restoration, when a taste for French Music prevailed in all our concerts and theatrical Music, in order to flatter the partiality of Charles II. for every thing which came from that nation. About the middle of this prince's reign, the great favour in which the musical drama was held at the court of Lewis XIV. under the direction of Lulli, of which, from the great intercourse between the two nations, frequent accounts must have been brought hither, stimulated a desire in our monarch and his courtiers to establish similar performances in London. And we find that Cambert, the predecessor of Lulli, as lyric composer at Paris, had his opera of Pomone, which was originally composed for the court of Versailles, by what, in imitation of France, was called an Academy of Music, performed in London; and after his decease, that Monsieur Grabut was employed by Dryden to set his opera of Albion and Albanus, in preference to our own Purcell, or any Italian composer that could be found.

The partiality for French Music, or French politics, in England during the short reign of King James II. was not so conspicuous. Nor can any complaints reasonably be made of the predilection of King William and Queen Mary for that nation. We find, however, by the advertisements of the times, that a taste for Italian Music was coming

(b) See Vol. III. p. 346.

coming on before the close of the last century. Indeed, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth the poetry and Music of Italy were much esteemed by the English, and the madrigals of that country served as models to our own masters in cultivating that species of Music. But Italian Music was long talked of and performed in England, before we heard of Italian singing. Reggio, about this time, seems to have been the first who was noticed for his superior taste as a singing master. And now Italian singing seems to be gaining ground in this country, which naturally led to the establishment of operas, in which a variety of performers might have an opportunity of displaying their vocal talents in a style of singing, of which the specimens they had heard afforded lovers of Music so much pleasure.

In 1692, an advertisement in the London Gazette (No 2834.) acquaints the public that “the Italian lady (that is lately come over that is so famous for her singing) though it has been reported that she will sing no more in the consort at York-buildings; yet this is to give notice, that next Tuesday, January 10th, she will sing there, and so continue during the season.”

A fortnight after, this lady is more familiarly called the Italian woman, in the notice given in the Gazette, that she would not only sing at York-buildings every Tuesday, but on Thursday, in Freeman’s-yard, Cornhill.

April 3d, 1693, Signor Tosi, the celebrated author of a Treatise on Singing, advertises “a Consort of Musick, in Charles’-street, in Covent-Garden, about eight of the clock, in the evening (i).

And October 26th, of the same year, it is said (k), that “Signor Tosi’s Consort of Musick will begin on Monday the 30th inst. in York-buildings, at eight in the evening, to continue weekly all the winter.”

In January 1696, Nicola Matteis’s Music, that was performed on St. Cecilia’s day, is advertised. And 1698, his consort of vocal and instrumental Music, in York-buildings. In December of the same year, and at the same place, a new entertainment of vocal Music is promised, through the same channel, by Seigneur Fidelio.

(i) London Gazette, No. 2858.

(k) Ibid. No. 2917.

In November 1702, a confort at York-buildings is advertised in the Daily Courant, "by performers lately come from Rome." November 19th, this Italian confort is repeated; and again in December. On the 26th likewise of this month, a confort is advertised "at Hickford's dancing-school, by Sig. Saggioni of Venice, "in which Sig. Gasparini will play singly on the violin (1)." Gasparini had performed at Drury-lane the 22d of the same month, where he was called in the advertisements "the famous Sig. Gasparini lately arrived from Rome."

The next year, 1703, Sig. Gasparini and Sig. Pétto performed together at the concerts in York-buildings, and Sig. Saggioni lately arrived from Italy composes. They are likewise advertised to accompany the fingers in Purcell's Fairy Queen, at Drury-lane. In March this year, Sig. Francesco had a concert at York-buildings, with songs by Signora Anna, lately arrived from Rome.

May 14th, Sig. Gasparini had a play, the Relapse, for his benefit at Drury-lane, when he performed several new Italian sonatas; and being afterwards repeated, it seems as if they had been favourably received.

June 1st, in the theatrical advertisement for Lincoln's Inn-fields, where the Rival Queens was promised; it is said that "SIGNORA FRANCESCA MARGARITA DE L'EPINE will sing, being positively the last time of her singing on the stage during her stay in England." She continued, however, singing more last, and positively last times, during the whole month; and never quitted England, but remained here till the time of her death, about the middle of the present century. This lady came from Italy to England with a German musician of the name of Greber; and seems to have been one of the first Italian female singers who appeared on our stage; before any attempt had been made at an Italian Opera. We shall have frequent occasions to mention her, hereafter, among the performers in those representations, till the year 1718, when, retiring from the stage, she married Dr. Pepusch.

(1) Hickford's room continued the fashionable place for concerts till Mrs. Corneli's room, Soho-square, the Pantheon, and Hanover-square rooms, were built.

This year, 1703, Signora Maria Margherita Gallia, sister of Marg. de l'Epine, and scholar of Nicola Haym, first appeared at the theatre in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, as a singer.

In July, Italian intermezzi, or "interludes and mimical entertainments of singing and dancing," were performed at York-buildings. This was the first attempt at dramatic Music, in action, perhaps, in the kingdom.

In November, Music at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, by Sig. Olfii, just arrived from Italy. And a subscription concert begins at the same theatre, in which Mrs. Tofts sings several Italian and English songs. This lady, the constant rival of Margarita, was a principal singer in all the first operas that were performed on our stage in English, and in part English and part Italian, before a sufficient number of singers from Italy could be found to perform the whole in the language of that country.

1704. Sig. Gasparini continues to play Italian sonatas at the playhouse (m), and Mrs. Tofts to sing at the subscription Music. There was a prologue and epilogue to this Music, and dances were introduced between the acts of the performance. January 29th, Signora Margarita sings, for the first time, at Drury-lane. At her second appearance there was a disturbance in the theatre, while she was singing, which, from the natural and uncommon effects of rival malice, was suspected to have been created by the emissaries of Mrs. Tofts; an idea the more difficult to eradicate as the principal agent had happened to live with that lady as a servant. But as the law of retaliation is frequently practised on the like occasions by the injured party, it was thought necessary, a few days after, to insert the following paragraph and letter in the Daily Courant, February 8th, 1704. "Ann Barwick having occasioned a disturbance at the theatre-royal Drury-lane, on Saturday night last, the 5th of February, and being thereupon taken into custody, Mrs. Tofts, in vindication of her innocency, sent a letter to Mr.

(m) Corelli's name was not yet mentioned in the advertisements to concerts or musical performances at the playhouses. And the first time I have found any of his works mentioned in the lists of musical publications is in Walsh Catalogue 1705.

“ Rich, master of the said theatre, which is as followeth : Sir, I “ was very much surpris’d when I was inform’d that Ann Bar“ wick, who was lately my servant, had committed a rudeness last “ night at the playhouse, by throwing of oranges, and hissing
 “ when Mrs. L’Epine, the Italian gentlewoman, sung. I hope no “ one can think that it was in the least with my privity, as I assure “ you it was not. I abhor such practices ; and I hope you will “ cause her to be prosecuted, that she may be punished, as she de“ serves. I am, Sir, your humble servant, Katharine Tofts.

“ To Christ. Rich, Esq. at the theatre-royal, Feb. 6. 1704.”

The musical drama, or opera, being at this time cultivated and in general favour on the Continent, a new musical entertainment, “after the manner of an opera,” called Britain’s Happiness, was brought out at both our theatres within a few days of each other : the vocal part of that which was performed at Drury-lane being compos’d by Weldon, the instrumental by Dieupart ; and in that performed at Lincoln’s-Inn Fields, Leveridge was the composer of the whole Music. In June this year, Matthew Lock’s opera of Psyche was revived. And in July, Circe, an English opera, set by Banister in Charles the Second’s time. But none of these musical pieces seem to have drawn together much company, as their run was very short.

1705. We are now arriv’d at that precise period of time, when the first real opera upon an Italian model, though not in the Italian language, was attempted on our stage. Cibber very justly says, in the Apology for his Life, chap. ix. that “ the Italian Opera had “ been long stealing into England ; but in as rude a disguise, and “ unlike itself, as possible, in a lame, hobbling translation, into our “ own language, with false quantities, or metre out of measure, “ to its original notes, sung by our own unskilful voices, with “ graces misapplied to almost every sentiment, and with action “ lifeless and unmeaning through every character.” Of the merit of the performers we are now only able to form a judgment by tradition ; but of the poetry and Music of the first operas, as they are printed, and are now before me, under examination, a fair opinion may

may be deduced of their comparative merit, not only with similar productions of the present times, but with those of the same period in France and Italy.

The first musical drama that was wholly performed after the Italian manner, in recitative for the dialogue or narrative parts, and measured melody for the airs, was ARSINOE QUEEN OF CYPRUS, translated from an Italian opera of the same name, written by Stanzani of Bologna, for that theatre, in 1677, and revived at Venice 1678. The English version of this opera was set to Music by THOMAS CLAYTON, one of the Royal-band in the reign of King William and Queen Mary, who having been in Italy, had not only persuaded himself, but had the address to persuade others, that he was equal to the task of reforming our taste in Music, and establishing operas in our own language, not inferior to those which were then so much admired on the Continent. In his preface to the printed book of the words, he says, that “the design of this entertainment being to “introduce the Italian manner of Musick on the English stage, “which has not been before attempted, I was obliged to have “an Italian Opera translated: in which the words, however mean
“in several places, suited much better with that manner of Musick, “than others more poetical would do. The style of this Musick “is to express the passions, which is the soul of Musick; and “though the voices are not equal to the Italian, yet I have engaged
“the best that were to be found in England; and I have not “been wanting, to the utmost of my diligence, in the instructing
“of them. The Musick being recitative, may not, at first, meet “with that general acceptance, as is to be hoped for, from the audience’s being better acquainted with it: but if this attempt shall “be a means of bringing this manner of Musick to be used in my “native country, I shall think my study and pains very well employed.”

The singers were all English, consisting of Messrs. Hughes, Leveridge, and Cook; with Mrs. Tofts, Mrs. Cross, and Mrs. Lyndsey. This opera was first performed at Drury-lane, January 16th, by subscription; the pit and boxes were reserved for subscribers, the rest of the theatre was open as usual, at the subscription Musics⁽ⁿ⁾. In the Daily Courant, Arfinoe is called "a new opera, after the Italian manner, all sung, being set by Master Clayton, with dances and singing before and after the opera, by Signora F. Margarita de l' Epine." This singing was probably in Italian.
the

Clayton is supposed to have brought from Italy a collection of the favourite opera airs of the time, from which he pillaged passages and adapted them to English words; but this is doing the Music of Arfinoe too much honour. In the title-page of the Music, printed by Walsh, we are assured that it was wholly composed by Mr. Thomas Clayton; and in justice to the masters of Italy at that time, it may be allowed to be his own, as nothing so mean in melody and incorrect in counterpoint was likely to have been produced by any of the reigning composers of that time. For not only the common rules of musical composition are violated in every song,

(n) The Queen's theatre in the Hay-market, since called the opera-house, was not then finished. There were but two theatres now open: Drury-lane and Lincoln's-Inn Fields. Betterton, who was at the head of the Lincoln's-Inn Fields company, removed to the new theatre, built by Sir John Vanburgh, in the Hay-market, April 9th, 1705; when it was opened with a new prologue, written by Sir Samuel Garth, and spoken by Mrs. Bracegirdle. The play was Dryden's Indian Emperor, with singing by the Italian boy. April 23d, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Falstaff by Betterton, with dancing by Mad. de la Val. And on the 24th, a new farce called The Consultation; after which was performed an Indian pastoral, called the Loves of Ergasto, set to Music by GIACOMO GREBER, the German musician who had brought over from Italy Margarita de l' Epine; the part of Licoris by the Italian boy. And this was the first attempt at dramatic Music in the opera-house. The company continued acting plays here till the end of June, when there were three representations of Love for Love, acted all by women. July 20th, according to the Daily Courant, Betterton and his company returned to the theatre in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, where they continued to act till the Queen's theatre was entirely finished. I am the more minute about the first performances in this theatre, as Cibber's account, which has been generally followed by others, is very inaccurate. October 30th, Betterton and his company quitted Lincoln's Inn Fields a second time, and returning to the Hay-market, opened that theatre, not with an opera, but with Sir John Vanburgh's comedy of the Confederacy, which was now acted for the first time. This excellent comedy, though the parts were very strongly cast (Leigh, Dogget, and Booth, being among the men, and Mrs. Barry, Mrs. Porter, and Mrs. Bracegirdle, among the women) ran but six nights successively, though the performance of M. des Barques, a dancer just arrived from France, was added to the entertainment. It was, indeed, repeated once in November, and twice in December, this year; but it was generally found necessary, even in a new theatre, and with so strong a company, to fortify the best plays with dances or Music, and often with both. Sometimes there was singing in Italian and English, by Signora Maria, as lately taught by Signor N. Haym: and sometimes Music composed by Signor Bononcini, and songs by Signora Lovicini, &c. Daily Courant.

but

but the prosody and accents of our language. The translation is wretched; but it is rendered much more absurd by the manner in which it is set to Music. Indeed, the English must have hungered and thirsted extremely after dramatic Music at this time, to be attracted and amused by such trash. It is scarce credible, that in the course of the first year this miserable performance, which neither deserved the name of a drama by its poetry, nor an opera by its Music, should sustain twenty-four representations, and the second year eleven!

Clayton associated with him in this undertaking, Nicola Haym and Charles Dieupart, men of musical abilities infinitely superior to his own; the one performed the principal violoncello in the opera, to which instrument several of the symphonies and principal accompaniments were assigned, and the other the first violin.

The opera of Camilla, written, or rather translated from the Italian of Silvio Stampiglio, by Owen Mac Swiney, and performed by the same English singers as Arfinoe, appeared at Drury-lane by subscription April 30th, 1706, with a prologue written by Mr. Mainwaring. It was represented nine times before the 9th of July, when the Drury-lane company removed to her Majesty's theatre in Dorset-gardens, where Camilla and Arfinoe were again performed. The company returning again to Drury-lane November the 30th, continued from time to time the performance of this first English edition of that celebrated opera.

At the theatre in the Hay-market a subscription was likewise opened for an opera, but very unsuccessfully: for Cibber says, that in order "to strike in with the prevailing novelty, Sir John Vanbrugh and Mr. Congreve, patentees, opened their new Hay-market theatre with a translated opera, to Italian Music, called the Triumph of Love, but this not having in it the charms of Camilla, either from the inequality in the Music, or voices, had but a cold reception, being performed but three days, and those not crowded." This account is exact in no particular, but the bad success of the opera; indeed, that was worse than this celebrated comedian and lively writer has made it; for in the Daily Courant, and other news-papers of the times, I find it advertised but twice: March 7th and 16th; but Cibber had forgotten even the name of the piece, which was not the Triumph, but the Temple of Love. It was set by Greber the German, and could not with accuracy be called Italian Music. The principal singer in this opera was his scholar, Margarita de l' Epine, commonly called Greber's Peg. Then again he errs by saying, that the theatre was opened with this opera; for on January 1st, 1706, Vanbrugh's Mistake was acted, in which Betterton played Alvarez, and Booth Don Carlos; the company continued to act plays only, every night till this opera was brought out; which, after the second performance being laid aside, no musical piece was attempted till April 5th, when Dufey's comic-opera called the Wonders in the Sun, or the Kingdom of the Birds, came out. This whimsical drama was dedicated to the celebrated society of the Kit Cat Club, and furnished with the words of many of its songs, by the most eminent wits of the age, who lent the author their assistance.

Nothing, however, like Italian Music, or fine singing, was attempted in this piece, as the songs were all set to ballad tunes of a true English growth. It was performed only five times, and then seems to have been wholly laid aside, as was every plan for new musical pieces during the rest of the year, at this theatre.

1707. Camilla, which had been performed in English and by English singers, at Drury-lane sixteen times in the course of the preceding year, continued to be acted in the same manner this year.

Indeed, operas, notwithstanding their deficiencies in poetry, Music, and performance, for as yet no foreign composer or captivating singer was arrived, became so formidable to our own actors, that a subscription was opened the beginning of this year, "for the encouragement of the comedians acting in the Hay-market, and to enable them to keep the diversion of plays under a separate interest from operas." Daily Courant, January 14th, Cibber gives a circumstantial account of this humiliating transaction, and speaks of its success with considerable triumph.

But such was now the passion for this exotic species of amusement, even in its lisping infant state, that the perspicacious critic and zealous patriot, Mr. Addison, condescended to write an opera for the same English singers as were now employed in the performance of Camilla and Arfinoe at Drury-lane. And after ten representations of the former, and three of the latter, this long expected drama, drama, for the performance of which a subscription was opened, appeared March 4th, 1707 (o). Mr. Addison, though he had visited Italy, and was always ambitious of being thought a judge of Music, discovers, whenever he mentions the subject, a total want of sensibility as well as knowledge in the art. But this admirable writer and respectable critic in topics within his competence, never manifested a greater want of taste and intelligence in Music than when he employed Clayton to set his opera of Rosamond. Indeed, it seems as if nothing but the grossest ignorance, or defect of ear, could be imposed upon by the pretensions of so shallow and contemptible a composer. But, to judges of Music, nothing more need be said of Mr. Addison's abilities to decide concerning the comparative degrees of national excellence in the art (p), and the merit of particular masters, than his predilection for the productions of Clayton, and insensibility to the force and originality of Handel's compositions in Rinaldo, with which every real judge and lover of Music seems to have been captivated (q).

This opera, in spite of all its poetical merit, and the partiality of a considerable part of the nation for English Music and English singing, as well as fervent wish to establish this elegant species of Music in our country without the assistance of foreigners, after supporting with great difficulty only three representations, was laid aside and never again performed to the same Music (r).

(o) The parts were cast in the following manner :

Queen Eleanor,	Mrs. Tofts.
Page,	{ Mr. Holcombe, usually called the boy
Sir Trusty, keeper of the bower,	{ Mr. Leveridge.
Grideline, his wife,	Mrs. Linsey.
Rosamond,	Sig. Maria Gallia.
King Henry,	Mr. Hughes.
First Guardian Angel,	Mr. Lawrence.
Second Guardian Angel,	{ Miss Reading.

(p) See Spectator, No. 29.

(q) Ibid, No. 5. where he tells us, with a sneer, that Rossi, the poet, "calls Myn-heer Handel the Orpheus of our age; and acquaints the public, that he composed this opera in a fortnight." If Mr. Addison had known the superior excellence of this Music over that of Clayton, or any which had then been heard on our opera stage, the shortness of time in which it was produced would have impressed him with wonder and respect for the author; but trusting to Boileau's unjust and hasty decision, he treats this declaration and Tasso's poetry with equal contempt.

(r) In the year 1733 this English drama was set, as a coup d'essai, by Mr. Thomas Aug. Arne, afterwards Dr. Arne, and performed at the little theatre in the Haymarket; in which his sister Miss Arne, afterwards Mrs. Cibber, performed the part of Rosamond; that admirable actress appearing first on the stage in this character as a singer. The three following airs were admirably set, and remained long in favour: "No, no, 'tis decreed—Was ever nymph like Rosamond—and Rise glory, rise."

The verses of Rosamond are highly polished, and more lyrical perhaps than in any poem of the same kind in our language. And yet this drama is not wholly free from opera absurdities, on which Addison was afterwards so severely pleasant. For instance, the King's approach to the secret bower of bliss, where his fair Rosamond was treasured up from the resentment of his jealous Queen, is always announced and published by a loud concert of military instruments: Act I. Sc. 1.

"Hark, hark! what sound invades my ear?"

"The conqueror's approach I hear.

"He comes, victorious Henry comes!"

"Hautbois, trumpets, fifes, and drums,

"In dreadful concert join'd,

"Send from afar the sound of war,

"And fill with horror ev'ry wind."

It was the fashion in almost all the serious operas that were written in Italy before the time of Apostolo Zeno and Metastasio to mix comic and buffoon characters with the tragic, even in dramme sacri, notwithstanding the severity of some Italian critics upon our Shakspeare for the same practice (s).

And Mr. Addison has fully complied with this custom, in the characters of Sir Trusty and Grideline, which are of the lowest species of comic.

If it cannot be proved that gun-powder was invented and in military use in the time of Henry II. Mr. Addison was guilty of an anachronism in making him ask

"Why did I not in battle fall

"Crush'd by the thunder of the Gaul (t)?"

The loss of Rosamond in the second act of this drama is not compensated by a single interesting event in the third, which drags and languishes for want of her so much, that neither the flat and forc-

(s) Il famoso Shakspeare, attore e autor tragico fiorì dopo la metà del secolo XVI. e non conobbe meglio de' Cinesi le regole della verisimiglianza. Chiuse, com' essi, in una rappresentazione di poche ore i fatti di trent'anni, e restò al di sotto dell' istesso Tespi per non aver saputo separar il Tragico dal Comico.

Stor. Crit. de' Teatri, p. 248.

(t) It is perhaps too frivolous to mention bad rhymes in a work of such length; but modern critics would hardly pass uncensured such as these: plant, scent—unbarr'd, heard—dream, am. It seems, however, as if Mr. Addison's ear for rhyme was no more nice than for Music.

"And leave the arts of rhyme and verse
"To those who practise'em with more suc"cess."

ed humour of Sir Trusty and Grideline, nor the elegant compliments made to the Duke of Marlborough and Blenheim, ever kept the audience awake in the performance.

After the failure of this opera, from the attractions of which such crowded houses were expected, another English opera was brought out at Drury-lane, April 1st, called Thomyris Queen of Scythia, written by Motteux, and adjusted, as he tells us in the preface, to airs of Scarlatti and Bononcini. The recitatives and whole accompaniment of this pasticcio were committed to the care of Mr. afterwards, Dr. Pepusch. Nine representations of this opera, and eight of Camilla, seem to have supplied the musical wants of this theatre till the 6th of December, when VALENTINI URBANI, a castrato, and a female singer called the Baroness, arrived; who, with Margarita de l'Epine, were engaged at Drury-lane to sing in the same opera of Camilla, and making use of Bononcini's Music, performed their parts in Italian, while Mrs. Tofts, Mrs. Lindsey, Mrs. Turner, Ramondon, and Leveridge, performed theirs in English. And in this manner it was repeated three several times: the public being always acquainted in the bills of the day, that the part of Turnus would be performed by Signor Valentini.

1708. By a sudden revolution in theatrical politics, Betterton and his company of comedians, after the performance of Macbeth for the benefit of Wilks, January 11th, abandoned their dominions in the Hay-market wholly to foreign invaders, and uniting with their rivals at Drury-lane, established themselves in their old quarters. Cibber is again erroneous in his account of this transaction, ascribing it chiefly to the arrival of Nicolini in this kingdom. But this performer did not come to England till the end of the year, and the opera phalanx marched from Drury-lane to the Hay-market in January, when on the 14th of that month, under General Swiney, they opened their first campaign. Thomyris, which had been nine times represented before Christmas at Drury-lane, was now performed with greater splendor; and alternately with Camilla, continued in run till near the end of February. The Music of Thomyris, though not of a high class, was superior to any
that

that had been yet heard in all the attempts at operas in this country: the overture was of Bononcini's composition; the first movement is well-written, in Lulli's style; the second would have a turbulent and tumultuous effect, if played by a powerful band; the third, however, is a jig of little merit. As the airs of this opera are not printed in score, it is impossible to judge of their worth in point of contrivance; the melodies are mostly short and simple; those of Margarita and Lawrence have, however, several difficult passages of execution. The singers were Valentini, Hughes, Lawrence, and Leveridge; with Margarita, Mrs. Tofts, and Mrs. Lindsey (u).

In February this year, Signor Cassani, another Italian opera singer from Italy, arrived, who, with new songs, first appeared in the part of Mitius in Camilla. At this time a new subscription was opened, the number of tickets at half a guinea each, not to exceed four hundred. First gallery five shillings, upper gallery two shillings. At the next performance of Camilla, tickets for the pit and boxes were advertised at seven shillings and six pence. Stage boxes ten shillings and six pence. Dances by Miss Santlow, afterwards Mrs. Booth, and others.

At the end of this month was first brought out the pastoral opera called Love's Triumph, under the direction of Valentini, who had the eighth and last representation for his benefit. This drama was written in Italian by Cardinal Ottoboni, and set to Music by Carlo Cefarini Giovanni, detto del violone, and Francesco Gasparini. English words were adjusted to the airs by Motteux; and choruses with dances analogues, after the French manner, were added as an experiment by Valentini, to try whether our taste in dramatic Music inclined most to the French or Italian style. The indifferent success of this opera acquitted us of all suspicion of partiality to the Gallic taste in Music; for after five representations Camilla and Thomyris were performed alternately with Love's Triumph; and when Valen-

(u) Swiney was still sole manager at the Opera house; but it is insinuated by Motteux, in the preface to Thomyris, that Heidegger had selected the Music. This personage afterwards had the address to obtain and keep the management of the opera house during many years of its greatest prosperity; Mr. Pope has honoured him with a place in the Dunciad, which added but little to his notoriety.

ini's benefit was over, March 17th, these two half Italian and half English operas, were the support of the theatre during the rest of the season.

The opera-house opened late the ensuing winter on account of the decease of Prince George of Denmark, who dying October 28th, the theatres were all shut up till December 14th, when a new opera was brought on the stage called Pyrrhus and Demetrius, written originally in Italian by Adriano Morfelli, and set to Music by Alessandro Scarlatti, to which it was first performed at Naples, 1694. It was translated into English by Swiney, the manager, and arranged by Nicola Haym, who composed a new overture and several additional songs, which have considerable merit.

The performance of this drama forms an æra in the annals of our lyric theatre, as it was the first in which the celebrated Cavalier NICOLINO GRIMALDI, commonly known by the name of NICOLINI, appeared. This great singer, and still greater actor, was a Neapolitan; his voice was at first a soprano, but afterwards descended into a fine contralto. The first dramas in which I have met with his name in Italy, were Tullo Ostillo, and Xerse, two operas composed by John Bononcini for Rome, in 1694, in which he performed with the celebrated Pistocchi, the founder of the Bologna school of singing. So that Quadrio has ranked him properly among the great opera singers who began to appear between 1690 and 1700. In 1697 and 1698, I find him the principal singer in the Neapolitan operas; and in 1699 and 1700 again at Rome. From this time till his arrival in England, whither he was drawn, as Cibber informs us, chap. xi. p. 315. by the report of our passion for foreign operas, "without any particular invitation or engagement," he sung at Venice, Milan, and other cities of Italy where the musical drama was established.

Before his abilities as a singer are considered, let me remind the reader of Sir Richard Steele's eulogium upon him, in the Tatler, No 115, as an actor; where, after calling the opera (it was Pyrrhus and Demetrius) "a noble entertainment," he adds, "for my own part
"I was fully satisfied with the sight of an actor, who, by the grace
"and

“ and propriety of his action and gesture, does honour to the hu“ man figure. Every one will imagine I mean Signor Nicolini, “ who sets off the character he bears in an opera by his action, as “ much as he does the words of it by his voice. Every limb and “ every finger contributes to the part he acts, infomuch that a deaf “ man may go along with him in the sense of it. There is scarce a “ beautiful posture in an old statue which he does not plant himself “ in, as the different circumstances of the story give occasion for “ it. He performs the most ordinary action in a manner suitable “ to the greatness of his character, and shews the prince even in “ the giving of a letter, or dispatching of a messenger. Our best “ actors,” continues he, “ are somewhat at a loss to support them“ selves with proper gesture, as they move from any considerable “ distance to the front of the stage; but I have seen the person, “ of whom I am now speaking, enter alone at the remotest part of “ it, and advance from it with such greatness of air and mien, as “ seemed to fill the stage, and at the same time commanded the at“ tention of the audience with the majesty of his appearance.”

The opera prices were raised on the arrival of this performer, the first truly great singer who had ever sung in our theatre, to 15s.
 for the boxes on the stage, half a guinea the pit and other boxes, and first gallery five shillings. By what we can now gather concerning the abilities of Signor Valentini from those who frequented operas at this time, his voice was feeble, and his execution moderate; but “ he supplied these defects so well by his action,” says Cibber, an excellent, and not partial judge of that part of his performance, “ that his hearers bore with the absurdity of his singing
 “ the part of Turnus in Camilla, all in Italian, while every other “ character was sung and recited in English.” And Mr. Galliard, a perfect judge of his merit as a singer, says, that “ though less “ powerful in voice and action than Nicolini, he was more chaste “ in his singing.” Indeed, Tosi, the author of an excellent treatise on singing, is doubtful whether a perfect singer can at the same time be a perfect actor; “ for the mind being at once divided “ by two different operations, he will probably incline more to the “ one

“one than the other; it being, however,” continues he, “much more difficult to sing well than to act well, the merit of the first is beyond the second. What a felicity would it be to possess both in a perfect degree?” And the excellent translator of this work, the late Mr. Galliard, says, in a note on this passage, written 1742, that “Nicolini had both qualities, more than any that have come hither since. He acted to perfection, and did not sing much inferior. His variations in the airs were excellent; but in his cadences he had a few antiquated tricks (x).”

Besides these two performers, with voices and abilities wholly new to an English audience, and who performed the principal parts of Pirro and Demetrio, in Italian, it seems by the printed copy of the Music, as if Margarita and the Baroness had likewise sung their parts in that language; while Mrs. Tofts, except in a duet with Nicolini, Messrs. Ramondon, and Cook, kept to their mother tongue (y).

The airs of this opera are short, simple, and elegant for the time; but as we shall soon arrive at much better Music, examples of the style seem unnecessary. The divisions, indeed, are antiquated and vulgar now, and to have rendered the rest so captivating as to have charmed a whole nation, must have required fine voices and great art in the fingers.

1709. After the six first subscription representations of this opera were over, a new subscription was opened January 5th, at half a guinea the boxes on the stage, the other boxes eight shillings, pit five shillings, first gallery two shillings and six pence, and the second gallery one shilling and six pence. The reason for this abatement does not appear.

On the 19th of this month Nicolini had the same opera at the Queen's theatre for his benefit, and at the same prices, which was the eleventh representation of this motley performance. Indeed, (x) Tosi on Singing, translated by Galliard, p. 152.

(y) I am very glad, for the honour of our nation, that this absurdity was practised, for the sake of the Music, in other countries as well as in England: for Riccoboni, in his General History of the Stage, tells us that at Hamburgh, in the early operas, sung in the Italian manner, “the recitative was in the German language, and the airs generally in the Italian.” English Translation, 2d edit. 1754, p. 212.

the confusion of tongues, concerning which Mr. Addison is so pleasant in the Spectator, seems to have been tolerated with great good nature by the public; who, in Music, as well as words, seemed to care much less about what was sung, than how it was sung.

After performing Pyrrhus and Demetrius once more, the old and favourite opera of Camilla was represented at this theatre for the first time; in which Nicolini appeared in the part of Preneſto, and the rest of the characters were cast in the strongest manner possible. It was now, for the first time, that the Music of Bononcini was performed entire (z).

And this revived opera, and Pyrrhus and Demetrius, were alternately performed till the 2d of March, when a new opera called Clotilda was brought out, for the performance of which the boxes on the stage were again advanced to fifteen shillings. After two representations of this new drama, Pyrrhus and Demetrius was exhibited once, which was followed by two performances more of Clotilda, when it gave way to Camilla, and Pyrrhus and Demetrius. After this it was performed three times, and then wholly laid aside. This opera was composed by Conti, and printed by Walsh, half in English and half in Italian, as it was performed. The composition is not contemptible; and yet it seems to have come into the world and gone out of it so quietly as scarcely to have left any memorials of its existence. After the decease of this short-lived drama, Camilla, and Pyrrhus and Demetrius, were run till the 4th of June, at reduced prices: ten shillings and six pence the boxes on the stage, the other boxes eight shillings, pit five shillings, first gallery two shillings and six pence, and the second gallery one shilling and six pence. On the 14th of May, in the Daily Courant, a new set of scenes, painted by two famous Italian painters lately arrived from Venice, and

(z) It has always been imagined that this Music was composed by Giovanni Bononcini, the celebrated rival of Handel, afterwards, in England; but I can find no proof of it in any one of the many volumes of operas in my possession, or dramatic records that I have been able to consult. Camilla Regina de Volsca, written by Stampiglia, and set by Mare' Antonio Bononcini, the brother of John, for the imperial court of Vienna, about the year 1697, was in such favour all over Italy, that it was performed at Venice 1698; Bologna 1705; Ferrara and Padova 1707; Bologna again 1709; Udine 1715; and a third time at Bologna 1719. And this seems to have been the opera that was performed in England, during 1706, sixteen times; 1707, twenty; 1708, ten; and 1709, eighteen; in all, sixty-four times!

all the other decorations which were represented in the opera of Clotilda, are promised to the opera of Pyrrhus and Demetrius.

June the 4th this year, Nicolini had a concert for his benefit at the opera-house, consisting of vocal and instrumental Music composed by Scarlatti, Bononcini, and others.

September 15th, on a disagreement with the patentee of Drury-lane, Mr. Rich, sen. a considerable number of the principal comedians revolt, and engage to act plays at the opera-house under the management of Swiney. The chief of these were Wilks, Cibber, Dogget, and Mrs. Oldfield. On this occasion great alterations and improvements were made in the theatre, which however well calculated for Music, was, according to Cibber, extremely unfavourable to declamation.

This new republic being joined by Betterton, Estcourt, and many others, plays very strongly cast were acted at the Hay-market theatre till the 28th of October, when the opera of Camilla was performed by the same troop as the preceding winter, with Nicolini at their head; and afterwards Thomyris, and Pyrrhus and Demetrius, mixed with plays, till after Christmas. This last opera was acted in the course of the year thirty times: a very uncommon number of representations for a musical drama at present, with Music and performers, Nicolini excepted, much superior to those of 1709. As operas improved, the hearers became nice and fastidious. The public soon grows familiar with excellence, and treats her like a common woman; and after the first curiosity is satisfied, a great part of an audience become critics, and gratify their vanity more by being the first to discover defects in the performers, than they did at first in pointing out their merit.

1710. The two companies, of comedians and singers, continued to act plays and operas alternately at the Queen's theatre this year, till the month of November. In January, after one representation of Thomyris, and one of Pyrrhus and Demetrius, the musical troop brought out the new opera of Almahide. Neither the poet nor composer is mentioned in the book of the words or printed copy of the Music, which seems all of one style, and that style more like Bononcini's than any other composer of the times. This was the first opera performed in England, wholly in Italian, and by Italian singers; who were Nicolini, Valentini, Caffani, Margarita, and Isabella Girardeau. There were, indeed, intermezzi between the acts, in English, and sung by Dogget, Mrs. Lindsey, and Mrs. Cross; but the opera was wholly Italian in poetry, Music, and performance. There were operas at this time, as at present, generally twice a week; and Almahide was performed before the summer recess fourteen times.

There are frequent feats of execution in the songs of Nicolini and Margarita of a more rapid and difficult kind than are to be found in the operas which preceded this drama; but the divisions appear now antique and awkward. The first violin accompaniment is printed over the voice part of most of the airs, and is frequently busy and ingenious. However, this would now be called mechanical Music; being neither dramatic, passionate, pathetic, nor graceful. If, indeed, the words imply sorrow, it is slow; and in a cheerful scene, it is quick; but there is little enthusiasm, and no elegance.

By the advertisements of March 2d, it seems as if the farce of the School-boy and the rehearsal of a new opera, formed the whole evening's entertainment, for which the prices were: "boxes five shillings, pit three shillings, first gallery two shillings, second gallery one shilling, stage boxes eight shillings, being obliged to begin exactly at six o'clock, by reason of the practice." March 6th, the public was acquainted in the bills, that "there would be a rehearsal of the new opera, in form."

This new opera was Hydaspes, or l'Idaspe Fedele, set to Music by Francesco Mancini, a Roman composer, and brought on the stage in England, May 23d, by Nicolini, who dedicated the libretto, or book of the words, to the Marquis of Kent, then Lord Chamberlain to Queen Anne. This opera was likewise wholly performed in Italian, and by Italians, except an inferior part by Mr. LAWRENCE, which he sung, however, in Italian (a). The other per-

(a) This English singer continued till the year 1717, to perform under parts in Italian operas. His voice was a tenor of considerable agility, as appears by his songs in the opera of Thomyris, which contains more divisions, and of a more difficult kind, than those of any singer then on the opera stage, except the Margarita.

formers were the same as in Almahide. Hydaspes was represented twenty-one times, and seems to have been generally approved.

The lion in this opera gave birth to several pleasant papers in the first volume of the Spectator, particularly No 13. by Mr. Addison, in which the humour is exquisite. This excellent writer, who, at this time, was by no means partial to operas, does justice to Nicolini in speaking of the childishness of the Leonian combat in Hydaspes.—"It gives me a just indignation," says he, "to see a person whose action gives new majesty to kings, resolution to heroes, and softness to lovers, thus sinking from the greatness of his behaviour, and degraded into the character of the London Prentice. I have often wished, that our tragedians would copy after this great master in action. Could they make the same use of their arms and legs, and inform their faces with as significant looks and passions, how glorious would an English tragedy appear with that action, which is capable of giving a dignity to the forced thoughts, cold conceits, and unnatural expressions of an Italian opera."

The Music of Hydaspes seems inferior in merit to several preceding operas in which Alessandro Scarlatti, Gasparini, or Bononcini had any share. The style is feeble, and the passages were insipid and common at the time they were produced.

On November 18th this year, Macbeth was the last play which the company of English actors performed at the Queen's theatre in the Hay-market. After which they returned to Drury-lane, where they began to act on Monday November 20th, leaving the opera house wholly to the lyric Muse. On the 22d, Hydaspes was advertised, when the part of Berenices was announced in the bills to be performed by Signora Elizabeta Pilotti Schiavonetti, and Artaserse by Signor Boschi, two new Italian singers. December 9th, Signora Boschi performed for the first time in Pyrrhus and Demetrius. Schiavonetti remained here, as second woman, till the year 1717. Boschi had a fine base voice, for which Handel composed some of his best base songs. His wife had been a great singer, but was much past her prime when she came to England; she has, however, however, left a name behind her among Italian writers on Music, who speak of her abilities with great respect. She and her husband staid in England at this time only one season; but he returned hither in the year 1720, and continued to sing in Handel's operas till the year 1727.

But before a character is given of the great foreign singers who arrived here after the Italian opera was firmly established in this country, it is but justice to say something of the English singers, who were able by their performance to excite curiosity, give pleasure, and set censure at defiance, when the opera was in its infancy, and regarded by some as an idiot, and by others as a shapeless monster.

To begin then by the performers in Arfinoe, who had not only all the absurdities usually laid to the charge of operas in general to answer for, but at once laboured under bad poetry, bad Music, and total inexperience.

Mr. HUGHS had been a favourite singer at concerts, and between the acts of plays, for several years before he was assigned the part of first man, in the first opera that ever was performed on our stage in the Italian manner. His voice was a counter tenor, as we are told in the dramatis personæ of Thomyris; and, indeed, as the compass of his songs discovers. He continued to perform the first part till the arrival of Valentini, after which he either quitted the stage or the world, for no further mention is made of him either in opera or concert annals.

RICHARD LEVERIDGE had a deep and powerful base voice. It has been said that he performed Purcell's admirable base song, "Ye twice ten hundred deities," which was set on purpose for him in the Indian Queen, written by Sir Robert Howard and Dryden (b). Now as this tragedy came out in 1665, when Purcell was but seven years old, and five years before Leveridge was born, it could not have been at the first representation of this play, but a revival of it (c). He was certainly a stage-finger a considerable time before the expiration of the last century. In 1699, he not only appeared at Drury-lane as a singer but composer, in an English opera called the Island Princess, of which the Music was composed by Daniel Purcell, Jeremiah Clark, and Leveridge. This opera was revived in 1702, and it was specified in the bills that "Mr. Leveridge would perform his own parts of the composition." After this, there was "singing by Mr. Leveridge," announced in almost every advertisement for that theatre, till operas on the Italian plan were attempted, where he had a part assigned him in each as long as English was allowed to be sung in them. He afterwards attached himself to Rich, the manager of Lincoln's-Inn Fields and Covent-garden, at which last theatre he continued to sing in pantomime entertainments till after the middle of the present century, when he was more than eighty years old. I remember his singing "Ghosts of every occupation," and several of Purcell's base songs, occasionally, in a style which forty years ago seemed antediluvian; but as he generally was the representative of Pluto, Neptune, or some ancient divinity, it corresponded perfectly with his figure and character. He was not only a celebrated singer of convivial songs, but the writer and composer of many that were in great favour with singers and hearers of a certain class, who more piously performed the rites of Comus and Bacchus, than those of Minerva and Apollo. He quitted this sublunary world 1758, at eighty-eight years of age.

(b) Though the Indian Queen is printed in the first volume of Dryden's Dramatic Works, 1762; it is likewise printed in those of Sir Robert Howard, to whom it is generally ascribed. Dryden, however, says, in the advertisement prefixed to his Indian Emperor, that it was written as a conclusion of the Indian Queen, "part of which poem was writ by me."

Mrs. TOFTS seemed to have endeared herself to an English audience by her voice, figure, and performance, more than any preceding singer of our own country whose name and excellence have been recorded. Cibber, though he does not speak of Music en connoisseur, and, as an English actor and patentee of a theatre, was an enemy to Italian operas and Italian singers upon a principle of self-defence, probably gives us the general and genuine opinion of his acquaintance, concerning Mrs. Tofts, who, he says, had her first

(c) The following dates will shew the utter impossibility of Leveridge singing a base song, or any song, in 1665:

Henry Purcell born	1658
Indian Queen performed and printed	1665
Leveridge born	1670

musical

musical instructions in her own country, “before the Italian “taste had so highly prevailed, and was then not an adept; what“ever defect the fashionably skilful might find in her manner, she “had in the general sense of her hearers, charms that few of the “most learned fingers ever arrive at. The beauty of her fine pro“portioned figure, and exquisitely sweet, silver-tone of voice, with “peculiar rapid swiftness of her throat, were perfections not to be “imitated by art or labour.”

This performer had songs given to her in all styles; her compass, however, did not surpass the common limits of a soprano, or treble voice. With respect to her execution, of which we are still enabled to judge by the printed copies of her songs, it chiefly consisted in such passages as are comprised in the shake, as indeed did that of most other fingers at this time.

In Arsinoe and Camilla not one division occurs of great length or difficulty; but in Pyrrhus and Demetrius many. However, those of Mrs. Tofts are, in general, easy and common, except in one song, in which there is a very early instance of iteration; and as this seems her Aria d'Abilità in the opera, I shall insert the principal passage among the divisions of this period.

DIVISIONS in the first Operas performed in England.

Hughs, in ARSINOE.

In Camilla.

Mrs. Lindsey, in THOMYRIS.

Mrs.

Mrs. Tofts, ibid.

would arm

Ibid.

Ye pow'rs oh let me know

Hughs, ibid.

The chains of love I wear, I burn, and I de - spair

Pretty warbler help a lover, tune thy Musick to my sorrow

Mrs. Tofts, ibid.

in lamenting, in lamenting, my complaint

Ibid.

if you return

Joy

Ibid.

now de - stroy

This battered passage occurs in a song of Mrs. Lindsey in the same opera; and in Comus, thirty years after.

PYRRHUS and DEMETRIUS
Mrs. Tofts.

Skies

Ibid.

too just

Mrs. Barbier, in ANTIOCO.

Mrs. Tofts, in PYRRHUS AND DEMETRIUS.

Mrs. Tofts quitted the stage in 1709 (d). Her private history, were it known, seems now unnecessary to relate, unless the events in her retirement were such as would interest the reader by their singularity. But though it is publicly insinuated in the Tatler, for Thursday, May 26th, 1709, that she was insane, it seems doubtful whether we are to take this account literally, or whether Sir Richard Steele had not recourse to invention, or, at least, exaggeration, in order to throw a ridicule on opera quarrels in general, and on her particular disputes at that time with the Margarita or other

(d) The talents of this finger and of Margarita de l' Epine gave rise to the first musical factions which we hear of in this country. According to Hughes, author of the Siege of Damascus, their abilities were disputed by the first people in the kingdom. "Music has learn'd the discords of the state, And concerts jar with Whig and Tory hate. Here Somerset and Devonshire attend The British Tofts, and ev'ry note commend;

To native merit just, and pleas'd to see We've Roman arts, from Roman bondage free: [ploy,
There fam'd L' Epine does equal skill em-
While list'ning peers croud to th' ecstatic joy:
Bedford to hear her song his dice forsakes,
And Nottingham is raptur'd when she shakes:
Lull'd statesmen melt away their drowsy cares
Of England's safety, in Italian airs."

female

female fingers. I shall, therefore, refer the reader to the Tatler No 20, and leave the comments to his own ingenuity.

After quitting the stage, by which she is said to have acquired a considerable fortune, she married Mr. Joseph Smith, who was afterwards appointed consul at Venice, where he resided till the time of his death, about the year 1770. He was a great collector of books and pictures, and a patron of the arts in general. The celebrated lady whom he married is said to have been living in 1755.

Mr. LAWRENCE, an English opera singer, has been already mentioned. LEWIS RAMONDON seems to have performed Leveridge's comic part of Delbo, in Arfinoe, at the time the Music was printed; and sung in Camilla, and Pyrrhus and Demetrius, when these operas were performed at the Hay-market. He appears no more as a public singer after this period, but his name occurs as a composer in a collection of songs called the Merry Musician, 1716; and as the editor of "the song tunes in the opera of Camilla, contrived "and fitted to the harpsichord or spinet;" in the title-page of which it is said, "that the lessons being placed on five lines render them proper for a violin and a base." Almost all organ and harpsichord Music till this time was written and printed on six-lines.

Mrs. Lindsey, Mrs. Cross, Mr. Good, and Mr. Cook, had subaltern parts allotted them in early English operas, by which they seem to have contributed but little to their own fame or the pleasure of the public: but many parts of a building are necessary to its construction, which are never regarded as ornamental.

The execution of MARGARITA DE L' EPINE, was of a very different kind from that just described, and involved real difficulties. Indeed, her musical merit must have been very considerable to have kept her so long in favour as a singer on the English stage, where, till she was employed at the opera, she sung either in musical entertainments, or between the acts, almost every night. Besides being out-landish, she was so swarthy and ill-favoured, that her husband used to call her Hecate, a name to which she answered with as much good humour as if he had called her Helen. But with such a total absence of personal charms, our galleries would have made her songs very short, had they not been executed in such a manner as to silence theatrical snakes, and command applause.

Dean Swift, who was no respecter of persons, particularly musical, in his Journal to Stella, Letter xxiv. August 6th, 1711, being at Windsor, says, "we have a music-meeting in our town to-night. I went to the rehearsal of it, and there was Margarita, and her sister, and another drab, and a parcel of fiddlers; I was weary and would not go to the meeting, which I am sorry for, because I heard it was a great assembly."

He talks frequently of the music-meetings this summer and autumn at Windsor, but always with contempt—as, "in half an hour I was tired of their fine stuff." And the fiddlers in revenge would probably have returned the compliment, while the Dean was preaching, and have quitted the church with a similar speech. Puns and politics chiefly delighted the one, and puns and porter perhaps the other; both alike despising what they neither felt nor understood.

There is something so mysterious in the title and history of the singer called the BARONESS, that I am by no means qualified to be her biographer. All that can be said of her with any certainty is, that she was a German who had learned to sing in Italy, and had performed in the operas at several German courts by that appellation before her arrival in England, where she sung in the operas of Camilla, Triumph of Love, and Pyrrhus and Demetrius. In this last she sung a duet with Mrs. Tofts, and three or four songs which required abilities. She was in England and had a benefit in 1711, though she did not sing in the new opera of that year.

ISABELLA GIRARDEAU seems to have been an Italian married to a Frenchman. Isabella Calliari is among the female singers who, according to Quadrio's list, flourished from the year 1700 to 1720. She succeeded the Baroneß at the Hay-market, and appeared first in the opera of Almahide. She had two airs to sing in this opera which required abilities of a very different kind: the first a largo, in which a pathetic expression was necessary, and the second an aria di bravura, which required considerable agility.

Then

The Italian Opera had now obtained a settlement, and established a colony on our island, which having from time to time been renovated and supplied from the mother country, has subsisted ever since. The ancient Romans had the fine arts and eminent artists from Greece; and, in return, the modern Romans supply all the rest of Europe with painting, sculpture, and Music. This last art is a manufacture in Italy, that feeds and enriches a large portion of the people; and it is no more disgraceful to a mercantile country to import it, than wine, tea, or any other production of remote parts of the world. The French have never yet suffered an opera in the Italian language to be performed in their country since the time of Cardinal Mazarin; though of late they have invited to their capital, and employed, the best Italian composers; while the English, who tolerate all religions, have manifested not only a liberal spirit with respect to the Italian Opera, but good taste and good sense. It is universally allowed that the Italian tongue is more sonorous, more sweet, and of more easy utterance, than any other modern language; and that the Music of Italy, particularly the vocal, perhaps for that reason, has been more successfully cultivated than any other in Europe. Now the vocal Music of Italy can only be heard in perfection when sung to its own language and by its own natives, who give both the language and Music their true accents and expressions. There is as much reason for wishing to hear Italian Music performed in this genuine manner, as for the lovers of painting to prefer an original picture of Raphael to a copy.

1711. After two performances of Pyrrhus and Demetrius, a new pasticcio opera was brought out this year, January 10th, called ETEARCO. This musical drama which was performed seven times by the same singers as were engaged at the beginning of the winter, offers nothing memorable, either in performance or success (e). February 3d, it was found necessary to have recourse again to Pyrrhus and Demetrius, and afterwards to Hydaspes, which last opera was performed four times. On the 13th, the first and second act only of Pyrrhus and Demetrius, and the Music performed at court on the Queen's birth-day, furnished the feast.

(e) Etearco was first performed at Venice 1707, to the Music of Marc' Antonio

Bononcini. The drama was written by Silvio Siltampiglia.

It is necessary now to relate an event which happened about the end of the preceding year, 1710, of great consequence to the Opera and to the Music in general of this country. This was the arrival of GEORGE FREDERIC HANDEL, who came hither on a visit of curiosity, and in compliance with an invitation from several English noblemen, with whom he had made acquaintance at the court of Hanover, but without any design of remaining in England. Indeed, after making the tour of Italy, he had entered in the service of the Elector of Hanover, a prince who had manifested his love for Music, and good taste and knowledge in the art, by patronising several of the greatest musicians in Europe at his court, particularly the celebrated Bononcini, and the admirable Abate Steffani, whom the young Handel had the honour of succeeding.

Aaron Hill was now in the direction of the theatre in the Haymarket, and hearing of the arrival of a master, the fame of whose abilities had already penetrated into this country, he applied to him to compose an opera. To which request he having acceded, Mr. Hill sketched out the plan of a drama from Tasso's Jerusalem, and in his preface tells us, that "by a very particular happiness he had met with Signor Roffi, a gentleman excellently qualified to fill up the model he had drawn, with words so sounding, and so rich in sense, that if his translation is in many places led to deviate, 'tis for want of power to reach the force of the original (f)."

The Italian poet declares, in an advertisement to the reader, that the composer was so rapid in his part of the work, that he hardly gave him time to write; and that, to his great astonishment, the Music of this admirable opera had been entirely produced in a fortnight.

This opera was entitled RINALDO, and appeared for the first time on (f) Signor Roffi afterwards produced several dramas for the opera-stage; and he and Nicolino Haym were the chief poets for that theatre till the arrival of Rolli. Aaron Hill translated this opera himself and dedicated it to Queen Anne. It is certainly superior, as a poem, to the version of any Italian opera which the English had yet seen, though extremely rough for an Italian lyric poem, in the original.

the

the 24th of February. It continued in run till the end of the season, June 2d, and was performed without interruption, except the benefits, fifteen times. The singers in this opera were Signor Nicolini, Valentini, Boschi, and Cassani; with Signora Boschi, Isabella Girardeau, and Elisabetta Pilotti Schiavonetti, in the service of the Elector of Hanover. Margarita de L'Epine, and the Baroness, though not employed in Rinaldo, sung in the old operas that preceded it, and which were performed at the several benefits.

Though many of Handel's subsequent operas are superior to Rinaldo, yet, after a careful examination of such as had been composed by other masters and brought on our stage previous to this, there is something so peculiarly compact and forcible in the style, that I cannot pass it over without particularising some of its beauties.

The first movement of the overture is grand and majestic. Though the subject of the fugue wants variety, being but one passage repeated three or four times; it has been productive, however, of many beauties of accompaniment, and has a very good effect in performance. The solo parts or episodes for the first violin were frequently used afterwards in his organ concertos, and other compositions. The jig is lively, and less vulgar than any movement of that kind, equally ancient, except Corelli's.

The first air, Sovra balze scoscese, sung by Signora Boschi, has many graceful, new, and pleasing passages in it, though the words are very rough and unlyrical. The next air, sung by Isabella, is spirited, ingeniously accompanied, and new. The first air which Boschi sings is a rough defiance, fit for a Pagan and a base voice. The next air, sung by his wife, is spirited and pleasing. Then follows an air, Vieni o cara, which is very characteristic, and, though a jig, and for a base voice, not vulgar. Furie terribile, an air for Armida, is full of genius and fire, and truly dramatic. Augeletti che cantate, is charming (g); there is a soothing passage in it which he afterwards used in "Return O God of hosts." The duet, Scher-

(g) There is, in the original score, a long symphony of twenty-one bars for octave flutes, in imitation of birds, which is not printed. While this was playing, the sparrows, concerning which the Spectator is so pleasant, No. v. were let loose.

zaro sul tuo volto, has in it many pretty passages, though the plan is not dramatic, nor is it so good on the old plan, as many duets he afterwards composed. Cara sposa is one of the best airs in that style that was ever composed by himself or any other master; and by many degrees the most pathetic song, and with the richest accompaniment, which had been then heard in England. The last air in the first act, Venti turbini, is a capital bravura, calculated to display Nicolini's powers of execution and acting.

The first air in the second act, Siam prossimi, is pleasing, in the favourite style of Carissimi, about the middle of the last century. The Siren's song is an agreeable Siciliana in Handel's own favourite style. Il tricerbero humiliata, a passionate air, for Nicolini, in which all the parts play in unison and octaves to the voice, on account of its boldness and seeming joviality, had English Bacchanalian words set to it: "Let the waiter bring clean glasses," to which it was long sung at merry and convivial meetings all over the kingdom. Scorta rea, is an agreeable air in two parts, fugato. Mio cor, another spirited air, with no other accompaniment than a base, but it is an admirable song. Basta che sol tu chiedi, is an excellent base song of an original cast and accompaniment. Fermati, a duet of infinite genius, spirit, and originality. Modern dramatic duets are all cast in the same mould; which though a good one, yet others should be sought and tried. Ab crudel, the whole opening and conduct of this admirable adagio may be found in the author's hautbois concertos. Vò far guerra, with an accompaniment for the harpsichord which terminates the second act, and which Handel played himself, during the run of the opera, must have captivated by the lightness and elasticity of his finger; as it contains no one learned or solid passage. However, he afterwards drew from the brilliant parts, passages for his harpsichord lessons and organ concertos.

The second air in the third act, Sorge nel petto, is a soothing and pathetic morsel. The next, E un incendio, is spirited and pleasing. The violin part reminds us of the accompaniment to a movement in the coronation anthem. Al trionfo, a duo, which is good Music; but the passages all occur in subsequent compositions by our author

author, particularly in the accompaniment, where we hear the gavot in Otho. Bel piacer, is a light natural air, wholly unaccompanied even by a base. If the singer, Isabella Girardeau had a remarkable fine, mellifluous, and steady voice, it was giving it a fair hearing in all its purity; which would please natural ears more than those that are depraved, in the language of Rousseau, by harmony. Hor la tromba, is an excellent air of spirit for Nicolini, with a trumpet accompaniment, and bold and new effects. The last chorus is an agreeable gavot, like that in the overture to Pastor fido, and like many other movements in Handel's subsequent works. But no one of them requires us to mount up to the time in which it was composed so much as Rinaldo, which has been not only pillaged by others, but by himself. It is, however, so superior in composition to any opera of that period which had ever been performed in England, that its great success does honour to our nation.

Indeed, this great success alarmed the actors and friends of our own theatres; and Sir Richard Steele, a patentee, and Mr. Addison, his friend, still bleeding for the fate of his Rosamond, tried every means they could devise to check and disgrace our musical taste. To ridicule, it was certainly open; but what is proof against it? The Opera was now in its nonage; the poetry often absurd, for Apostolo Zeno and the admirable Metastasio had not then purified and sublimed it; and a rage for the marvellous in machinery and decorations was carried to a puerile excess.

I am as ready to allow the force of Mr. Addison's and Sir Richard Steele's humorous papers on the opera, and to laugh at them as heartily as any one; but as theatrical praise and censure are always suspicious, we should not forget who were the authors of the Tatlers and Spectators, nor how they were circumstanced. Sir Richard Steele had not only an interest in one of the English theatres, but had let his concert room, in York-buildings, to Clayton, Dieupart, and Haym, who losing their power and importance at the opera on the arrival of Handel, solicited subscriptions for a concert at York-buildings, and were abetted and patronised by the Spectators, number 158 and 178, both written by Steele.

Mr. Addison had, in a former number of this popular and, in general, excellent periodical work, levelled his chief artillery of ridicule at the absurdity of going to an opera without understanding the language in which it is performed: "an absurdity," says he, "that shews itself at first sight. It does not want any great measure of sense to see the ridicule of this monstrous practice (b)." Now Mr. Addison puts the language of Music, and excellent acting, out of the question, and speaks of this monstrous practice as if it were going to hear a Persian or Chinese oration, without understanding a single word that is said. But he never told the public that it was absurd to go to concerts of good Music; nay, he recommends those of Clayton, by the insertion of his letters, to public encouragement. Now it may be asked, what entertainment there is for the mind in a concerto, sonata, or solo? They are mere objects of gratification to the ear, in which, however, imagination may divert itself with the idea, that a fine adagio is a tragical story; an andante, or grazioso, an elegant narrative of some tranquil event; and an allegro a tale of merriment.

What did the ancient Greeks and Romans understand at their pantomime representations? yet all the admirers of antiquity and classical knowledge speak of the mimes with praise and admiration. An opera, at the worst, is still better than a concert merely for the ear, or a pantomime entertainment for the eye. Supposing the articulation to be wholly unintelligible, we have an excellent union of melody and harmony, vocal as well as instrumental, for the ear. And, according to Sir Richard Steele's account of Nicolini's action, "it was so significant, that a deaf man might go along with him in the sense of the part he acted (i)."

No one will dispute but that understanding Italian would render our entertainment at an opera more rational and more complete; but without that advantage, let it be remembered by the lovers of Music, that an opera is the completest concert to which they can go; with this advantage over those in still life, that to the most perfect singing, and effects of a powerful and well-disciplined band, are frequently added excellent acting, splendid scenes and decorations, with such dancing as a playhouse, from its inferior prices, is seldom able to furnish (k).

(b) See Spectator, No. 18.

(i) Tatler, No. 115.

The ridicule and reasoning of Mr. Addison, from his high reputation as a writer, has been long and implicitly admitted, and imagined sincere; but besides his want of knowledge, as well as love for Music, when it is considered that his friend Sir Richard Steele was a patentee of the playhouse, and at any rate to down with the opera, and exalt the English drama; and that Addison himself was not only angry at the death of Rosamond, but at the opera being crowded, while his friend Mr. Smith's tragedy of Phædra and Hippolitus was neglected; but it has always been neglected, even when no opera was performed against it; for, as Dr. Johnson says, it pleased the critics, and the critics only. If we put these circumstances together, we shall ascribe some part of the Spectator's severity to want of skill in the art of Music; some to peevishness; and the rest to national prejudice, and the spirit of party in favour of our domestic theatre.

London now has a sufficient number of inhabitants to supply a musical theatre with an audience, and yet not injure our own drama. People will be pleased their own way; when great talents draw, the opera is crowded; but when only mediocrity can be found there, neglected. It is ever so with the playhouses; nor can it be said that native excellence has been always robbed of its share of public favour by our partiality to foreigners; though Mr. Addison has said, that "we know not what we like in Music; only in general we are transported with any thing that is not English: so it be of foreign growth, let it be Italian, French, or High Dutch, it is the same thing." But was this the case in his own time, with respect to singing? Were not Mrs. Tofts, and Mrs. Anastasia Robinson in very high favour, though English women? And in our own time, has Mrs. Sheridian, Mrs. Bates, or Mrs. Billington, ever experienced neglect? Or have the powers of Garrick, Mrs. Siddons, or Mrs. Jordan ever been slighted?

(k) What do we understand when English is singing on our stage without a book? The Music of the Romish ritual is perhaps the chief part of what affects the people ignorant of the Latin tongue. And the Russian is exactly like our own early operas, performed in two languages: ancient Greek, of which the generality of the congregation is ignorant, and Slavonian which they understand.

Disputable talents frequently remain in obscurity, but supreme excellence will burst through all prejudice, indifference, and opposition, and always shine with due lustre in the eyes of the grateful public.

Complaints of neglect are generally the croakings of inferiority, which never mended matters, or convinced mankind that they were either deaf, blind, or stupid.

The consistency of Sir Richard Steele in the Tatler may be estimated by comparing No 4 with 115. In the one, operas and the public are condemned, because Pyrrhus and Demetrius was performed with great applause—in the other, the British Censor is “surprised to find a thin house at so noble an entertainment:” then follows his admirable eulogium on Nicolini as an actor, totally apart from his vocal powers as a singer. Yet this same Nicolini performed in the same troop and band, and in the same opera, on both these occasions.

Mr. Addison pretends to be surprised that the passion for operas “is not the taste of the rabble, but of persons of the greatest politeness, which has established it.” But he surely did not want to be told, that cultivated ears want cultivated Music, and natural ears natural.

Things to be heard or seen, as exhibitions, must be extraordinary: people will never be at the trouble and expence of going to a public place for what they can hear or see at home.

As to the understanding having no part in the pleasure we receive at an opera, it may at least be allowed the negative praise which was given it even by the black fanatic Cromwell, that “being in an unintelligible tongue it cannot corrupt the morals of the people.” But who will now say, if the opera were English, that the moral sentiments of Metastasio would poison and deprave the mind? And who, that our own Beggar’s Opera which burlesques the other, and comedies of Congreve and Vanbrugh, however excellent in other respects, respects, are immaculate systems of ethics, and fit lessons for "the fair, the gay, the young," who chiefly frequent public places?

Indeed, the pleasantry of Addison and Steele upon opera absurdities is often extremely risible and amusing; but their serious reasoning on the subject is unjust, and generally under the guidance of self-interest and national prejudice.

The theatre in the Hay-market opened November 10th, with the last year's opera of Almahide, in which Mrs. BARBIER, a new English singer, appeared for the first time in the character of Almanzor, which, during the first run of the opera, had been performed by Valentini. Her timidity on this occasion gave birth to an admirable paper in the Spectator (l), in which Mr. Addison apologises for, and commends, diffidence and modesty with a sympathetic zeal and sensibility. It is well known that this excellent writer, with all his learning and abilities, was never able to perform his part in public as a speaker, when he was secretary of state and in parliament, long after this paper was written; and here, by a kind of precognition, he extenuates his fault before it was committed. With respect to Mrs. Barbier's distress on her first facing an audience on the stage, Mr. Addison has put it in the most amiable light possible: "this sudden desertion of oneself," says he, "shews a diffidence, which is not displeasing, it implies at the same time the greatest respect to an audience that can be. It is a sort of mute eloquence, which pleads for their favour much better than words can do; and we find their generosity naturally moved to support those who are in so much perplexity to entertain them. I was extremely pleased," continues he, "with a late instance of this kind at the opera of Almahide, in the encouragement given to a young singer, whose more than ordinary concern on her first appearance, recommended her no less than her agreeable voice, and just performance."

This lady was a native of England, who continued to sing at the opera several years, and afterwards was a favourite concert and play-house singer, till the year 1729 (m).

After

(l) No. 231.

(m) In the year 1717, it seems as if she had a little vanquished her bashfulness in private, however it may have incommoded her

After three performances of Almahide, Hydaspes was again represented, in which a new Italian singer, SIGNORA ROSA PISCINA, first appeared, in the part of Darius, which had been originally performed by Valentini; but it seems as if her reception had not been very favourable, for after two performances, the same part was configned to the Margarita.

December 12th, ANTIOCHUS a new opera, written by Apostolo Zeno, and originally set by Francesco Gasparini for Venice 1705, was brought on our stage. By the dedication of the book of the words to the Countess of Burlington, it appears that the opera was now under the direction of Mr. John James Heidegger, usually called the Swiss Count (n). The performers in this opera were Nicolini, Cassani, Mr. Lawrence; with Margarita, Pilotti, Isabella Girardeau, and Mrs. Barbier. Valentini seems to have quitted England at the end of the preceding winter, and appears no more in the opera lists till the autumn of 1712.

Antiochus was performed but four times, before Hydaspes and Almahide were again represented.

her in public; for she had mustered courage sufficient to elope from her father's house with a person that was suspected to be of a different sex. During her absence Mr. Hughes wrote the following pleasant verses:

O yes!—hear all ye beaux and wits,
Musicians, poets, 'squires, and cits!
All, who in town or country dwell,
Say, can you tale, or tidings tell
Of Tortorella's hasty flight?
Why in new groves she takes delight,
And if in concert, or alone
The cooing murmurer makes her moan?
Now learn the marks by which you may Trace out and stop the lovely stray!
Some wit, more folly, and no care,
Thoughtless her conduct, free her air;
Gay, scornful, sober, indiscreet,
In whom all contradictions meet;
Civil, affronting, peevish, easy,
Form'd both to charm you and displease you;
Much want of judgment, none of pride,
Modish her dress, her hoop full wide;
Brown skin, her eyes of fable hue,
Angel when pleas'd, when vex'd a shrew.

Genteel her motion when she walks,
Sweetly she sings and loudly talks;
Knows all the world, and its affairs,
Who goes to court, to plays, to pray'rs,
Who keeps, who marries, fails, or thrives,
Lead honest or dishonest lives;
What money match'd each youth or maid,
And who was at each masquerade;
Of all fine things in this fine town,
She's only to herself unknown.

By this description if you meet her,
With lowly bows and homage greet her;
And if you bring the vagrant beauty
Back to her mother and her duty,
Ask for reward a lover's bliss,
And, if she'll let you, take a kiss;
Or more, if more you wish and may,
Try if at church the words she'll say,
Then make her, if you can—obey.

(n) This personage continued manager of the opera till about the year 1738. During his regency Ridottas and masquerades were first introduced in that theatre. Dr. Arbuthnot inscribed to him a poem called The Masquerade, in which he seems more severe upon the count's ugliness, which he could not help, than on his voluntary vices.

1712. In the beginning of January this year, Antiochus was repeated four several times, at fifteen shillings for the stage boxes; and Hydaspes and Almahide, at half a guinea. Then a second run of Rinaldo continued till the end of February, when after nine performances of that favourite opera, the second year, HAMLET, in Italian AMBLETO, another musical drama, written by Apostolo Zeno, and set for the Venetian theatre 1705, by Francesco Gasparini, was brought on our stage, under the conduct of Nicolini, who dedicated the poem to the Earl of Portland. There is very little resemblance in the conduct of this drama to Shakspeare's tragedy of the same name, though both seem to have been drawn from the same source, the Danish history by Saxo-Grammaticus. But if Zeno is much inferior to our divine Shakspeare in variety of character, knowledge of the human heart, and genius, in its most unlimited acceptation, his drama is exempt from all the absurdities and improprieties which critics, insensible to the effects of Music, had leisure to find in former operas.

The overture of Hamlet has four movements, ending with a jig; though the overture of most of the former operas had but two. Nicolini's second air is printed in the contralto clef, and goes no higher than C, and in others only to D: when he came here first the passages in his songs frequently went up to F; so that he seems to have lost, or at least to have descended, two or three notes in his voice during his residence in England. Signora Isabella has a noisy song for trumpets and hautbois obligati, in Hamlet; in Margarita's songs there are many passages of bravura; and the airs of Mrs. Barbier, who sings in the contralto, are chiefly pathetic. There are few songs, however, in this opera, which would please modern judges of Music, either by their melody, harmony, or contrivance (p).

(p) Though Ambieto was originally set by Gasparini for Venice, the Music performed in England to this drama has more the appearance of a pasticcio of ill selected songs, than an entire drama by that elegant master. Indeed, no name of composer is mentioned in the printed copy of either the words or the Music. It was performed but seven times.

March

March 22d, was advertised for the benefit of Nicolini, “the Music performed before the Queen on her birth-day, and the famous scene in Thomyris, by Scarlatti.” After this the operas of the preceding winter were repeated, till the 3d of May, when HERCULES, a new opera, written by Rossi to Music of different composers, seems to have been killed by critical serpents in the cradle, for it appeared but three times at the distance of five or six weeks, when, instead of an apotheosis, it was d—d, and sent to Hades (q).

On the 14th of May, another attempt was made at an opera in our own language. Mr. Hughes, an agreeable poet, in close friendship with Mr. Addison, and according to Sir Richard Steele, a practical musician, as well as painter, imagining that “it could never have been the intention of those who first promoted the Italian Opera, that it should take entire possession of our stage, to the exclusion of every thing of the like kind which could be produced here,” wrote an opera in English, entitled Calypso and Telemachus, which was set by Mr. Galliard, an able musician, who, though a German, had been long enough in England to be well acquainted with our language and taste. In a well written preface to this opera Mr. Hughes candidly allows, “that though the English language is not so soft and full of vowels as the Italian; it does not follow that it is therefore incapable of harmony,” (the author means melody.) “It is certainly of great consequence in dramatic entertainments, that they should be performed in a language understood by the audience: and though the airs of an opera may be heard with delight, as instrumental pieces, without words, yet it is impossible that the recitative should give pleasure when the words are either taken away, or unintelligible.” This is all so true as to admit of no dispute. The poetry of an Italian opera in England is wholly out of the question; nor has the Music much to do with its success; it is generally upon the singing that its favour entirely depends. In France and Italy, on the contrary, where operas are performed

(q) The Italian poet, in an advertisement prefixed to this opera, emphatically calls

Nicolini l'Anfione dell' udito e Proteo della Vista.

performed in the language of each country, the poetry and conduct of a drama are of infinite consequence to its success. And on our own stage, when we have attempted operas, neither the Music nor performance could ever support a bad poem. Great and favourite singers only can save an Italian musical drama of any kind in this country; indeed, I can recollect no English operas in which the dialogue was carried on in recitative, that were crowned with full success, except the Fairies, set by Mr. Smith 1755, and Artaxerxes, by Dr. Arne in 1763; but the success of both was temporary, and depended so much on the singers, Guadagni and Frasi in the one, and Tenducci, Miss Brent, and Peretti in the other, that they never could be called stock pieces, or, indeed, performed again, with any success, by inferior singers (r).

The dialogue of Mr. Hughes's Calypso, and the songs, are poetical, and very superior to those of any translated operas of that period; but besides the want of interest in the incidents of the drama, and the serious cast of the sentiments, which, however edifying in a sermon or in the closet, are seldom received with due reverence in a place of amusement, Nicolini, the favourite singer and actor of that time, had no part in this drama, which was performed by Margarita, Signora Manini, a new and obscure singer, Mrs. Barbier, Mrs. Pearson, and Leveridge, who, though good second and third rate performers, were not sufficiently captivating to supply the place of such singers as the town had then been accustomed to.

Calypso supported but five representations, during which short run, other operas were alternately performed. After the third night, Nicolini appeared in Antiochus for the last time before his departure for Italy, as was imagined, for ever. Mr. Addison in the Spectator for June 14th, 1712, No 405, says, "I am sorry to find, by the opera bills for this day, that we are likely to lose the greatest performer in dramatic Music that is now living, or that perhaps ever appeared upon a stage. I need not acquaint my readers, that I am speaking of Signor Nicolini. The town is highly

(r) Upon the strength of Mrs. Billington's captivating powers and public favour, Artaxerxes was very successfully revived in 1787, at Covent-garden theatre.

“ obliged to that excellent artist, for having shewn us the Italian “ Music in its perfection, as well as for that generous approbation
 “ he lately gave to an opera of our own country, in which the com“ poser endeavoured to do justice to the beauty of the words, by “ following that noble example, which has been set him by the “ greatest foreign masters in that art.” This is all allusive to the opera of Calypso, with the fifth performance of which the season was closed, June 25th.

In November following, the Queen's theatre opened with an opera called IL TRIONFO D'AMORE, of which I have met with no other memorial than what the Daily Courant furnishes; which tells us, that it was performed twice: November 12th and 15th; we find, however, during the same month that Mr. Handel was again in England, where he furnished our stage with a second opera, entitled IL PASTOR FIDO, or the Faithful Shepherd. This drama, which appeared for the first time November 22d, was written by Rossi, author of Rinaldo, and performed by the CAVALIER VALERIANO, a new singer, successor to Nicolini, Valentini Urbani, just returned to England, La Pilotti Schiavonetti, Margarita, Mrs. Barbier, and Leveridge. The overture, one of the most masterly and pleasing of the kind, is well known; but the opera itself having never been printed, I shall be somewhat minute in my account of it.
 The first air for a soprano, lets us know what kind of voice the Cavalier Valeriano was possessed of; and the pathetic style of the first part of his song, as well as the agility necessary to the execution of the second, seem to imply abilities in that performer, of no mean kind. This air, and many other airs in the opera, are only accompanied by a violoncello, in the old cantata style; but Handel always contrives to make this single accompaniment interesting without overwhelming the voice-part, or depriving it of attention. The next air, for the same singer, has not even a base to accompany the voice-part, which is doubled by the violins in unison. This purity and simplicity, when the melody and the voice which delivers it, are exquisite, would be always pleasing to an audience, as a contrast to rich harmony and contrivance; but some of these airs are now

now too trivial and far advanced in years to support themselves totally without harmony. The following air for the Pilotti Schiavonetti, has no accompaniment but a busy base; which, however, if doubled and not kept under, would be as much as a voice not uncommonly powerful could penetrate. In the ritornel, which is in the style of the first opera songs of the last century, Handel has enriched the harmony by ingenious and admirable parts for two violins, tenor, and base. The air, No 4, in this act is natural and pleasing, with only a violoncello accompaniment, except in the ritornello. This air, in the year 1732, was introduced in the opera of Exio to different words, as appears from a pencilled memorandum made by Handel himself in the score. The air No 5, which was originally composed for the Margarita, and is accompanied by two violins, tenor, and base, requires more execution than any other in the first act. No 6, sung by Valentini, is an air in jig time, of which, at present, the passages would be thought trivial and common. No 7, for Mrs. Barbier, is a simple air of a pathetic kind, with no other accompaniment than a base, in almost plain counterpoint. No 8, and the last air in the first act, for Valentini, though it has some pretty passages, yet little of Handel's fire, or true vocal grace, is discoverable in it.

Act second contains nine songs, three of which are short and inconsiderable: one of these, however, is very pathetic, and accompanied in a singular manner by the violins and violoncellos in unisons and octaves, pizzicati, and by the harpsichord arpeggiato throughout. The fourth air, Finte labbia, has a solo part for the hautbois, and is written in Handel's best manner. It was sung by Margarita, as were almost all the best songs of this drama. The next air, Sol nel mezzo, written for Valentini, is of a very original and gay cast: French horns, which it seems to want, had now not been introduced into the opera orchestra. This air is in jig time, alla Caccia, and was perfectly adapted to the character by whom it was sung in the the opera, a gay and frolicksome swain, much fonder of field-sports, than the society of females. The next air, No

14 (s), Se in ombre nascosto, sung by Mrs. Barbier, has in it much of Handel's spirit; but the passages are now somewhat antiquated. No 15, Nel mio core, the sixth air of this act is very pleasing, and a great part of it still remains elegant and graceful. The divisions and embellishments, which, when a song is new, are its most striking and refined parts, soonest lose their favour and fashion. There is a passage, often repeated in this air, of which Handel made frequent use afterwards in other things:

No 16, Nò, non basta, has a great deal of Handel's fire and grandeur; and No 17, the last of the act, Ritorno adesso amor, with solo parts for two hautbois, is strictly fugata upon two subjects, and a very masterly composition. This style of writing, which was so much admired at the beginning of the present century, has, however, been long banished from the opera, as undramatic: for the voice-part is so much overpowered and rendered so insignificant by the complicated business of the accompaniments, that she loses her sovereignty. Such ingenious contrivances seem best calculated for instruments, where narration and poetry are out of the question; but in a drama where instruments are, or ought to be, the humble attendants on the voice, riot and noise should not be encouraged. Most of the hautbois passages and the divisions in the voice-part of this air were afterwards used in the overture of Esther.

Act third, the first air, Se m'ama, o caro, No 18, though short, simple, and unaccompanied, except by a base, is extremely plaintive and elegant. Time has robbed the next of some of its beauties (t). The subsequent air, which is to express joy and exultation, is truly gay and festal. Handel has been accused of crowding some of his songs with too much harmony; but that is so far from being the case in this opera, that he not only often leaves the voice without any other accompaniment than a violoncello, but sometimes even

(s) All the airs of this opera are numbered in the book of the words.

(t) The symphony reminds us of Corelli's fifth solo; and there is a stroke of modulation in it, which the ear can hardly tolerate:

silences

silences that. In the present air, and in an additional song to the beginning of the third act, the singer is frequently left alone, or with only a violin in unison; and when the voice is good and the performer knows how to use it, this is always acceptable to the undepraved part of an audience. No 22, is a short light air resembling one in the same key, but differing in measure, in his lessons. This air is followed by a solemn and fine symphony chiefly for two hautbois and a bassoon, accompanied by the rest of the orchestra. After which is an accompanied recitative and an admirable duet in the style of the times, which, though not dramatic, admits of great beauties of composition. No 23, is a spirited base song which was sung by Leveridge; this was preceded by a short introductory symphony, that is truly characteristic and Handelian. The usual short and light theatrical chorus terminates the opera; which, upon the whole, is inferior in solidity and invention to almost all his other dramatic productions, yet there are in it many proofs of genius and abilities which must strike every real judge of the art, who is acquainted with the state of dramatic Music at the time it was composed. In the first place, it was a pastoral drama, in which simplicity was propriety. Besides, Handel had at this period no real great singer to write for. Valeriano was only of the second class; and Valentini, with little voice when he arrived in this country, if that little had remained undiminished, having been five years among us, must have lost the charms of novelty, as was the case with Margarita, who had been a playhouse singer now for more than twelve years. Nothing but miraculous powers in the performers can long support an opera, be the composition ever so excellent. Plain sense and good poetry are equally injured by singing, unless it is so exquisite as to make us forget every thing else. If the performer is of the first class, and very miraculous and enchanting, an audience seems to care little about the Music or the poetry. This opera was performed but four times: November 22d, 29th, December 3d and 6th. After which the opera-house seems to have been shut up till January 10th.

1713. Nicolini was not yet returned to England. And we only find the names of Valeriano, Valentini, La Pilotti Schiavonetti, the Margarita, and Mrs. Barbier, in the dramatis personæ of DORINDA, a pasticcio opera, of which, as the songs were never printed, I am unable to give any further account (x). ERNESTINA, another pasticcio, followed Dorinda, in which the performers were the same, with the addition of La Vittoria Albergatti. But the only opera upon record for this year, which merits particular notice is TESEO, Dramma Tragico, written by Nic. Haym, and set to Music by G. F. Handel, Maestro di Capella di S. A. E. di Hanover. Handel, at the time of composing this opera resided with the Earl of Burlington, to whom the drama is dedicated. Nicolini seems to have been still on the Continent, as his name does not occur in the dramatis personæ. The singers were the same as those just mentioned, in Dorinda.

The first representation of Theseus was on December 10th; after four performances, Dorinda was advertised for January 31st. Then Theseus again, February 4th, and Dorinda 7th. After which there were three more representations of Theseus, when its run was again interrupted by other operas. And in April, when its performance was again resumed, the popular tragedy of Cato was in run, which was acted twenty nights successively, and then only discontinued on account of the benefits and lateness of the season.

In the first movement of the overture of Theseus, there is something bold and piquant in the harmony, which must have been very new at this time to all ears but those accustomed to the cantatas of the elder Scarlatti (y). The last movement has passages in it that he afterwards used in his organ concertos and other composi-

(x) In the year 1719, an opera of the same name, said to have been written by the celebrated patrician, Benedetto Marcello, and set by Galuppi and Pescetti, jointly, was performed at Venice.

(y) Bar 2d, the second with the fourth accompanied by the fifth, which, though unusual, has a good effect. The second violin in the manuscript is written in the soprano clef. The score of this overture seems to have been corrected by Handel himself: in the 3d movement, from the rapidity of composition, he had made the first violin and base run up together in a series of eight fifths, of which he has taken away the unseemly appearance to the eye, by changing the base; though the effect is of little consequence to the ear, in such rapid and convulsive passages.

tions; and the divisions in the first violin had perhaps been previously thought of by Corelli; however the hautbois and violoncello parts, and effects of the whole, were new and original in 1713.

The first air, E pur bello, was composed for the Margarita, and has some spirited divisions and solo parts for the two principal violins. The whole first part of this song is richly and ingeniously accompanied, and in the second part which has only a base accompaniment, this base is made interesting by having the subject of the first symphony given to it.

The second air, Deh serbate, was likewise written for Margarita, but is in a very different style: it is an andante, with a solo part for the hautbois, and two violins echoing each other in short passages of semiquavers, throughout.

The third air, Ti credo, for her sister, is light, easy, and pleasing; and fit for a second or third singer of no great abilities.

The fourth air, Ab cruda gelosia, was sung by Mrs. Barbier. This singer's voice was a contralto. In this opera, and in general, she performed a man's part, which, on account of the low pitch of her voice, was very convenient for the opera stage. The air she had now to sing is pathetic, and has no accompaniment but a violoncello; and for this simple species of accompaniment Handel had two very opposite reasons: the first was to afford an opportunity to singers of great taste and expression to display their powers, undisturbed by instruments; and the second, when the singers were shallow musicians, and unable to stand fire, that is, to keep steady while a number of dissimilar parts were at work in the orchestra. The scene in which Mrs. Barbier sung her first song in Tesco is finished by a short duet, which has nothing in it remarkable, except the base, its sole accompaniment, which is masterly and of a good effect.

The next scene opens with a song by Valentini in the character of Egeus, beginning, Serenatevi o luci belle, which is pleasing; but Handel could not write with all his native and juvenile fire for such a singer, who seems to have been gifted with very limited powers. The next song, Sovengati o bella, was likewise sung by the same singer. It contains some pleasing and ingenious passages; but it seems seems manifest that Handel was obliged, in writing for this performer, to ride Pegasus with a curb-bridle. There is a passage in the second part of this air, of which he afterwards made a better use in the first movement of the overture in Saul.

The next air, M' adora l' idol mio, which terminates the act, is extremely well written, with a solo part for the hautbois, which was now played by Mr. Galliard, an excellent musician, of whom we shall only speak, hereafter, as a composer (z). The other instruments are not idle in this song; so that it required the voice and energy of a Margarita to battle it with always four to one against her, and still preserve her vocal superiority. As there is no great poetical beauty in the words of this air, the voice-part might be performed by another hautbois, or by a flute or violin, as an instrumental movement, without any great loss to the hearer (a).

The second act opens with a charming Cavatina (b), Dolce riposo, sung by Signora Pilotti in the character of Medea. This air is likewise accompanied by the hautbois and two violins, and is rich in harmony and pleasing in effects. The next air, for the same singer, Quell' amor, is wholly in a different style, but admirable of the kind; it is clear, natural, phrased, and has a base superior to the principal melody, which, however, has not been sacrificed to the instruments. After this there is a duet, Si ti lascio, upon a very ingenious and original plan. It is sung by two lovers who have quarrelled, and have determined to part. And as their inclinations move different ways, so do the notes they sing. It is accompanied by a violin, two hautbois, and two tenors obligati, and is a very agreeable and masterly composition. The instruments are judiciously kept under while the voices are engaged, which renders the effect more dramatic. After this we have a chorus of Athenians; but not like his oratorio choruses, for an evident reason: in these

(z) It seems as if he had been now a favourite performer, as he is wholly unaccompanied in the last symphony, during several bars of no very uncommon cast. The second part of this air begins exactly like "The flocks shall leave the mountains."

(a) It was in consequence of this total indifference about the words of Handel's

Italian songs, and perhaps the want of singers able to execute them, that his chamber airs, as they were called, accommodated to the German flute, in seven volumes folio, or forty-nine collections, remained so long in universal use and favour, totally detached from the words.

(b) An air without a second part.

the subject being generally, solemn, and in the church style, should partake of choral complication; and the performers having the Music before them, are not obliged to get it by heart; whereas an opera chorus, being in action, and committed to memory, must necessarily be short, easy, and dramatic (c).

The next air, Quanto à me fian care, sung by the Cavalier Valeriano, is a short, simple, and elegant Siciliana, without treble accompaniments. The following air is likewise for the same singer; for though the same personage in modern operas has never two airs together, it happens frequently in this drama. This song is in jig time, and is rather more vieillie than the rest: jigs must be new, and happily composed, not to remind us of country-dances and other vulgar tunes in the same measure. The last air of this act, O stringerò nel sen, sung by the enraged Medea, is full of fire and dramatic effects. It is preceded by an accompanied recitative, which is admirable, and in which the word furore is particularly well expressed.

Fragment of accompanied recitative in Handel's opera of Teseo.

(c) The late exquisite composer SACCHINI, finding how fond the English were of Handel's oratorio choruses, introduced solemn and elaborate choruses into some of his operas; but though excellent in their kind, they never had a good effect: the mixture of English singers with the Italian, as well as the awkward figure they cut, as actors, joined to the difficulty of getting their parts by heart, rendered those compositions ridiculous, which in still life would have been admirable.

The first air in the third act, Le luci del mio bene, sung by Mrs. Barbier, is gay, pleasing, and richly accompanied by two flutes, two violins, and two tenors obligati. The second air, Risplendete, has, however, only a violoncello accompaniment; but that accompaniment is extremely pleasing, and of a particular cast. The third air, Più non cerca libertà, is in a singular style; great use being made in minuet time of the mixture of double measure, or three crotchets instead of three quavers. The next air, Vieni torna, is graceful and simple. Then follows a sprightly air of an original cast for the hero of the piece, who seems, however, to have drawn from Handel's pen no testimony of uncommon powers as a singer; though the composition has, in the accompaniment, some of the author's own fire. In the next scene we have an accompanied recitative, in which the wild and savage fury of the enraged sorceress, Medea, and her incantations, are admirably painted by the instruments. This is followed by such an air of spirit as the situation of the actress called for: Sibillando ululando; and thus ends the third act, but not the drama, as is usual; for, contrary to the constant practice in Italy and elsewhere, during the present century, this opera has five acts (d).

We next have an air, act fourth, full of rage and resentment, from Egeus; and after it a very gay and agreeable air, Benche tuoni, which was sung by Mrs. Barbier. In the next scene Margarita had a short aria di cantabile: Deb v' apprite, which only wants length to be equal to Handel's best songs in that style; the harmony is extremely rich and grateful, and the voice-part fit for a great singer. After this, another song by the jealous Medea: Dal cupo baratro, full of rage, vengeance, and incantation. Then two different airs by Theseus: the first, Chi ritorna, a short, but exquisite cantabile; the other, Qual tigre, a song of rage and resentment, in which the accompaniment, in iterated notes, is uncommon and admirable.

(d) The division of a musical drama into three acts, says the late M. Diderot, has been fixed on very rational principles: as it furnishes a beginning, a middle, and an end to the narrative or event on which the plot is founded. MS. Reflex.

Then a very expressive adagio, by Margarita, upon the following motivo, or subject :

in the second part of which, the following passage is uncommonly beautiful and elegant :

After which the fourth act is ended with a most admirable duet, Caro ti dono in pegno il cor, equal, if not superior to any one of the kind that Handel ever composed. Some of the passages have, indeed, been since rendered common by his imitators ; but there still remains such fire and originality, as can be found perhaps in no other duet of the same period.

The first song in the fifth act, Vuò morir, ma vendicata, sung by Medea, is in a grand style of bravura, or execution, in which Handel's fire is in full blaze ; it is constantly in five parts, and supported with great genius and abilities. After this, Valentini has an air of spirit, Non è da Re quel cor, in which the accompaniments are very masterly and ingenious. The next air, Hò per mano, is a graceful and pleasing minuet. After which, as the usual opera dénouement advances happily, there is another gay and agreeable air, Si, t' amo o caro, which is followed by a duet, Unito à un puro affetto, so natural, pleasing, and graceful, that, as it has never yet been printed, I should give it to my musical readers, if it was not likely soon to appear to greater advantage in Dr. Arnold's edition.

After this duet, an accompanied recitative, and a light gavot chorus terminate the opera; which, if Handel had had greater fingers to write for, might perhaps have been better; but I can see no reason why it should never have been printed, as it contains many fine airs, passages, and strokes of genius of this great master, superior to those of several of his printed productions that were long in high favour with the public.

This opera was performed twelve times in the course of the season; the last representation, May 16th, being advertised "for Mr. HENDEL, with an entertainment for the harpsichord." The opera-house closed this season, May 30th, with Ernelinda, when the stage boxes were advertised at fifteen shillings, other boxes eight shillings, pit five shillings, gallery two shilling and six pence. There were no more operas performed at this theatre till after Christmas.

1714. Nicolini having left the kingdom, it seems as if the passion for musical dramas in England had a little abated, for none were attempted from May, in the preceding year, till January the 9th of this, when Dorinda was advertised, in which the Galerati and Margarita were to sing. At the third representation of this old opera, "Signor Veracini, lately arrived, performed symphonies." This was his first exhibition in England. January 27th, a new pasticcio opera called Creso was advertised, in which Mrs. ANASTASIA ROBINSON, afterwards Countess of Peterborough, was to perform a part, for the first time of her appearing as a dramatic singer. After nine representations of this opera, another, called ARMINIO, by an anonymous composer, was advertised for March 4th. The drama is dedicated, by Heidegger, to the Countess of Godolphin; and the songs are printed without the author either of the poetry or Music being mentioned: however, an opera of the same title was written by Antonio Salvi Fiorentino, 1703, and performed at different times in several parts of Italy. In 1722 it was set by Car. Fr. Pollaroli for Venice.

The singers who performed in the opera of Creso, in London, were Valentini, the Margarita, and Mrs. Barbier, for the last time on the opera stage, with the Galerati, Mr. Lawrence, and the celebrated lebrated Mrs. Anaf. Robinson. This performer, descended from a good family in Leicestershire, was the daughter of a portrait painter, who, having visited Italy for improvement in his art, had made himself master of the Italian language, and acquired a good taste in Music. And finding that his daughter Anastasia, during her childhood, had an ear for Music and a promising voice, he had her taught by Dr. Crofts, at first as an accomplishment; but afterwards being afflicted with a disorder in his eyes, which terminated in a total loss of sight; and this misfortune depriving him of the means of supporting himself and family by his pencil, he was under the necessity of availing himself of his daughter's disposition for Music, to turn it to account as a profession. She not only prosecuted her musical studies with great diligence, but by the assistance of her father had acquired such a knowledge in the Italian tongue as enabled her to converse in that language, and to read the best poets in it with facility. And that her taste in singing might approach nearer to that of the natives of Italy, she had vocal instructions from Sandoni, at that time an eminent Italian singing master resident in London, and likewise from the opera singer called the Baronefs (e).

Her first public exhibition was at the concerts in York-buildings, and at other places, where she usually accompanied herself on the harpsichord. Her general education had been pursued with the utmost care and attention to the improvement of her mind, as well as to ornamental and external accomplishments; and these advantages seconded by her own disposition and amiable qualities, rendered her conduct strictly prudent and irreproachable. And what still entitled her to general favour, was a behaviour full of timidity and respect to her superiors, and an undissembled gentleness and affability to others, which, with a native cheerfulness that diffused itself to all around her, gained her at all times such a reception from the public, as seemed to ensure her success in whatever she should undertake. Encouraged by the partiality of the public towards his daughter,

(e) Mrs. Anastasia Robinson's voice was originally a soprano, but sunk, after a fit of sickness, to a settled contralto.

daughter, and particularly by the countenance and patronage of some persons of high rank of her own sex, Mr. Robinson took a house in Golden-square, where he established weekly concerts and assemblies in the manner of conversazioni, which were frequented by all such as had any pretensions to politeness and good taste (f).

Thus qualified and encouraged, she was prevailed upon to accept of an engagement at the opera, where she made her first appearance in Creso, and her second in the character of Ismina, the principal female part in Arminio (g). From this period till the year 1724, she continued to perform a principal part at the opera with increasing favour and applause. Her salary is said to have been £. 1000, and her emoluments by benefits and presents were estimated at nearly as much more. When she quitted the stage it was supposed to have been in consequence of her marriage with the gallant Earl of Peterborough, the friend of Pope and Swift, who distinguished himself so heroically in Spain during the reign of Queen Anne (h).

The following anecdotes of Mrs. Anastasia Robinson having been communicated to me in 1787, by the late venerable Mrs. Delany, her cotemporary and intimate acquaintance, they will doubtless be read with confidence and pleasure, not only by such as had the happiness of knowing her personally, but by all those to whom rumour has conveyed a faithful account of her longevity, virtues, and accomplishments; for this excellent person having been allowed by Providence to extend her existence to the great age of eighty-eight, in the constant enjoyment of all the felicity which the friendship and admiration of rank, virtue, and talents could bestow; it seems as if, without hyperbole, she may be said to have been "beloved by God and man."

(f) June the 9th, 1713, she had a benefit concert at the opera-house. Daily Courant.

(g) It has been said, that she first appeared on the stage in Domenico Scarlatti's opera of Narciso, 1720; but the public papers and printed book of the words of Arminio, as well as of the Music, confute this assertion.

(h) Though the marriage was not publicly declared till the earl's death 1735, yet it was then spoken of as an event which had long taken place. And such was the purity of her conduct and character, that she was instantly visited at Fulham as the lady of the mansion, by persons of the highest rank. Here and at Mount Bevis, the earl's seat near Southampton, she resided in an exalted station till the year of her decease, 1750, surviving her lord fifteen years; who, at the time of the connexion, must have been considerably beyond his prime, as he was arrived at his seventy-fifth year when he died.

Mrs.

“Mrs. ANASTASIA ROBINSON was of a middling stature, not handsome, but of a pleasing, modest countenance, with large blue eyes. Her deportment was easy, unaffected, and graceful. Her manner and address very engaging, and her behaviour, on all occasions, that of a gentlewoman, with perfect propriety. She was not only liked by all her acquaintance, but loved and caressed by persons of the highest rank, with whom she appeared always equal, without assuming. Her father’s house, in Golden-square, was frequented by all the men of genius and refined taste of the times: among the number of persons of distinction who frequented Mr. Robinson’s house, and seemed to distinguish his daughter in a particular manner, were the Earl of Peterborough and general H—; the latter had shewn a long attachment to her, and his attentions were so remarkable, that they seemed more than the effects of common politeness; and as he was a very agreeable man and in good circumstances, he was favourably received, not doubting but that his intentions were honourable. A declaration of a very contrary nature was treated with the contempt it deserved, though Mrs. A. Robinson was very much prepossessed in his favour.

“Soon after this, Lord P. endeavoured to convince her of his partial regard for her; but, agreeable and artful as he was, she remained very much upon her guard, which rather increased than diminished his admiration and passion for her. Yet still his pride struggled with his inclination; for all this time she was engaged to sing in public, a circumstance very grievous to her, but urged by the best of motives, she submitted to it, in order to assist her parents, whose fortune was much reduced by Mr. Robinson’s loss of sight, which deprived him of the benefit of his profession as a painter.

“At length Lord P. made his declaration to her on honourable terms; he found it would be vain to make proposals on any other, and as he omitted no circumstance that could engage her esteem and gratitude, she accepted them as she was sincerely attached to him. He earnestly requested her keeping it a secret till it was a more convenient time for him to make it known, to which she readily consented, having a perfect confidence in his honour. Among the persons

persons of distinction that professed a friendship for Mrs. A. Robinson were the Earl and Countess of Oxford, daughter-in-law to the lord treasurer Oxford, who not only bore every public testimony of their affection and esteem for Mrs. A. Robinson, but Lady Oxford attended her when she was privately married to the Earl of P. and Lady P. ever acknowledged her obligations with the warmest gratitude; and after Lady Oxford's death, she was particularly distinguished by the Duchess of Portland, Lady Oxford's daughter, and was always mentioned by her with the greatest kindness for the many friendly offices she used to do her in her childhood when in Lady Oxford's family, which made a lasting impression upon the Duchess of Portland's noble and generous heart.

“ Mrs. A. Robinson had one sister, a very pretty accomplished woman, who married Dr. Arbuthnot's brother. After the death of Mr. Robinson, Lord P. took a house near Fulham, in the neighbourhood of his own villa at Parson's-Green, where he settled Mrs. Robinson and her mother. They never lived under the same roof, till the earl being seized with a violent fit of illness, solicited her to attend him at Mount Bevis, near Southampton, which she refused with firmness, but upon condition that, though still denied to take his name, she might be permitted to wear her wedding ring; to which, finding her inexorable, he at length consented.

“ His haughty spirit was still reluctant to the making a declaration, that would have done justice to so worthy a character as the person to whom he was now united; and, indeed, his uncontrollable temper, and high opinion of his own actions, made him a very awful husband, ill suited to Lady P.—'s good sense, amiable temper, and delicate sentiments. She was a Roman Catholic, but never gave offence to those of a contrary opinion, though very strict in what she thought her duty. Her excellent principles and fortitude of mind supported her through many severe trials in her conjugal state. But at last he prevailed on himself to do her justice, instigated, it is supposed, by his bad state of health, which obliged him to seek another climate, and she absolutely refused to go with him unless he declared his marriage: her attendance upon him in his illness nearly cost her her life.

“ He

“ He appointed a day for all his nearest relations to meet him at the apartment, over the gate-way of St. James’s Palace, belonging to Mr. Pointz, who was married to Lord Peterborough’s niece, and at that time preceptor to prince William, afterwards Duke of Cumberland. Lord P. also appointed Lady P. to be there at the same time; when they were all assembled he began a most eloquent oration, enumerating all the virtues and perfections of Mrs. A. Robinson, and the rectitude of her conduct during his long acquaintance with her, for which he acknowledged his great obligations and sincere attachment, declaring he was determined to do her that justice which he ought to have done long ago, which was presenting her to all his family as his wife. He spoke this harangue with so much energy, and in parts so pathetically, that Lady P. not being apprised of his intentions, was so affected that she fainted away in the midst of the company.

“ After Lord P—’s death she lived a very retired life, chiefly at Mount Bevis, and was seldom prevailed on to leave that habitation, but by the Duchess of Portland, who was always happy to have her company at Bulstrode, when she could obtain it, and often visited her at her own house.

“ Among Lord P—’s papers she found his memoirs, written by himself, in which he declared he had been guilty of such actions as would have reflected very much upon his character *. For which reason, she burnt them: this, however, contributed to complete the excellency of her principles, though it did not fail giving offence to the curious enquirers after anecdotes of so remarkable a character as that of the Earl of Peterborough.”

Though Nicolini did not sing this season in Arminius, which was performed in the spring, yet he must have been here in the summer; as I find his name in the Daily Courant, where it is announced that “ on Saturday, June the 14th, Signor Nicolini would appear for the last time before his voyage to Italy.” If, however, he performed this voyage he returned the next winter, for he sung in

* Lady B. who had seen these memoirs, says, he boasted in them that he had committed three capital crimes, before he was twenty. W.

Rinaldo January 4th, 1715. And afterwards in Amadigi. In the spring of 1714, the operas of Cræsus, Arminius, and Ernelinda, were frequently performed, with solos on the violin by VERACINI. The opera band had been led till about this time by Mr. Corbet, an Englishman, who had long resided in Italy (i). The theatre in the Hay-market was not shut this year till the 23d of June. It opened again October 23d, with Arminio, which was performed "before the prince," afterwards George II (k). The performers mentioned in the bills were Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, the Margaritha de l' Epine, the Galerati, Signor Balatri, and Signor Stradiotti. The stage boxes were again raised to fifteen shillings, pit and box tickets ten shillings and six pence, gallery two shillings and six pence, and only four hundred tickets were to be issued out. At the bottom of the opera bills, on opening the theatre this autumn, was the following advertisement: "Whereas by the frequent calling for the songs again, the operas have been too tedious; therefore, the singers are forbidden to sing any song above once; and it is hoped nobody will call for 'em, or take it ill, when not obeyed."

October 26th, Arminio was performed before the King. November the 3d, the same opera was repeated. On the 16th, Ernelinda was revived, and the part of Ricemero performed by a new Italian singer, SIGNORA DIANA VICO, who seems afterwards to have had parts assigned her of the second class, which she long continued to fill with credit. Ernelinda was continued till December the 11th, when Arminio was performed by command. This opera and Ernelinda continued to be repeated alternately till December the 30th, when Rinaldo was revived, and performed before the prince, the part which used to be performed by Nicolini, being performed by Diana Vico, the new female singer from Italy.

1715. January 4th, Rinaldo again, before the prince, to begin at half past five. Nicolini being now returned, this opera had as

(i) His dismissal from the opera about this time, perhaps rendered it necessary to try the zeal of his friends in patronising a benefit concert; for April 28th was advertised "at Hickford's room, a concert for Signora Lodi and Mr. Corbet."

(k) Queen Anne dying August the 1st

this year, the arrival of King George I. and the royal family in London soon after, attracted much company thither about this time, and contributed to crowd the theatres in a very uncommon manner, for so early a part of the season.

great a run as at first, and always before some of the royal family. February 26th, a new opera called LUCIO VERO was performed before the prince. This drama, written by Apostolo Zeno, and set by an anonymous composer, was performed seven times, and always honoured with the prince's presence. March 26th, Arminio by command; and April the 2d, his Majesty was present at the performance of Lucio Vero, for the benefit of Signora Pilotti Schiavonetti. And the benefits of Mrs. Robinson, the Galerati, Diana Vico, and Nicolini, were all by command. Hydaspes was now revived again, and had a considerable run.

May 25th, AMADIGI, or AMADIS OF GAUL, a new opera composed by Mr. Handel, was first performed, being the fourth with which he had supplied our theatre. The words of this drama are dedicated by Heidegger, in the character of author, to the Earl of Burlington. And it appears by the following passage in this dedication, that Handel still resided at Burlington-house: "this opera more immediately claims your lordship's protection, as it was composed in your own family."

There are but four characters in this drama, and these were performed by Nicolini, Diana Vico, Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, and Elizabetta Pilotti Schiavonetti. As the Music of this opera was never printed, and his Majesty's complete score has been confided to my care for examination, the musical reader shall be acquainted with the result.

The overture is well known; for though some others may have enjoyed a greater degree of favour from the final air, yet this has been long and frequently performed at our theatres and concerts, public and private. The opening is very solemn; the fugue clear and spirited; and the gavot as gay and lively as the minor third will admit.

The first air, Pugnerò contro del fato, is in a very bold and original style. The divisions, as well as the subject of the air, are still new; and it seems as if the not printing this opera had preserved it from the pillage of the many plunderers who preyed upon Handel for so many years. The second air, Notte amica, which was sung by Nicolini is finely written: the voice-part is elegant and supplicating, and the accompaniment marked and masterly. At the close of this air there is a wild symphony of enchantment, followed by an accompanied recitative. The next air, Non sà temere, is extremely natural, free, and spirited; but as the divisions in all airs soonest lose their fashion, so these have been a little injured by time. The subsequent air, Ab Spietata e non ti move, is slow, pathetic, and still new. There is a fine solo part for the hautbois, which is in dialogue with the voice-part, while the two violins, tenor, and base, have a quiet accompaniment in the modern style of iterated notes. The second part is quick, and full of agitation and fury. This air executed by a great singer, and well accompanied, will always be excellent Music. In the next scene we have a rapid and spirited air of a very peculiar cast, Vado, corro, al mio tesoro. Though Handel had such a happy felicity in multiplying parts, yet he could produce effects by unisons and octaves which other composers were afraid to attempt. In this air the roll of the symphony and accompaniments, by an opera orchestra, must have a grandeur of effect which perhaps the genius of Handel could only produce. The next air, Agitato il cor mi sento, sung by Diana Vico, in the character of Dardanus, is truly animated and dramatic. This singer having a contralto voice had generally a man's part assigned to her, as Mrs. Barbier, whom she superseded, had before her. After this air, according to the book of the words, an enchanted palace falls to pieces, al suono di strepitosa sinfonia, "at the sound of a boisterous symphony;" but for this Handel has given us a regular overture, with a slow first movement, largo, and an excellent fugue, allegro, good enough for the opening of any serious opera. Thunder, lightning, and ruin, are announced by the poet, but nothing picturesque or imitative is here attempted; perhaps the orchestras of these early times were not so powerful or able to execute new and dramatic ideas, as at present. The next air, Gioie venite in sen, is one of the most graceful and pleasing that has ever been composed in the Siciliano style. Every note in the accompaniments is so select and tranquil, that the voice, wholly undisturbed, is left to expand expand in all the tenderness and expression which the air itself excites. Nothing but the remaining so long in manuscript could have prevented this air from being long in favour and frequently revived by great and favourite singers. It was originally sung by Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, and is the best which I have ever seen in any of her parts. After this, Nicolini had a gay air, E sì dolce il mio contento, in the gavot style, which cost Handel little trouble to write. However, there was the more propriety in the lightness of this air, as, after it had been sung, it measured the steps of a dance for enchanted knights and ladies. The opening of the next air, O caro mio tesoro, which was likewise sung by Mrs. Robinson, is extremely fine; but in the latter part of the first strain, when the words are divided by crotchet rests in all the parts: vie—ni a—con—so—lar, I am unable to know what effect was intended to be produced. The following spirited air, Godo scherzo e rido, sung by the Pilotti Schiavonetti, in the character of the sorceress Melissa, with rage and insult, is characteristic, and has in it many pretty passages. The next air, O rendetemi il mio bene, which terminates the first act, is in Handel's most masterly and ingenious style of accompaniment; for though it is only in three parts, the violins in unison have an original character of passage, that is supported throughout the song, without encroaching too much on the vocal part, which is pathetic, and calculated for a great singer.

The first air in the second act, Suffocate, onde vezzose, is an admirable cavatina, accompanied by two common flutes, two violins, tenor, and base. The bright and brilliant tones of the violins playing in octaves, from which so many pleasing effects have lately been produced, seems to have been first discovered by Handel in the accompaniment to this song, which must have delighted and astonished every hearer, more than seventy years ago. The second air in this act, S' estinto e l' idol mio, is, in my opinion, one of the finest which Handel ever produced in his best and most masterly style: the pathetic subject, the natural and pleasing imitations in the instrumental parts, the richness of the harmony, the affecting modulation, particularly in the second part; but above all, the

the strain of sorrow which runs through every passage of the voice-part, all conspire to render it one of the most perfect compositions of the kind with which I have been acquainted. The next air, T' amai quant' il mio cor, begins in a sublime style of cantabile, and in the second part is painted all the rage and fury which could be excited in an offended knight errant, and expressed by the voice and action of such a performer as Nicolini. In the succeeding air the lady, not to be behind-hand with the hero in rage, tries "to out-Herod, Herod." The imitations in the accompaniments of the first violin and base only, have all the spirited effect of a crowded score. After these, we have a quarrel supported with great spirit between the hero Amadis, and the slighted Enchantress, à grand orchestra, in a score of seven parts. And still in the subsequent air, Pena tiranna, we have eight parts, obbligati: hautbois, bassoon, three violins, tenor, voice-part, and base. The bassoon and hautbois parts are remarkably fine in this air, which is one of the most elaborate and masterly compositions in the opera. Then follows a light air, in which the passages are too much repeated for modern times. But scene eighth, Tu mia speranza, is more original and different, not only from other composers, but from Handel himself, than any of his airs that I have seen. In the symphony, the violin and tenor play in octaves to each other, while the base to almost the whole first part, is little more than a drone. The principal melody is lively, and the effect of the whole new and pleasing. Of the next song, Cb' io lasci mai, the words are different from those in the printed book; they are set to a very spirited and agreeable bravura air, of which the divisions are still good. The finale of this act, Desterò dall' empia dite, is a capital aria d' abilità, accompanied by a trumpet and hautbois, in which there are important solo parts, both in the symphony and song. This is a very masterly and fine air of the kind, and has never been performed in public during my time.

The third act begins with a simple and plaintive air, Dolce vita del mio petto, which must always please when executed by a favourite singer. The next air, Vanne lungi dal mio petto, is a rattling air of contrast, without a few of which an opera would be monotonous.

nous. After this, we have, Cangia al fine il' tuo rigore, a very graceful and soothing duet, which in 1758 was introduced in a pasticcio opera called Solimano; it was sung by Potenza and Mattei, and printed in the collection of favourite songs of that opera. In the next scene we have Handel's idea of the manner in which a ghost would sing, in an aria parlante accompanied in plain counterpoint, and performed by the Ombra, or Spirit of Dardanus, prince of Thrace. Then an accompanied recitative followed by a short and pathetic fragment of an air, in which the Enchantress Melissa breathes her last. After this the happy denouement comes on, and all brightens up. There is more enchantment and machinery in this opera than I have ever found to be announced in any other musical drama performed in England. We have now a cheerful and pleasing symphony to introduce another Enchanter, or good Genius, to put an end to the torments of the two lovers. After which, a charming air for Nicolini, concertato with a trumpet and hautbois, and the whole orchestra. According to the idea which tradition gives us of the abilities of Nicolini, his part in this opera must have drawn out all his powers, both as a singer and actor; and Mrs. Anastasia Robinson never had so good a part assigned to her. The coro finale, is short and light, and after being sung, is played for the dance which terminated the opera; a production in which there is more invention, variety, and good composition, than in any one of the musical dramas of Handel which I have yet carefully and critically examined.

This opera came out too late in the summer to have a long run. It was performed by subscription, May 25th, and discontinued for a benefit till June 11th. It was again repeated June 15th, and again stopt for Nicolini's benefit, for which he had Rinaldo. Then Amadis again June 28th, July 2d, and 9th, when the theatre was shut up. The last two performances of this opera were before the prince.

It appears from the following advertisement in the public papers, that Signor Castrucci, who afterwards led the opera band, came to England about this time: "July 23d, there will be a benefit concert for Signor Castrucci, who lately came over from Italy with Lord Burlington." This violinist, who was more than half mad, is represented in one of Hogarth's prints as the enraged musician; the painter having sufficient polissonnerie, previous to making the drawing, to have his house beset by all the noisy street-instruments he could collect together, whose clamorous performance brought him to the window in all the agonies of auricular torture.

August 27th, of this summer, the opera-house was opened for one night only, by command of his Majesty, when Hydaspes was performed. The principal parts by Nicolini, the Margarita, and Diana Vico, with dancing by Mad. Aubert. And this was the last performance at the theatre in the Hay-market till the next year.

1716. The opera-house did not open this year till the first of February, when Lucio Vero was performed by command; the principal parts by Nicolini, Giacomo, Diana Vico, Pilotti, and the Croce Viviani. After three or four performances of Lucio Vero, Amadigi had four representations, successively. And then Pyrrhus and Demetrius was revived, and continued in run till April 18th, when CLEARTES, a new opera by an anonymous composer, was brought out, and seems to have pleased, as it was performed thirteen times in the course of the year. His Majesty again honoured Nicolini with his presence at his benefit this year, May 2d, when Pyrrhus and Demetrius was performed. Nothing memorable happened at the lyric theatre this season, except the arrival of ANTONIO BERNACCHI, as second man. This performer's voice seems by nature to have been feeble and defective, but he supplied the defects of nature by so much art, that his performance was always much more admired by professors than by the public in general. He staid here at this time but one year, after which he went back to Italy; but returned in 1729. After quitting the stage, Bernacchi established a school for singing at Bologna, where he had himself been educated, under the celebrated Postocchi, and where he formed several admirable scholars, who rendered his name and school famous.

His Majesty George I. commanded the opera of Pyrrhus and Demetrius for his benefit in London, June 2d. And it was this summer, summer, June 13th, that an opera was performed for the Instrumental Music, which his Majesty likewise honoured with his patronage and presence. The opera performed was Amadige; and it was perhaps on this occasion that Handel composed his admirable hautbois concerto in F, which was long known by the name of the orchestra concerto. July 12th, the season was closed with the opera of Amadis, between the acts of which a new symphony was performed by Signor Attilio Ariosti on the viol d'amour. This was the first time that such an instrument had been heard in England. Signor Ariosti, during this visit, staid here but a little while; but in the year 1720, he returned, as a composer to the opera, by invitation of the directors of the Royal Academy of Music (1).

The opera-house did not open the next season till December, and then only repeated Cleantes three times, an opera which had been brought out in the spring.

1717. January 5th, Rinaldo was revived and the parts cast in a stronger manner than heretofore: Rinaldo by Nicolini; Goffredo, Bernacchi; Argante, Berenstadt; Armida, Pilotti; and Almirena, by Mrs. Anastasia Robinson. This favourite opera, though six years old, an age more than sufficient to render the generality of musical dramas superannuated, was performed no less than ten times, during the remainder of the season. The places in the boxes were now, for the first time, all let on the same terms, at half a guinea each, pit five shillings, gallery two shillings and six pence.

February 16th, Amadigi was revived and performed four or five times, the first by his Majesty's command, the last for Nicolini's benefit; and at one of the intermediate representations, for Mrs. Robinson's benefit, a new additional scene, composed by Mr. Handel, was introduced.

March 13th, a new opera called VENCESLAO written by Apostolo Zeno, and set by an anonymous composer, was brought on the stage; but it seems to have had a cold reception, as it sustained but

(1) It has been said by a late musical historian, that he did not come hither till 1723, and that Coriolanus was his first opera.

three representations, and the Music was never printed. Cleantes, an opera of the last season, was frequently performed; which, with a new pasticcio, called TITO MANLIO, repeated eight times, brought the season to a conclusion, June 29th (m).

No Italian operas were performed from this time till 1720, when a plan was formed for patronising, supporting, and carrying them on; and a fund of £. 50,000 raised by subscription among the first personages in the kingdom; to which, as his Majesty King George I. had subscribed £. 1000, this establishment was called the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, consisting of a governor, deputy governor, and twenty directors. The first year the Duke of Newcastle was governor, Lord Bingley deputy governor, and the directors the Dukes of Portland and Queensbury, the Earls of Burlington, Stair, and Waldgrave, Lords Chetwynd and Stanhope, Generals Dormer, Wade, and Hunter, Sir John Vanbrugh, Colonels Blathwayt and O'Hara, with James Bruce, Thomas Cole of Norfolk, Conyers D'Arcy, Bryan Fairfax, George Harrison, William Pulteney, and Francis Whitworth, Esquires.

And in order to render this design as complete as possible, it was determined by the directors not only to engage a lyric poet in their service, but the best vocal performers that could be found in the several parts of Europe where there was a musical theatre, and the three most eminent composers then living who could be prevailed on to visit this country. For this purpose, BONONCINI, as he tells us himself, had been invited hither from Rome (n); ARTILIO ARIOSTI, from Berlin; and HANDEL, who resided at this time with the Duke of Chandos, at Cannons, was not only included in this triumvirate, but commissioned to engage the singers. And with this view he went to Dresden, where the Elector of Saxony,

(m) An attempt was made at the little theatre in Lincoln's-Inn Fields this winter, to call the attention of the public to English operas. Owen Mac. Swiney being out of the management of the theatre in the Haymarket, had the opera of Camilla performed nine or ten times, and Thomyris twice, entirely by English singers, except Margarita. The success was such as might have been expected, at a time when the Music and performance at the Italian theatre were in much greater perfection than they had ever yet been brought in this, or perhaps any other country.

(n) Qui mi trovo, chiamato da Roma per servizio della real accademia di Musica. Dedication of his cantatas and duets to Geo. I.

Augustus, then King of Poland, had Italian Operas performed at his court in the most perfect and splendid manner possible; and here Handel engaged Senesino, Berenstadt, Boschi, and the Durastanti.

1720. The first opera that was performed after this establishment, was NUMITOR, April 2d, composed by GIOVANNI PORTA of Venice; the Music of this drama that was printed seems superior to that of any preceding opera which we had had from Italy. There is one of the most pleasing Sicilianas among the airs: Virtù de pensier miei, which had been then produced; and of which our ballad-mongers have enjoyed the plunder. "Love sounds the alarm," in Acis and Galatea, is called to mind by Porta's Dove spiega la fama i suoi vanni. However, Porta never was in England, and probably had never seen Handel's song, which though composed originally in Italy, had never been published.

After five representations, Numitor was superseded, April 27th, by RADAMISTO, written by Nic. Haym, and the first opera which Handel composed for the Royal Academy. This drama, which had a run of ten nights when it first came out, was not only resumed the next season, but revived in 1728, with additional songs: Arie aggiunte di Radamisto, when it had likewise a long run.

The composition of this opera is more solid, ingenious, and full of fire than any drama which Handel had yet produced in this country (o). The first movement of the overture is grand and majestic, and the fugue written with that spirit and science which have always rendered his movements of that kind superior to any that can be found in the overtures of other composers. There is

(o) It seems as if he was not insensible of its worth, himself; as he dedicated the book of the words to King George I. subscribing himself his Majesty's "most faithful subject," which, as he was neither a Hanoverian by birth nor a native of England, seems to imply his having been naturalised here, by a bill in parliament. He likewise had the songs of this opera finely engraved on copper, and published them himself, as well as the additional songs. It was natural to imagine that the score of the songs, printed by and for the author himself, under his own eye, would have been complete, and not curtailed of many essential parts, in the manner of Rinaldo and many operas printed by Walsh; but upon collating this score with Handel's original manuscript in his Majesty's possession, it appears nearly as defective as the printed copy of any other opera of which he himself was not the editor.

no minuet or popular air at the end of this prefatorial production, which has prevented it from being as frequently played as many others.

The opening of the opera, Sommi Dei, is truly grand and in a tragic style of composition. The second air that is printed, Deh fuggi un traditore, has a very spirited and ingenious accompaniment. The third, Tu vuoi ch' io parta, an adagio, which a great singer can make charming at any period of time. The fourth, Stragghi, morti, with a trumpet, is a good song of the kind, and fit for a tyrant. The next air, Cara sposa, was always admired, and is so elegantly simple and pathetic, that it must always please when well sung. Son contenta, though the base is so full and incessant, would want more accompaniment if performed now, as the violin has little to do, except in the ritornels. This air, though masterly and in a favourite style at the time it was composed, has strong marks of age upon it. Ferite, uccidete, is a spirited song in the style of the times. Son leive le catene, an agreeable base song. And the last air of the first act, Doppo torbide procelle, is one of the most agreeable arie fugate that I know.

Act II. Quando mai, is pathetic, clear, and simple. And the next air, Ombra cara, was regarded by Geminiani and cotemporary masters as one of Handel's first vocal compositions for a single voice. Indeed, too much praise cannot be given to that song, in which, though the composition is so artful, an inverted chromatic imitation being carried on in the accompaniments, yet the cantilena is simply pathetic throughout. I remember hearing Reginelli sing this air at the opera in 1747, among some light Italian songs of that period, and it seemed the language of philosophy and science, and the rest the frivolous jargon of fops and triflers. Già che morir non posso, though not composed for a great singer, has in it many strokes of true genius and fire: the base of this air is remarkably fine. Troppo sofferse, is extremely pathetic, and calculated to display a fine voice and good action. Empio perverso cor, is a fine acting song of two characters. Vanne sorella ingrata, is an admirable composition of the old school; whoever understands a score, will will admire the beauty of the accompaniment, and the distinct character of the hautbois part from the violin. And the duet which ends the second act has no appearance of age, except in the plan.

The first air of the third act, S' adopri il braccio, has in it a spirit and vivacity of no common kind (p). The air Dolce bene, though in a style that is a little superannuated, is admirably put together, and would still entertain as an instrumental composition. Sposi ingrato, is a very elaborate and spirited aria concertata, with a solo part for the violin, to display the talents of a Cleg or Castrucci; this air, which Handel composed originally for one of his juvenile cantatas at Hamburgh, Casti amori, was now accommodated for the Durastanti and a great orchestra, giving solo parts not only to the violin, but principal hautbois, bassoons, and violoncellos. The words of this air are omitted in the edition of 1728. Alzo al volo is likewise à grand' orchestra, with solo parts for two French horns, which seems to have been their first admission into our operaband. The vocal divisions are now worn out, but the violin accompaniment to the second part is admirable. Deggio dunque, is a pathetic and fine air, which a great singer could always make modern.

Among the additional songs, Con la stragge de' nemici, is an admirable air for a base voice. Handel's genius and fire never shine brighter than in the base songs which he composed for Boschi and Montagnana: as their voices were sufficiently powerful to penetrate through a multiplicity of instrumental parts, he set every engine at work in the orchestra, to enrich the harmony and enliven the movement. Perfido, dà a quel empio, is a spirited air, composed for Senesino, probably when it was brought on the stage again, eight months after its first appearance. Vuol ch' io serva, and Lascia pure, with the accompaniments, are two extremely original and pleasing

(o) Neither this air nor the preceding duet appears in the edition of the words of the opera printed 1728, when it was revived and greatly altered for Faustina, who sung in it then for the first time. In examining the score of the songs published by Handel himself, in which some of the singers are named, it does not appear that any of the airs were originally designed for Senesino, who seems not to have been arrived. Indeed, it is manifest from Handel's foul score, that the part of Zenobia was composed for Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, and Radamistus for a soprano voice, and not for Senesino, a contralto.

airs.

airs. In the latter there is a close for the first time to my knowledge, which at present is perfectly modern, elegant, and in good taste; indeed, the whole air is exquisite. Barbaro partiro is extremely animated; and the duet, Non ho più affanni, charming.

Few of Handel's operas would offer more amusement to a modern audience than Radamisto, in which there are so many fine songs in various styles, that with a few changes to accommodate the singers, and comply with the taste of the times, its intrinsic worth and Handel's still increasing celebrity would excite attention and renovate its favour (q).

The third musical drama that was performed after this establishment of the Royal Academy, was an opera called NARCISO, May 30th, composed by DOMENICO SCARLATTI, and conducted by Thomas Roseingrave, who composed several additional songs. It seems necessary here to give some account of this musician, who was an enthusiastic, ingenious, and worthy man, of considerable

(q) In the Daily Courant, No. 5777, for Wednesday April 27th, the day on which Radamisto was first performed, the following advertisement appeared: "The governors and court of directors of the Royal Academy of Musick do hereby give notice, that a general court will be held on Friday the 6th of May next, at eleven a-clock in the forenoon, whereof each subscriber is desired to take notice." This advertisement was repeated Wednesday 14th July. And October 31st, "Notice was given that a general court of directors of the Royal Academy of Musick would be held November 4th, at their office in the Hay-market pursuant to adjournment." November 2d, 1720, Mr. Handel's Harpsichord Lessons, neatly engraven on copper-plates, were advertised to be published on Monday the 14th inst. and to be had at Mr. Christopher Smiths, the sign of the hand and Music-book, in Coventry-street, and at Mr. Richard Mears's Music-shop, in St. Paul's Church-yard. When this advertisement was repeated, November 9th, there was the following addendum: "the author has been obliged to publish these pieces to prevent the publick being imposed upon by some surreptitious and incorrect copies of some of them that have got abroad." The last time these were advertised, on the 14th of November, the price is said to be one guinea; but whether this publication included the two books of his lessons does not appear. November 7th, I find the following advertisement in the Daily Courant which seems to imply no great prosperity in the opera management: "The directors of the Royal Academy of Musick, by virtue of a power given them, under the King's letters patents, having thought it necessary to make a call of £.5 per cent from each subscriber, have authorised the treasurer to the said Royal Academy, or his deputy, to receive the same, and to give receipts for each sum so paid in. This is therefore to desire the subscribers to pay, or cause to be paid, the sum of £.5 per cent, according to the several subscriptions, on the 19th, 21st, and 22d of this inst. November, at the opera house in the Hay-market, where attendance will be given by the deputy treasurer, from nine in the morning till one in the afternoon, who will give receipts for every sum so paid by each subscriber, as aforesaid."

The Monthly Mask of vocal Music, is advertised by Walsh in the same paper.

eminence

eminence in his youth for his performance on the harpsichord and organ, both as a fight's-man and voluntary player; and his intellects being a little deranged in the latter part of his life, rendered him so whimsical and eccentric a character, that he is too prominent to be over-looked.

THOMAS ROSEINGRAVE was the son of Daniel Roseingrave, who having been brought up in the King's Chapel at the same time as Purcell, was first promoted to the place of organist of Salisbury cathedral, and afterwards of St. Patrick's, Dublin. Daniel had two sons, both musicians, one of them, Ralph, succeeded his father at St. Patrick's; the other, Thomas, being regarded as a young man of uncommon dispositions for the study of his art, was honoured by the chapter of St. Patrick's with a pension, to enable him to travel for improvement; and about the year 1710 he set off for Italy. Being arrived at Venice in his way to Rome, as he himself told me, he was invited, as a stranger and a virtuoso, to an academia at the house of a nobleman, where, among others, he was requested to sit down to the harpsichord and favour the company with a toccata, as a specimen della sua virtù. And, says he, "finding myself rather better in courage and finger than usual, I exerted myself, my dear friend, and fancied, by the applause I received, that my performance had made some impression on the company." After a cantata had been sung by a scholar of Fr. Gasparini, who was there to accompany her, a grave young man dressed in black and in a black wig, who had stood in one corner of the room, very quiet and attentive while Roseingrave played, being asked to sit down to the harpsichord, when he began to play, Rosy said, he thought ten hundred d—ls had been at the instrument; he never had heard such passages of execution and effect before. The performance so far surpassed his own, and every degree of perfection to which he thought it possible he should ever arrive, that, if he had been in sight of any instrument with which to have done the deed, he should have cut off his own fingers. Upon enquiring the name of this extraordinary performer, he was told that it was Domenico Scarlatti, son of the celebrated Cavalier Alessandro Scarlatti. Roseingrave.

seingrave declared he did not touch an instrument himself for a month; after this rencontre, however, he became very intimate with the young Scarlatti, followed him to Rome and Naples, and hardly ever quitted him while he remained in Italy, which was not till after the peace of Utrecht, as appears by an anthem which he composed at Venice in 1713, and which Dr. Tudway has inserted in the fifth volume of his Manuscript Collection of English Music, page 149: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come," Isaiah, chap lx. There is much fire and spirit in the introductory symphony of a very modern cast. Rifeingrave is here erroneously called a student of Christ-church, Oxon. instead of Dublin, whence he had his exhibition.

His election to the place of organist of St. George's, Hanover-square, was attended with very honourable circumstances. The parishioners consisting chiefly of persons of rank and fortune, being very desirous of having a good organist, and unwilling to trust to their own judgment, or be teased by the solicitations of candidates of mean abilities, requested Mr. Handel, Dr. Pepusch, Dr. Greene, and Mr. Galliard, to hear the competitors play, and determine their degree of merit.

The candidates were allowed half an hour each to manifest their abilities on the organ, in whatever way they pleased, and then were severally required to play extempore on subjects given by the judges. Mr. Handel did not attend in person, but sent his subject; among the numerous candidates for this place there were several who acquitted themselves very well during the half hour of free-agency, by playing with great neatness pieces they had probably studied for the occasion; but when subjects of fugue were presented to them for extemporaneous treatment, they neither knew how nor when to bring in the answer, or even to find harmony for the themes with either hand when they were brought in. Roseingrave, on the contrary, whose style though too crude and learned for the generality of hearers when left to himself, treated the subjects given with such science and dexterity, inverting the order of notes, augmenting and diminishing their value, introducing counter-subjects, and turning the the themes to so many ingenious purposes, that the judges were unanimous in declaring him the victorious candidate. The late Dr. Arne and Mr. Mich. Christ. Festing, who were both present at this contention, informed me of these particulars, which happened in the year 1726, and spoke with wonder of Roseingrave as an extempore fughist; but confirmed the general censure of his crude harmony and extravagant modulation, which, indeed, his printed compositions imply.

Roseingrave having a few years after this election fixed his affections on a lady of no dove-like constancy, was rejected by her at the time he thought himself most secure of being united to her for ever. This disappointment was so severely felt by the unfortunate lover, as to occasion a temporary and whimsical insanity. He used to say that the lady's cruelty had so literally and completely broke his heart, that he heard the strings of it crack at the time he received his sentence; and on that account ever after called the disorder of his intellects his crepation, from the Italian verb crepare, to crack. After this misfortune poor Roseingrave was never able to bear any kind of noise, without great emotion. If, during his performance on the organ at church, any one near him coughed, sneezed, or blew his nose with violence, he would instantly quit the instrument and run out of church, seemingly in the greatest pain and terror, crying out that it was old scratch who tormented him and played on his crepation.

About the year 1737, on account of his occasional insanity, he was superseded at St. George's church by the late Mr. Keeble, an excellent organist, intelligent teacher, and a worthy man, who, during the life of Roseingrave, divided with him the salary. I prevailed on him once to touch an organ at Byfield's the organ-builder, but his nerves were then so unstrung that he could execute but few of the learned ideas which his mental disorder had left him. His sweetness of temper and willingness to instruct young persons who were eager in the pursuit of knowledge, tempted me frequently to visit him at Mrs. Bray's, at Hampstead, where he resided. His conversation was very entertaining and instructive, particularly on musical subjects. Indeed, his passion for the art never quitted him to the time of his death, which happened in Ireland about the year 1750. The instrument on which he had exercised himself in the most enthusiastic part of his life, bore very uncommon marks of diligence and perseverance, for he had worn the ivory covering of many of the keys quite through to the wood. In his younger days, when he enjoyed the mens sana in corpore sano, he was regarded as having a power of seizing the parts and spirit of a score and executing the most difficult Music at sight beyond any musician in Europe. Indeed, it was said that he could read a music-book if turned topsy-turvy; but this seems exaggeration of praise, which few can believe, who know the difficulty, without ocular and aural demonstration. The harmony in the voluntaries, which Roseingrave published, is rendered intolerably harsh and ungrateful by a licentious and extravagant modulation, and a more frequent use of the sharp third and flat sixth, than any composer with whose works I am at all acquainted, not excepting Dr. Blow; and his double fugues are so confused by the too close succession of unmarked subjects, that it is impossible, at the end of the performance, to remember what they are. His cantatas, which he published by subscription, being composed on the model of the elder Scarlatti, are the most pleasing of his works, but they were still-born, and never lived to speak in public.

The singers in the opera of Narcisso, the Music of which had been brought over by Roseingrave, were Signor Benedetto Baldassarri, Mr. Gordon, Signora Durastanti, Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, and Mrs. Turner Robinson, daughter of Dr. Turner, and wife of Mr. Robinson, organist of Westminster-Abbey. Roseingrave's additional songs were composed in the style of his friend Momo Scarlatti, in whose Music of Narcissus, though there were many new and pleasing passages and effects, yet those acquainted with the original and happy freaks of this composer in his harpsichord pieces, would be surprised at the sobriety and almost dulness of his songs. His genius was not yet expanded, and he was not so much used to write for the voice as his father, who was the greatest vocal composer of his his time, as the son afterwards became the most original and wonderful performer on the harpsichord, as well as composer for that instrument. But it seems impossible for any individual to be equally great in any two things of difficult attainment!

After five representations of this opera, and one of Radamisto, the season closed with Numitor, June 25th.

The new singers whom Handel had engaged at Dresden being arrived, the autumnal season began November 19th, with a new opera called ASTARTO, composed by Bononcini, which ran ten nights before Christmas, and was performed at least twenty times more in the course of the next year.

Happening to be in possession of the proof-sheets of this opera, which was printed under the author's own inspection, I shall examine it with the same spirit of fair enquiry as I have the musical dramas of Handel, of which there has been already occasion to speak.

The drama of Astartus, performed for the Royal Academy of Music, is dedicated by the poet, Rolli, to the Earl of Burlington, with the following motto from Milton's Paradise Lost, book first:

——— to mitigate and swage
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chase
Anguish, and doubt, and fear, and sorrow, and pain.

In the dedication he reminds his noble patron, "that in his first voyage to Italy, he had honoured the rehearsal of this opera, when it was performed at the Capranica theatre at Rome, with his presence; and that his approbation of it, which was followed by that of the public, was not only the cause of its being proposed to the Royal Academy in England, but of its renowned author's arrival in this country, and of his adding such beauties to the composition, in order to render it more worthy the protection of his noble patron." Hence it appears not to have been written or composed expressly for the Royal Academy, but revived and accommodated to the singers engaged in its service; who were Senesino, Boschi, Berenstadt, and Berselli; with the Durastanti, Salvai, and Galerati (r).

(r) By collating the English edition of this drama with an opera of the same name in the tenth volume of the works of Apost. Zeno, which was performed at Venice

1708, they appear to be precisely the same, though no notice is taken by Rolli of Apost. Zeno, either in the title-page or dedication.

The opening of the introductory symphony, or overture, is spirited, but devoid of variety, and common in melody, harmony, and modulation; the fugue too, if it deserves that name, is upon an obvious and juvenile subject, and treated with no great art or contrivance. It seems but an extract from the last movement of Corelli's first solo, which had now been published twenty years. Indeed, there is as much difference between a fugue of Handel and this, as between a man and a child; and we soon became fastidious judges of this species of composition, when accustomed to his bold yet natural subjects, and his masterly manner of treating them.

The first air for Durastanti, Figlio d' un bel valore, accompanied only by a violoncello, is simple and natural; but instead of satisfying the expectations of a first singer, at present, it would hardly be thought good enough for a ballad. The next is a trifling air accompanied by a common and unmeaning passage, perpetually repeated. The third is a little better. In the accompaniment of this the principal passage reminds us of one in Handel's Acis and Galatea, "As when the dove," consisting of a chord arpeggiato. The subsequent air, Se fingo, se spero, has some spirit, but no variety. We have next a symphony in which French horns are introduced^(s). The air which follows, sung by Senesino, in the character of Clearco, the hero of the drama, was probably rendered interesting by his voice and manner of singing; but in itself, as Music, there is little invention, grace, or passion in the voice-part, or contrivance in the instrumental; and yet this short movement of only eight bars, seems one of the most capital airs of the first act. The next air, In che peccasti? is dramatic, and would have an effect on the stage from a good actress as well as singer, which in a room and in still life could not be produced. After this, Senesino has an air of spirit, Stelle ingrato, with a lively accompaniment, which, from his majestic voice and action could not fail to please. The subsequent air, Si, peria, for Boschi's powerful voice, has more originality and spirit than any one in the first act. After this, Senesino has another air, Care pupille, upon a favourite, and of course, a common subject with all the composers of those times, but to which little has been added by Bononcini from his own stock of invention. We have then a bravura air, Sdegne tornata, which was sung by the Durastanti, the merits of which may be divined from the divisions, on the next plates. The subsequent air, Caro mio ben, and the last of the first act, begins in dialogue, and ends in duo. It is an elegant and natural Siciliana, which never fails to please, when sung with grace and expression.

(s) Most of the horn passages seem to imply a knowledge of the genius of that instrument; but in the perusal of the score, it is hardly possible to overlook the poverty and false composition of the tenor.

The first air in the next act, Non mi seguir, is impassioned, in the voice-part, and suitable to the situation of the singer; but the accompaniment is unmeaning and frivolous. The second air, La costanza, sung by Senesino, is of two characters: the first movement, slow and soothing; the second, rapid and furious. Senesino probably gave adventitious beauties to this song, which cold notes cannot paint, and of which new fashions in melody render us unfair judges. The next air: Sapete, is light, and now trifling. It is only accompanied by a violoncello in the ancient opera style, with a laboured ritornel, in full harmony. The motivo, or text, of this air, is repeated near twenty times, and being in itself neither uncommon nor beautiful, becomes more and more tiresome at each repetition. After this, another light air, Spero, which is now become so vulgar as to be below criticism. Senesino, however, after this has a slow air, alla Siciliana: Se vuoi che in pace, which is very pleasing, though the passages have been since often introduced into English ballads. And the next air, for Durastanti, O quanto invidia, seems itself but a pleasing and easy ballad. After this the Salvai had an air of spirit and character, Non è poco; but neither in a grand nor tender style. The next air, Mi da crudel, has the merit of vivacity, but discovers neither invention nor science. The most elaborate air in this act seems Mi veggo solo, in which the tenor and violoncello are playing in division and in octaves through the whole movement; but there is little melody in the voice-part, and the violins only mark the accents of each bar. The base to the last movement of Dr. Pepusch's cantata, "See from the silent groves," groves," seems to have suggested this accompaniment (u). The first strain of the next air, Ab no non inganna, is the most chantant and pleasing of the principal woman, Durañanti's part. A light and airy duet, Innamorai, with a French-horn symphony and accompaniment terminates the second act. The novelty of the instruments, the singing, and the facility of the melody, are very likely to captivate an English audience, whose taste in Music, and experience in operas, were at this time not very great.

The third act begins with a gay air, Sai pur s'io vivo, of a common cast, in minuet time; which is followed by another, Così fedele, of a different cast, somewhat more solid, but not more pleasing. The next air, Amante e sposa, is more graceful, and has more spirit and character in the accompaniment than any other in Senesino's part; in which, however, there is none of that grandeur of style, which the abilities of such a finger and actor required. The subsequent air, Coglierò la bella rosa, is natural and pleasing; which is all that can be said of that which follows it: L'esperto nocchiero. We after this have a base song, for Boschi, Disciolte dal piede, which is written with spirit and facility. The divisions in this air seem to imply unusual agility for a voice of such low pitch. The next air, Se vedrai, for Senesino, must have derived its chief merit from the performance; for, as Music, its claims to favour are very small. The most spirited air in the opera is Con disperato sdegno, sung by Galerati. There is an additional song of the same kind for Senesino, L'onor severo, in which the divisions, though now very common, must have had a great effect, as rolled and thundered by the powerful voice and articulate execution of this singer. The duet, Mai non potrei goder, upon the general model of the times, discovers no great resources in fugue and imitation, and the passages of other kinds were not very new at the time.

(u) The first book of Pepusch's cantatas, in which Alexis is contained, was advertised for sale in the Tatler, No. 164, for the 1st of May, 1710.

In the perusal of old operas, discoveries are perpetually made of plagiarisms and imitations in the most favourite vocal airs and instrumental movements of our own composers. The accompaniment to the first movement of this air, for instance, must have suggested to Dr. Arne, the symphony to the recitative which precedes "On ev'ry hill," in Comus; and the air itself is very like one of Handel's, in Amadigi. There is some very extraneous modulation in the second part of this air in Astarto, not very accountable or pleasant.

Divisions in NICOLINI's Songs, and in those of his Contemporaries and immediate Successors.

271

HYDASPES 1710.

Margarita
in D^o

Valentini
in D^o

Ifabella
in D^o

Ifabella
in Etearco
1711

NICOLINI in Hydaspes.

VALENTINI
in D^o

D^o in
D^o

MARGARITA in D^o

Nicolini in E.
-tearco 1711.

D^o in the same Opera

Boschi
in D^o

Senesino in Crispo 1721

D^o

Many of these Divisions occur in Operas of the same period, particularly in HANDEL'S Julius Caesar, and ATTILIO'S Vespasian.

D^o

These passages by frequent use became as common as the Aphorisms in Swift's Trritical Essay, or the Jokes in his Polite Conversation.

In Griseida
1722.

In D^o

Portar

In D^o

In D^o

Accompaniment
in Griseida.

Subject of the 1st Movement in the Overture of D^o

See Overture
in Comus.

I have now carefully and candidly examined this opera, which afforded great pleasure to our ancestors, if we may judge from the number of its representations, amounting to near thirty, in the two first seasons of the Royal Academy ; yet I am unable to discover the cause of its favour from the excellence of the composition. The spirit of party, ignorance of good Music, and an unformed and trivial taste, must have enchanced its value with the public ; but, for my own part, I am not only unable to point out a single air in which there is dignity, originality of design, or a fanciful melody, but to discover that tenderness and pathos, for which Bononcini has been so celebrated, even by those who denied his invention and science. And this sentence is not passed in consequence of the extreme difference between this Music and that of modern times ; but by mounting up to the period of its production, and comparing it with cotemporary compositions, lately perused, in which there are infinitely more of what were thought the necessary requisites of good Music sixty years ago, than can be found in the opera of Astarto.

After the tenth representation of this drama, Radamisto was resumed, and performed December 28th and 31st.

1721. January 4th, Radamisto again. Then Astarto four times, and Radamisto twice. And after one performance more of Astarto ARSACE, a new pasticcio opera was first performed, and had a run of eight nights.

As soon as Handel returned from Dresden, where, as has been already related, he went to engage performers, besides preparing for the stage the opera of Radamisto, he had an act to set of MUZIO SCEVOLA, a drama which the directors chose to divide the task of setting to Music among their three composers : assigning to Attilio, the first act ; Bononcini, the second ; and to Handel the third. This opera has been thought to form an epoch in Handel's life ; as it has been concluded, though without sufficient proof, that the partition of the same drama among the three composers, was a premeditated plan, to try their several abilities, and determine pre-eminence. But it seems to have been thus distributed merely for greater dispatch, without meaning it as a final competition. The same expedient expedient has been frequently practised in Italy for variety as well as expedition, when two or three great masters have been in the same city; and nothing was determined in consequence of this concurrence in London. The three composers were engaged on no such conditions. They were all equally invited hither to compose for the academy, not with the expectation of being dismissed, if an opera, or part of an opera of their composition, happened to be adjudged inferior to that of their colleagues. And though the public will dispute and decide about their own pleasures, of which they are certainly best able to judge, and great feuds arose in consequence of this joint production, yet no one of the three composers was discarded in consequence of this concurrence: for we find Bononcini and Attilio composing operas for the Royal Academy alternately with Handel many years after this event, which has erroneously been always called decisive.

The original score of Handel's portion of this drama is still preserved in his Majesty's collection of this great musician's manuscripts. And having been indulged with an opportunity of examining it at my leisure, I shall lay before the reader such remarks as occurred to me at the time.

The opera of Muzio Scevola, of which I have the original edition of the words, was written expressly for the Royal Academy of Music, by P. A. ROLLI, who signs himself Segretario Italiano della Medesima, Italian secretary of the said Academy. It is dedicated to the King. The singers were Francesco Bernardi detto SENESINO, Matteo Berfelli, and Boschi; with the Margarita Durastanti, Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, Galerati, and Madalena Salvai.

In the distribution of this drama to three composers, assigning to each a single act, it was thought necessary by every one of them to compose an overture, and a chorus, in order to render each act a whole, giving it a beginning, a middle, and an end, in the manner of an entire drama.

The overture composed by Handel, at the beginning of which he has written with his own hand, in French, L' Ouverture pour Acte 3 de Muzio, begins in his usual, grand, and majestic style. The fugue is upon a gay and pleasing subject in triple time, and treated with great felicity (y). The use that he made of the subject in accompanying the solo parts for the two hautbois, has a most admirable effect, in keeping it in mind while it is relinquished by these seeming episodes. It is astonishing to see with what ease and certainty Handel wielded the pen on all occasions, and how clear and well arranged must have been his conceptions previous to committing them to paper. In the first foul copy of this excellent fugue of seven parts, written with the haste of a man whose thoughts flowed faster than his ink, scarce a single note has been altered, blotted, or erased!

The first air, Lungo pensar, which is very pleasing and graceful, with a violin accompaniment of a different character from the voice-part, was composed for the Durastanti, who seems to have had the principal female part in this opera. Handel had frequently been accused of crowding his score with too many parts, by which the voice was suffocated and rendered either inaudible or indistinct; but I can perceive no such redundance of parts in his opera songs, when he had a good singer to write for; the cantilena of this air, for instance, is as clear and free from interruption as a Venetian ballad, the violin part being more frequently in dialogue, than unison, with the voice (z). The second air, Pupille sdegno, preceded by four lines of admirable accompanied recitative, was written for Senesino, and is simple, natural, clear, and elegant: the accompaniment is still more quiet than the preceding, consisting of one violin part only. It is remarkable that this first man's part of Muzio, is wholly written in the soprano clef, though Senesino's voice was always regarded in England as a contralto. It does not appear, however, that he goes higher than D in this part, or lower than C. The next scene produces a piece of such impassioned accompanied recitative, that if Dr. Arnold was not likely to publish it soon in a better manner, I should not resist the wish of presenting it here to my musical readers, reminding them that in the year 1720 this species of dramatic painting, was somewhat new, at least in England.

(y) The F sharp in the answer to the subject was admired by Geminiani as a happy licence, which gratified the ear by a breach of a fugue law, as regulated by solmifation. The first violin and base are in strict canon for the first five bars.

(z) It is more in his oratorios, the songs of which were chiefly written for performers of mean abilities, that Handel made amends for the poverty of the singing, by the richness of the accompaniments.

The air which follows this recitative, Dimmi crudele amore, is full of original spirit; but being already printed, its insertion here is unnecessary. In the fourth scene for Porfena, in the part that was composed for Boschi, Handel has kindled all his fire, in the air, Volate più de' venti, where the running accompaniment of the tenor and base, with the distinct character of the first violin, and the bold and unembarrassed vocal part, render it one of the first airs of the kind which I have ever seen. The second part of this air is pathetic, and very rich in harmony and accompaniment. After this, as an admirable contrast, comes a pathetic air for Senesino, Il confine della vita, upon an elegant and beautiful subject. The air in the fifth scene, Non ti fidar, composed for Mrs. Anaf. Robinson, furnishes no extraordinary testimony of her abilities as a musician. The motivo is, indeed, uncommon and not very easy, and Handel has cancelled near half the song in different places, as if la prima intentione had embarrassed the singer; but the making the hautbois play all her passages in unison, almost amounts to a proof that, however sweet the tone of her voice, and beautiful her person, she was not a firm and steady performer who could go without leading-strings. Indeed, this air seems the least captivating in the whole act. But the next air, Cara, se ti vedrò, which was written for Berselli, is to my present feelings the most pleasing and agreeable of all Handel's charming Sicilianas. This singer must have been high in the composer's favour for taste, as he is left to himself in no less than six ad libitums and adagios, which he had to embellish (a). The next air for Mrs. Robinson is another proof to me that she was not in favour with Handel as a singer. There are

(a) Handel hazarded two or three new combinations in this song, which must have been thought very bold at the time: as the minor ninth and seventh, the sixth, sharp seventh and ninth, &c.

few opportunities in it for the display of a fine voice, taste, or expression; the movement is more lively and ingenious than chantant. The violin and tenor, however, would keep it alive, if little attention were paid to the voice-part. The subsequent air for Senefino, is in itself a very agreeable composition, but, executed by such a singer, must have been captivating. Scene eighth, begins with a pretty air, Ab chi vive, in minuet time, for a third rate singer. Handel has set these words twice over: the second time to a pleasing pastoral strain, with a charming accompaniment for the German flute, then almost a new instrument in England. Mrs. Robinson has now another air of much more consequence than the former; the composition is rich and elaborate, and she had a fair opportunity given her of displaying her voice and pathetic powers in several solo passages, which required good singing.

After this song we have an excellent battle-piece or charge, in which are inserted two or three bars of his celebrated water-piece. This is followed by a very agreeable duet, Vivo senz' alma, which was sung by Berfelli and Mrs. Robinson. This duet, of which the accompaniments are clear and ingenious, begins upon a plan similar to modern dramatic duets; reserving the junction of voices till near the close. After a long recitative, we have another duet, Ma come amar? in a higher style of composition, for the two principal singers, Senefino and the Durastanti. This is upon the ancient model, fugato throughout; but the harmony, contrivance and texture of the parts, at a time when this kind of duet was highly revered, and we may conclude well sung, by singers of the ancient school, must have greatly extended the composer's reputation. The Coro finale is composed of richer materials than are usually bestowed on opera choruses; it contains several passages and effects that remind us of the Coronation Anthem. Upon the whole, this one act of an opera must have evinced the enlightened public, of Handel's great powers of invention and knowledge of harmony as effectually as a hundred entire operas could have done.

Since this article was written, I have met with a printed copy of "The favourite Songs in the Opera called Muzio Scevola,"

published by the elder Walsh and Hare. There is an overture, but no composer is mentioned either of that or of any of the songs; we may, however, suppose the overture to be that which was performed to Bononcini's act of the opera, as it consists of the first and last movement of the overture to Thomyris, which was performed in 1707, and then printed in his name, but probably forgotten at the distance of thirteen years, when Muzio Scevola was performed. The first movement is rather heavy and monotonous, but good composition. The tenor received some corrections in this new edition. The second movement is a jig, of which the best passages belong to Corelli. The third movement is a minuet, in the composition of which, the author put himself to no great expence of thought. Among the songs, I find but one that belongs to the first act, and this, beginning Cedo ma pur mi chiama, we may ascribe to Attilio; but it would add little to his reputation, were I to insert it here. The subject itself is dull, and the repetitions of unmeaning passages are innumerable, and intolerable; and yet it was written for Senesino, for whom he probably did his best. There are four airs in this collection that were sung in the second act, which was set by Bononcini, and three in the third act by Handel. Bononcini's airs are easy and natural, but no vigour of genius is discoverable in the subject, design, or texture of the parts; the passages are repeated in as tiresome a manner in these songs, as in that just mentioned of Attilio; and, compared with the three airs by Handel, which are by no means the best in his act, they seem to be rather the productions of a timid and superficial dilettante, than a professor of great original genius.

What was now called writing upon a theme, or adhering to a subject, was very convenient to a steril fancy; this subject was to be heard as often in a simple melody of one part, as in a fugue of many parts, which occasioned such incessant repetitions of the same passage, in scale, in the fifth, the fourth, with a major and a minor third, as to our ears at present are very dull and tiresome. A song which was sung by Mrs. Barbier, in the Antioco of Gasparini, no contemptible composer, would tire the patience of the greatest admirers mirers of old masters :  &c. seven times. In Nicolini's best songs, the longest division is but the same series of notes repeated above or below their first station in the movement. Corelli hardly ever fails to repeat the same passages in three different keys, generally rising a note higher each time. Such repetitions, however, in all the relative keys, discover much less ingenuity in the composer, and afford less pleasure to the hearer, than such passages as naturally arise out of the subject and are connected with it in melody, measure, and style. In no other art, except architecture, is identity, or exact repetition, a beauty; and in that, symmetry requires the same pillars, windows, and ornaments to be multiplied; but in the sister arts of poetry and painting, the same figures, lines, or ideas, are never presented to the eye or the mind. There are, indeed, happy effects sometimes produced in Music by a precise repetition of the same passage in passionate movements, by which the sentiment is enforced and impressed deeper in the mind, as a nail is driven farther by repeated strokes of the hammer; but this energy is not given to passages by the cold, dull, and barren iteration of the same series of sounds through all possible keys, at which the ear recoils, as a nail does by strokes too frequently repeated. The excess of every style in Music, as well as of every moral virtue, borders upon vice; and the adhering too closely to a subject in Music seems to have been the vice of the last age, which by repressing invention, and manacled imagination, frequently occasioned dulness and monotony. It is but justice to say, that Handel's resources and good taste enabled him to shun the excess of repetition more than any one of his contemporaries; and I have been often surprised in perusing his early works, to see how ingeniously he has avoided those insipid repetitions in which his contemporaries indulged themselves.

Between the second and third representation of Mutius Scevola, the opera of Arfice was performed once, May 10th, for a benefit. Then Muzio again, on the 13th and 17th of the same month. After this, May 20th, a new opera, composed by Attilio Ariosti, entitled CIRO,

O. L'ODIO.

O L' ODIO, ET AMORE, was performed four times, and Muzio Scevola once more. The favourite songs of Ciro were printed by Walsh, and after eight representations it was laid aside till November 1722, when it was revived and performed four times. The theatre closed this season, July 5th, after Durastanti's benefit by command*.

It seems as if the efforts of three great composers, and of the completest band of fingers which had yet been assembled in this country, had not indemnified the directors of the Royal Academy of Music for the expence of supporting the undertaking; for on July the 10th, the following advertisement appeared in the Daily Courant, No 6152.

"The court of directors of the Royal Academy of Musick finding several subscribers in arrear on the calls made on them this year, do hereby desire them to pay in the same before Thursday the 2d inst. otherwise they shall be obliged to return them as defaulters, at the general court to be held that day, for their instructions how to proceed: and it appearing to the said court of directors, on examining the accounts, that when the calls already made are fully answered, there will still remain such a deficiency as to render it absolutely necessary to make another call to clear the year's expences. The said court of directors have therefore ordered another call of £.4 per cent. (which is the sixth call) to be made on the several subscribers, payable on or before the 27th inst. Attendance will be given on that and the two preceding days, at the office in the Hay-market, in order to the same."

Now as £.50,000 was the original sum subscribed, the first call of £.5 per cent. amounted to £.2500. And as all the several calls which I have seen advertised in the papers of the times, are for £.5 each, except the last, we may fairly suppose that a sum nearly a-

* This finger seems to have been in great favour at court; for in the Evening Post, No. 1810, from Saturday March 4th, to Tuesday the 7th, 1722, we have the following paragraph: "Last Thursday, his Majesty was pleased to stand godfather, and the Princess and the Lady Bruce, godmothers, to a daughter of M^{rs}. Durastanti, chief singer in the opera-house. The Marquis Visconti for the King, and the Lady Litchfield for the Princess."

mounting to £. 15,000 had been sunk in a little more than a year, from the establishment of the academy.

October 30th, the opera of Arface was advertised for Nov. 1st. But previous to this, Oct. 21st, a general meeting was summoned for the 25th of the same month, when "all persons concerned were desired to attend, and also to order the payment due on their calls. Attendance will be given at the office the two preceding days for the receipt thereof, and a list of defaulters to be laid before the said general court, to receive their instructions how to proceed hereon." And November 2d, in consequence of this meeting the following advertisement was inserted in the Daily Courant :

"By order of a general court of the Royal Academy of Musick, held October 25th, 1721. Whereas some few of the subscribers to the operas have neglected, notwithstanding repeated notice has been given them, to pay the calls which have been regularly made by the court of directors, and according to the condition of the said subscription, signed by each of the said subscribers: these are to give further notice to every such defaulter, that unless he pays the said calls on or before the 22d of November next, his name will be printed, and he shall be proceeded against with the utmost rigour of the law."

The next day, November 3d, a further call of five per cent. which was the seventh call, payable on or before the 8th, appeared in the same newspaper.

On the 20th of November, another general court of the corporation of the Royal Academy of Music was announced for the 22d, when new directors were to be chosen. And the next day another meeting was held for the choice of a new deputy-governor, when the Duke of Manchester was elected. On the 25th, the following advertisement appeared :

"Application having been made to the Royal Academy of Musick, for tickets entitling the bearers to the liberty of the house for the ensuing season; the academy agree to give out tickets to such as shall subscribe on the conditions following, viz. that each subscriber, on the delivery of his ticket, pay ten guineas. That on the 1st of February next ensuing, such subscriber pay a further sum of five guineas. And likewise five guineas more on the 1st of May following. And whereas the academy propose the acting fifty operas this season, they oblige themselves to allow a deduction proportionably, in case fewer operas be performed than that number."

the

This seems the origin of a general subscription, free from all risks of future demands.

At the beginning of this season the three operas of Arface, Astarto, and Radamisto, were performed alternately from November 1st to December 9th, when a new opera called FLORIDANTE, written by Rolli, and set by Handel, was brought on the stage.

The singers in this opera were Senesino, Baldassarri, sometimes called Benedetto, who had been here before in 1712, Boschi, Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, and the Salvai. The overture, though bold and masterly, is perhaps one of the least pleasing, and the most seldom performed of any one of Handel's compositions of this kind. One cause of the little favour it has obtained is the want of a popular air at the end; but besides that, the fugue being upon a convulsive and unpleasant theme, which has given birth to no counter-subject of a different cast, or variety of style or passage, even in the solo parts for the hautbois, the movement seems dull and monotonous (a). In the first act, after two pleasing airs in very different styles by Mrs. Anastasia Robinson and the Salvai, Senesino had a Siciliana, Alma mia, which an ordinary singer can always render agreeable, and a fine voice exquisite. In the air Ma pria vedrò, the words are admirably expressed, particularly, precipitarfi in Mar, to which the sounds given are true echos to the sense; and the symphonies of this air are characteristic of Handel's fire and thunder.

The partizans for Bononcini seem to have had little foundation for their praise of his plaintive and pathetic songs; as there are generally more airs of that kind in a single act of an opera set by Handel, than in any one of Bononcini's whole dramas. In the first sung, was given to Berenstadt, an evirato of a huge unwieldy figure; and Mrs. Robinson's to Margherita Durastanti, whose person was coarse and masculine; Mrs. Robinson being only assigned the second woman's part, which at first had been performed by the Salvai. This opera was performed ten nights, successively. Then Floridante twice; and February 22d, GRISELDA, another new opera, set by Bononcini, was brought on the stage. This drama, which was new written by Rolli, upon the plan of an opera of the same name by Apostolo Zeno, performed at Venice 1701, seems to have been regarded as Bononcini's best theatrical production in this country; and being in possession of a complete score of the Music, I shall peruse it with attention, and endeavour to give my musical readers an idea of its merit.

(a) The fugue resembles one in his harpsichord lessons, but is longer, and less pleasing.

It is manifest that Handel's bold and varied style, rich harmony, and ingenious contrivance, had made such an impression on the public, as to render it necessary for Bononcini, in setting this opera, to quit his ambling nag, and to mount his great horse, accoutred in all his trappings, and endeavour to move with unusual pomp and stateliness. In the overture he introduced trumpets and kettle-drums; gave a rapid solo part to the first violin, and a minuet at the end; wisely waving the usual fugue, probably from a consciousness of his inability to rival Handel in that species of composition. The first movement is likewise different from most others of the time, by being cast in a mould totally unlike that of Lulli. And upon the whole, this overture is one of the best instrumental compositions that I have seen of this author.

The melodies, in general, of this opera, are as graceful and elegant as any of the time, and though there is little ingenuity of design in the accompaniments, or science in the harmony and modulation, yet there is a clearness and facility of style, which was more likely to afford pleasure to the unlearned and greater part of an audience, than original and masterly composition, of which they knew nothing. In process of time, however, Handel taught us how to judge of these, and to despise inartificial composition, in which harmony is sacrificed to trite and frivolous melodies, consisting of rapid pid and unconnected passages of execution, which by frequent use are become as common and insipid as the flat and stale jokes of Swift's Polite Conversation. Senesino's first air, Parto, amabile ben mio, is not without dignity, and seems to have been well suited to that performer's style of acting and singing. The accompaniment to Quanto mi spiro, is lively and well supported. The divisions in the songs of execution, appear now, as usual, at any distance of time, to be the most common and trifling parts of each melody.

Senesino's capital air in the second act, seems more calculated to introduce a symphony for French horns, than shew the abilities of this great singer; the passages are in themselves poor, and enriched by no other accompaniment than a violoncello.

The base songs in this opera, composed for Boschi, are more inferior to those of Handel, than the airs of any other kind. A voice sufficiently powerful to bid an orchestra defiance, and not so mellifluous as to make us regret the diminution of its force by a band well disciplined and well employed, afforded an opportunity for opening all his sources of harmony and contrivance, which he seldom neglected. None of Mrs. Robinson's airs are remarkably captivating now; and yet, it is supposed, that by the performance of the part of Griselda, or Patient Grisel, in this opera, she completed her conquest over the stout heart of the Earl of Peterborough. Indeed, there seems to have been some remote similarity in the situations of that character, and the events of Mrs. Robinson's own life. Griselda, a country girl of mean birth, elevated for her beauty, to a throne; then degraded, and sent back to her original obscurity; and, for her virtues, afterwards restored to royalty, with superior splendor to that of her first exaltation. Mrs. Robinson, the daughter of an artist of no great eminence, elevated to a theatrical throne for her beauty and talents; then quitting her high dramatic state, and, in appearance, degrading herself to the humble character of mistress to a nobleman, who afterwards owned her for his wife, and invested her with all the honours, privileges, and splendor, of a peeress of Great Britain. The best air in Griselda seems to be Son qual face, in which there is dignity, and a marked character of accompaniment.

This opera had twelve successive representations ; then Crispus four, Floridante two, and Grifelda again five. After which, Crispus, Floridante, Astartus, and Grifelda, were acted by turns till the end of the season, June 16th.

The theatre opened again, November 7th, with Muzio Scevola, after three performances of which, Attilio's Cyrus was revived and exhibited five times ; then Floridante seems to have been renovated in the favour of the public, being represented seven times successively, running almost during the whole month of December. After this Crispus was performed, till January 12th, 1723. When a new opera came out, entitled OTTONE, or OTHO, written by Haym, and set to Music by Handel. This opera was composed in the summer of 1722 ; as Handel's foul score, in his Majesty's collection, is dated by the author himself, à Londres, August 10th, 1722. This had eleven successive representations, continuing to run till February 16th. The overture to this opera long remained in favour throughout the nation : the opening is remarkably pleasing, and the fugue on a gay and agreeable subject ; the fugue first intended for this overture, according to Handel's original manuscript score, was afterwards transposed into A sharp, and used in the overture of Julius Cæsar ; but the gavot at the end, which was the first popular final air in any of Handel's overtures, that were as yet composed, though now made vulgar by frequent use as a horn-pipe or country-dance, was the delight of all who could play, or hear it played, on every kind of instruments, from the organ to the salt-box (b). The second air Giunt' in porto è la speranza, which is extremely gay and pleasing, has been omitted in the printed copy.

The band of singers being reinforced by the arrival of Cuzzoni, was now much stronger than it had ever been heretofore ; consisting of Senesino, Berenstadt, and Boschi, for men's parts ; and Cuzzoni, Durastanti, and Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, for the female.

The number of songs in this opera that became national favourites, is perhaps greater than in any other that was ever performed

(b) Though an air is rendered common and vulgar by general use, and depreciated in the opinion of fastidious hearers, it is a sure mark of original excellence, to have afforded universal pleasure when new. But few airs of this happy kind are ever produced by the greatest composers during a long life.

in England. The slow air, Falsa imagine, the first which Cuzzoni sung in this country, fixed her reputation as an expressive and pathetic singer; as Affanni del pensier did Handel's, as a composer of such songs. The airs sung by Senesino, Ritorna o dolce amor, Dopo l'orrore, Dove sei (c), Tanti affanni, all in different styles, have severally some peculiar merit of melody, harmony, or contrivance. The airs for Durastanti, La speranza, Pensa ad amare, long after they had done their duty at the opera-house, were favourites with all the performers on the German-flute in the kingdom, which about this time superseded the common-flute, and became the fashionable gentleman's instrument. Del minacciar del vento (d), and No, non temere, two airs for Boschi in different styles, are admirable. Handel is as superior to other composers in his base songs as choruses. An excellent symphony played in the first act, was afterwards printed as part of one of his hautbois concertos. The accompanied recitative for Cuzzoni, O grati orrori, with the subsequent air, S'io dir potessi, had a great effect in the performance, as I have often been assured by persons who heard the opera performed. The duet, Vieni o figlio, in the style of Steffani, is a fine composition; and the light and gay duet, Teneri affetti, was long a favourite with flute players. Indeed, there is scarce a song in the opera, that did not become a general favourite, either vocally or instrumentally. And the passages in this and the other operas which Handel composed about this time, became the musical language of the nation, and in a manner proverbial, like the bons mots of a man of wit in society. So that long after this period all the musicians in the kingdom, whenever they attempted to compose what they called Music of their own, seem to have had no other stock of ideas, than these passages (e).

This, though a humiliating confession, is a disgrace not peculiar to England. The French who, during the last century, had a taste to form, were wholly indebted to Lulli, a foreigner, for all

(c) Different from the air in Rodelinda.

(d) There is a tenor part to this song in Handel's original manuscript, which is omitted in the printed copy.

(e) Otbo was revived and the book of the words reprinted in 1726. It sustained eleven uninterrupted representations, and during the same year nine more, with additions.

their

their musical ideas, at least in the theatre. And the Germans, who have always had men of great abilities of their own country in the composition and performance of instrumental Music, were not less obliged to the language, melody, and taste of Italy, for their vocal dramatic Music, than the English.

February 19th, after the first run of Otho was over, CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS, written likewise by Haym, and set by ATTILIO ARIOSTI, was brought on the stage, and had ten successive representations. The singers were the same, with the addition of Mr. Gordon, as in Otho; which opera was again performed, March 26th, for the benefit of Cuzzoni.

March 30th, ERMINIA, a new opera set by Bononcini, was first performed, and was repeated April 2d, 6th, 16th, 20th, 27th, 30th, and May the 4th, when it gave way to two representations of Coriolanus.

About this time, the following advertisement appeared frequently in the papers: "There remaining very few of the subscribers who have neglected to pay the calls of the Royal Academy of Music, pursuant to the late advertisement in several Courants and the Gazette of the 23d of March last; and the court of directors supposing that such neglect may have proceeded from the respective persons either being out of town, or not apprised of the said advertisement, have therefore thought fit to prolong the time till Monday, the 8th inst. (April); and after such time, the tickets of those that have not paid their calls will be absolutely refused, other subscribers taken in their room, and proper measures taken to oblige them to pay what is due."

After this, the opera of FLAVIUS, written by Haym, and set by Handel, was first performed May 14th.

The poet in his dedication of this drama to the directors of the Royal Academy of Music, says that operas in England had originated from the foundation of the theatre in the Hay-market, 1705, and that he himself had had some share in laying the first stone: meaning the assistance he had afforded to Clayton and others, in nursing this amusement while in its infancy. That it had been ever

ever since advancing to perfection in the slow manner by which all excellence is acquired, till it was so nobly patronised and supported by the united generosity and diligence of such a great number of the first personages in the kingdom, that they had now qualified this elegant and innocent amusement in their own country, to dispute the palm with Italy itself.

The singers in this opera, though not mentioned in the dramatic personæ, appear, from the printed copy of the Music published by Handel himself, to have been Senesino, Berenstadt, Boschi, Mr. Gordon, Cuzzoni, Durastanti, and Mrs. Robinson.

The overture, though it has no third movement, is admirable. The opening is at once solemn and pleasing, and the fugue upon two new subjects, is treated in a manner totally different from all his other excellent productions of that kind (f). Though this opera is less renowned than many other of Handel's dramatic compositions; and though few of the songs were in such high favour in the theatre, or so long and universally used off the stage, after its run was over, as those of Otho, yet there are innumerable fine and masterly strokes in it, that would have set up an inferior composer, who had his reputation to make. The alla breve air for Boschi, in the second act, S'egli ti chiede affetto, which is fugato, and in the church style, is extremely artificial and masterly; in the second part, the subject of imitation is inverted with great skill in the accompaniments. In an air for Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, in the same act, Con un vizzo, there is an imitation carried on between the voice part and first violin, of which Dr. Boyce, one of the most honest of our composers, afterwards availed himself in a favourite movement of his sonatas. The opera had then so long been laid aside, that to draw from it incurred no danger of detection (g). Senesino's air, Amor, nel mio penar, in B flat minor, is extremely pathetic; and the subject of the duet, Deh perdona, is still new and (f) The reply to the first subject being constantly made in the octave below, instead of the fourth or fifth.

(g) In the examination of old operas, particularly those of Handel, we see the first idea and source of almost every movement and passage of our own composers' productions, that were most in favour with the public.

graceful, graceful, though the divisions, as usual in old Music, have been long since worn out.

This opera, with two performances of Otho, ran to the end of the season, which closed, June 15th, with the eighth representation of Flavius.

In November following, the theatre opened again, with FARNACE, an opera set by Bononcini, which was first performed on the 27th; and which, after the fourth representation, was laid aside for Otho, which had now another run of six nights (b).

1724. After three representations of Farnace, VESPASIANO, a new opera, written by Nicolo Haym, and set to Music by Attilio Ariosti, was first performed, January 14th, and continued in run till February 20th.

The opera of Vespasian, written by Nicolo Haym, and set by Attilio Ariosti, was first performed January 14th, and had a run of nine nights successively. As the Music of this drama was published by the composer himself, we may suppose the score to be complete and correct. I shall therefore review it, as a fair specimen of the abilities of one of the renowned triumvirate, who at this time divided the nation into musical factions.

This master, who was a native of Bologna and intended for the priesthood, had in early youth such a passion for Music that, defeating all the intentions of his family, he devoted his whole time to the study of it, and, in spite of all remonstrances, determined to make it his profession. He was known in Germany much earlier than in England: as Walther tells us, that he composed La Festa d' Imeneo, & Atis, at Brandenburg, in 1700, where he was appointed Maestro di Capella to the Electrice. But before he quitted Italy we find his name enrolled among the opera composers at Bologna and Venice: in the first city he set an act of Apostolo Zeno's Daphne, in 1696; and in the second, the opera of Erifile (i).

(b) The new lyric productions of this year, 1723, amounted to six: one by Attilio, two by Bononcini, and three by Handel.

(i) Le Gloria della Poesia & della Musica. Here he is called Padre Attilio Ari- osti, Servita Bolognese; and it is believed that he had been regularly initiated as a Dominican friar, but that by a dispensation from the pope he had been exempted from the rule of his order, and permitted to exercise a secular profession.

In

In 1706, he composed Nebuchadonasar, an oratorio, for Venice; and the same year the opera called La più gloriosa Fatica d' Ercole, for his native city Bologna. In 1708, we find him again at Vienna, when he set to Music the opera of Amor tra Nemici. His first arrival in England was in the year 1716, where it appears, by the London Courant, that at the sixth representation of Handel's Amadigi, July 12th, he performed a new symphony on the viol d' amour, an instrument unknown in this country till that time. We hear no more of him till the establishment of the Royal Academy of Music in 1721, when he composed the opera of Ciro or Odio ed Amore; the first act of Muzio Scevola; and afterwards two other operas already mentioned.

The opera of Vespasian, of this year, has considerable merit. The overture, in the style of the times, is a good composition; the opening is spirited, the fugue well-worked, and there is a gay and pleasing gavot, en rondeau, at the end. Attilio seems to have been a perfect good harmonist, who had treasured up much good Music in his head, but had little invention. I can sometimes trace Corelli in his works, who we are certain did not steal from him; but as for his immediate cotemporaries, there appear, on a general reading, so many claimants for the favourite passages of the day, that it is difficult to assign them to the right owners. In Vespasian, Senesino has a natural simple air in minuet time, page 17, and Mrs. Robinson one that is pathetic, page 18, of the printed copy, both of which were likely to captivate an audience. Page 24, there is an adagio which a good finger might render modern and elegant at any period of time. But the most spirited air in the opera is Sorga pur, page 32; and page 35, Io ti lascio, sung by Mrs. Robinson, is pathetic and pleasing. His divisions were blown upon ere he used them; but divisions being the fashionable trimmings of an air, are as general as those of a garment.

Handel, Bononcini, and Attilio, all give the same divisions in songs of execution, as they did in rapid accompaniments to other songs. As Senesino's aria d' abilità, in Vespasiano, seems to include all the roulemens, or rapid passages he was able to execute, I shall, on the next plates, insert it, as an an exhibition of all the furbelows, flounces, and vocal fopperies of the times.

The opera of Vespasian was succeeded by Handel's JULIUS CÆSAR (k). The overture and airs of this musical drama were neatly engraved in an octavo size soon after it was performed, and published by Handel himself, under a patent obtained in June 1720, for the sole printing and publishing his works for the term of fourteen years. The patent was signed by Mr. Secretary Craggs, the friend of Pope, whose epitaph upon him is well known.

Handel's manuscript score of Julius Cæsar, in his Majesty's possession, is complete in every respect but the recitatives, of which though the words are all transcribed by the composer himself ready for their musical cloathing, yet the notes were never set to them in this copy of the opera.

The first movement of the overture, and the fugue, have as much fire and animation in them as he ever manifested on such occasions; but the minuet was never much in favour with the public, perhaps from the too great number of repetitions of the same passage, in the printed copy; but in the manuscript score it appears that this minuet was merely the accompaniment to a very pleasing chorus, Viva, viva il nostro Alcide, with which the first scene opens. The subsequent air, Presti omai, is totally different from that which is printed, and I think more original and more excellent; and instead of the printed air, Priva sen d' ogni conforto, is a pathetic and charming duet alla Siciliana. But upon a further comparison of the score with the old printed copy, it appears that the airs are all dislocated from their original situation, and that this is a second score made by Handel on the revival of the opera in 1725, when several new singers first appeared in it. The original set were Senesino, Berenstadt, and Boschi; with Cuzzoni, Durastanti, and Mrs. Robinson. In the second set, instead of Berenstadt, Durastanti, and

(k) This drama was written by Nicolo Haym, and dedicated to the Princess of Wales, afterwards Queen Caroline, in which he tells her royal highness that the first musical sounds she heard were those produced by the voice of the celebrated Pistocco, the father of good taste, then in the service of her illustrious fire, at the court of Anspach.

Aria nel Vespasiano.

Attilio Ariosti.

293

Presto

Ah tradi-tore spi-rar vor-re - i dai Labbri mie - i con -
 - tro il tuo fe no mor-ta - le mor-tale ardor Ah tradi-tore Ah tradito-re spi-rar vor-re - i dai Labbri mie - i mor-ta - le mor-ta-le ardor spi-rar vor-re - i mor-ta - le ardor mortale ardor.
 le ardor mortale ardor.

Vorrei che dar-di fosser gli sguardi per lacerar-ti in mille par-
-ti nel petto il Cor vorrei che dar-di fosser gli sguardi per lacerar-ti in mille par-
-ti in petto il
cor in pet- to il cor Ah Ah Ah tradito-re spi Dal segno

4 x

8.

Mrs. Robinson, I find, by the printed copy of the words, that Pacini, Borosini, and the Dotti were employed. This accounts for the recitatives not having been filled up by Handel in the new copy, as they were probably transcribed by his copyist from the first foul score.

In the second part of the air, Svegliatevi nel core, first composed for the Durastanti, Handel seems again to have felt the peculiar power of octaves in the treble parts of the accompaniments, and has made an admirable use of them. The words Nel tuo seno, which are finely set in the printed copy, he has new set in this manuscript to a still more pathetic air. The air V' adoro pupille, in the second act, was prefaced by a long symphony for the viol da Gamba, which is omitted in the printed copy. And the air Venere bella, new set; but, I think, to a less pleasing melody than the former. The fine composition set to Se pietà, is in the manuscript score preceded by a turbulent symphony, through which a chorus of conspirators is heard at a distance; and likewise an accompanied recitative not printed. There is also in the third act, a very spirited martial symphony in the manuscript score, that was played during the conflict between the troops of Ptolemy and Cleopatra. The air Troppo crudele siete, which is added in the manuscript score to the part of Cleopatra, for Cuzzoni, is one of the finest of all Handel's admirable Sicilianas. There is likewise a most magnificent symphony in ten parts, as an introduction to the last scene, which has not been printed with the rest of the opera. There are perhaps fewer capital and captivating airs in this opera than in its predecessor Otho; but there are three accompanied recitatives superior to those of any that I have seen in his other operas, or in any operas by cotemporary composers; these are the celebrated Alma del gran Pompeo, and Dall' ondosò periglio, which are printed, and in which Senesino gained so much reputation as an actor, as well as singer; and one that is equally beautiful and pathetic, for Cuzzoni, in the last act, beginning Voi, che mie fide ancelle, which is not printed.

The airs, Priva son; Va tacito, richly accompanied with remarkably fine solo parts for a French horn; L'Empio Sleale, a bold and theatrical base song of great spirit and effect; Tu sei il cor, very original, and unlike all other base songs; All' lampo dell' armi, full of fire and genius, though the divisions are now antiquated; Piangerò la sorte mia, which is truly pathetic, and in a style in which Handel was almost always sure of success; the second part of this air reminds us of the base to a movement in Corelli's eleventh solo; the air, Da tempeste, for Cuzzoni, till the arrival of Faustina, admired as a very extraordinary bravura; Non ha di che temere, sung by Mrs. Robinson, which is pleasing and singular; there is however a triple rosalia in it, page 108, which for the sake of the base is more excusable than most repetitions of this kind. These are the principal airs of Julius Cæsar, an opera abounding with beauties of various kinds, but in which both the composer and performers seem to have acquired even more reputation from the recitatives than the airs (1).

This opera sustained thirteen successive representations, from February 20th to April the 11th, and was afterwards frequently revived.

April 16th, Coriolanus was performed for a benefit, after which on the 18th, CALPHURNIA, an opera written by Grazio Braccioli for Venice, 1713, and now somewhat altered by Haym, and set by Bononcini for the Royal Academy of Music, was first performed. It had an uninterrupted run of nine nights, from April 18th to May 16th; after which AQUILIO, a new pasticcio, had five representations, which with two more of Calphurnia, terminated the season, June 13th, when Mrs. Anastasia Robinson quitted the theatre.

The arrival of Cuzzoni in England seems to have diminished the importance of this most amiable person on the stage, as well as that of the Durastanti; anterior to that period, they seem alternately to have performed the principal female parts; but now they

(1) The small engraved score of the songs in this opera, is the most full and complete of any copy of Handel's operas which had been hitherto published. There is a folio pirated edition of the songs of Julius Cæsar, in two books, but more incomplete.

were degraded to second and third parts. Whether this diminution of theatrical honour accelerated Mrs. Robinson's retreat from the stage, and her enjoyment of honours of a more solid kind; or whether she quitted the stage in consequence of an affront she had received from Senesino, and for which he underwent a severe chastisement, is now not easy to determine (m).

October 31st, the lyric theatre was again opened, with a new drama called TAMERLANE, written by Nicola Haym, and set by Handel. The book of the words is dedicated by the author to the Duke of Rutland, not only as one of the directors of the Royal Academy of Music, and a liberal patron of science, but as a nobleman who, by study and application, had rendered himself a most intelligent judge both of the theory and practice of the art of Music (n).

The original performers in this opera were Senesino, Paccini, Boschi, and Borosini; with the Cuzzoni and Anna Dotti. The overture is well known, and retains its favour among the most striking and agreeable of Handel's instrumental productions (o). I have never seen a complete score of this opera; all I am able to speak to being a few of the favourite songs, that were surreptitiously published, in despite of Handel's patent.

After the performance or perusal of an opera by Bononcini or Attilio, the preceding to one of Handel's, is going from Arabia Petrea to Arabia Felix; from barren rocks to spontaneous fertility. Many of Handel's operas offer perhaps more specimens of his fire and learning, but none more pleasing melodies and agreeable effects. The air sung by Senesino, Se non mi rende, is extremely gay and (m) Mr. Walpole says, that he well remembers this quarrel, at the time, to have been an animated topic of conversation. It was said that Mrs. Robinson had been offended by Senesino at a public rehearsal of an opera, for which Lord Peterborough publicly and violently caned him behind the scenes.

(n) It is well known that the first Duke of Rutland was an excellent performer on the violin; that his grace brought Carbo-nelli hither from Italy, when he returned from his tour through that country; and that the solos which this musician dedicated him, were composed expressly for his use.

(o) See Commemoration of Handel, p. 97. where the two first movements of this overture have been described; but the minuet, which was judiciously omitted in Westminster-Abbey, is among the best final movements of Handel's overtures.

ingenious.

ingenious. The imitations and dialogue between the voice-part and accompaniments is supported with great art and felicity, without the least appearance of labour. The slow part of the next air, for Cuzzoni, Folle sei, is in a very captivating style of cantabile. And the pastoral sung by the Dotti, Par che mi nasca, is a beautiful melody and beautifully accompanied. Cuzzoni's next song, Non è più tempo, is gay and pleasing. In the next, Deh lasciati mi, the composer, in compliance with the taste of the times, adheres perhaps somewhat too closely to the text, almost every two bars being in nearly the same metre. It is, however, original and totally different from all the other songs in the opera; and the last air in this collection, Bella asteria, seems to be one in which Senesino, according to the idea with which tradition has furnished us of his powers, must have greatly distinguished himself (p).

This opera ran all the month of November, and after nine successive representations, was succeeded by ARTASERSE, a drama written by Apostolo Zeno, and set by Attilio, which had likewise nine representations, continuing to run from December 1st to the 29th (q).

1725. January 2d, Julius Caesar was revived and performed eleven times, with little interruption; after which RODELINDA QUEEN OF LOMBARDY, an opera written by Haym and set by Handel, was first performed February 13th, and continued in run thirteen nights. The singers were the same as in Tamerlane.

(p) November 17th, during the run of Tamerlane, the following three advertisements were inserted in the Daily Courant, No. 7204. First, for a general court on Wednesday, December 2d, to chuse a new deputy-governor and directors. Second, that no member of the corporation would be allowed to vote in chusing him, who had not paid the several calls made by the Royal Academy, at the time of such election. Third, for a further call of £. 5 per cent. which was the twelfth, on or before the 12th of December.

(q) It is somewhat extraordinary, that Nicola Haym, who, in the seeming character of author, dedicates this drama to the Duke of Richmond, never mentions the name of Zeno, either in the title or dedication, though it is precisely the same in the London edition, as in the Venetian, for which it was written 1708; except that the two inferior characters of Berenice and Lido, for want of performers, were omitted on the English stage. The singers in this opera were the same as those of the preceding year. The favourite songs of Caphurnia, Aquilius, and Artaxerxes, were printed, and are now before me; but they furnish no new proofs of the abilities of the masters who composed them.

(r) Handel himself has recorded the day and year when he had finished the composition of this drama; having written on the last page with his own hand, in the foul score of his Majesty's collection—Fine dell' opera, li 20 di Genaro 1725.

The

The overture to this opera is so spirited and different from the author's former introductions of this kind, that it long remained in favour; this favour, however, was considerably lengthened by the natural and pleasing minuet at the end, which required no great science or sentiment to write, perform, or hear. But this cannot be said of the air with which the opera begins, Ho perduto il caro sposo, which is of that kind of elegant pathetic which no change in musical taste can injure. Cuzzoni gained great reputation by the tender and plaintive manner in which she executed this song (s). The second air, E' empio rigor, which is gay and airy, was likewise sung by Cuzzoni. The third air, which was sung by Borosini, is well written, and has in it two or three very masterly and pleasing passages. The next air, sung by A. Dotti, the second woman, is sufficiently lively in itself to attract attention from the finger to the composition. The fifth air, for Boschi, Di cupido impiego, has Handel's usual fire in writing for this celebrated performer of base songs. After this there is a solemn and beautiful symphony to introduce a fine accompanied recitative, Pompe vane di morte, which Senesino pronounced, according to tradition, with uncommon energy and expression, previous to a beautiful and always favourite air, Dove sei amato bene (t). The whole seventh scene, beginning Ombre, piante, urne funeste, where Rodelinda ap-

(s) There is but one bar in this air which a great singer need modernize to remove every appearance of age: if instead of F natural, in the following passage, it were made sharp, it might pass for a composition of Handel's grandson.

The great favour of Cuzzoni received little addition from her personal charms; as Mr. Walpole, who perfectly remembers her in the character of Rodelinda, says she was short and squat, with a doughy cross face, but fine complexion; was not a good actress; dressed ill; and was silly and fantastical. And yet on her appearing in this opera, in a brown silk gown, trimmed with silver, with the vulgarity and indecorum of which all the old ladies were much scandalised, the young adopted it as a fashion, so universally, that it seemed a national uniform for youth and beauty.

(t) The favour of this air extended into the country, where it was heard with indulgence at a concert fifteen years after its performance; when, without knowing how to construe, or even pronounce the words, I had been taught to sing it by the organist of Chester, at fourteen years old.

pears with her infant son at the tomb of her supposed deceased husband, is in a grand theatrical style of pathetic. She has an air of rage and passion in the next scene, Morraì sì, which is likewise very dramatic. In the subsequent air, Se per te, sung by Borosini, the style is totally different from all the rest, and there is a peculiar felicity in the manner of setting the interrogative, perche? which must have had a good effect on the stage. Though the divisions in songs of the same age, particularly for the same finger, generally seem to be cast in the same mould, yet those of the air, Sono i colpi della sorte, composed for Paccini in the first act, do not come under this description, as they were not only new in 1725, but are so still. The last air of the act is masterly, and full of ideas which correspond with the words, though some of the passages have since been in too frequent use to be now either new or elegant.

The first air of the second act, though written for an under singer, has spirit sufficient to excite attention. Rodelinda's first air, Spietati; io vi giurai, in this act, is not in Handel's score, though he mentions it after the recitative with which it was introduced; but instead of it, is a very pleasing and favourite air, Ben spesso in vago prato, which was long after parodied, or rather burlesqued, by Harry Carey, to the words, O my pretty Punchinello. But even to this balderdash, it is the prettiest air to which English words had ever been applied, and will always give pleasure as a melody of a gay and lively cast. After this, Borosini had an air that is extremely gay, graceful, and pleasing: Prigioniera ho l'alma, in which the accompaniment for the violins is very difficult. The next is a base song, for Boschi, of a very original and admirable cast. Then Pacini has an air, Fra tempeste, which, though inferior to the rest, was at the time a good song, for a second or third finger; as Con rauco mormorio, which follows it, is for a first. This air for Senesino, is in Handel's best Sicilian style, with a fine bassoon-part, echoing the first violin and voice throughout. After this comes, Scacciata dal suo nido, the same air transposed into C minor, as occurred before in F sharp to the words Ben spesso in vago prato, but, with the symphony and accompaniment, much altered. The next next air is a very pleasing Siciliana for Cuzzoni: Ritorna o cara. This was followed by an air of great spirit and ingenuity of accompaniment, for Borosini, not so low as usual for a base finger, but in the true style of airs for that pitch of voice: Tuo drudo, è mio rivale. The second act was terminated by a duet: Io t'abbraccio, which may be ranked among Handel's finest compositions (u).

The first air in the third act: Un zeffiro spiro, though written for Pacini, a subaltern finger, is very graceful and pleasing, and very richly and gayly accompanied by a flute, a violin, tenor, violoncello, bassoon, and base. After this, the Dotti has a gay and chearful air: Quanto più fiera, in which there are many new and pleasing passages. Borosini has likewise an air of spirit: Fra sospetti, in which the symphony and accompaniment abound in elegant and lively traits of melody. But Handel seems to have reserved the chief part of his force for the third scene, in which Senesino, the hero of the drama, in a dungeon, has one of the finest pathetic airs that can be found in all his works: Cbi di voi. This air is rendered affecting by new and curious modulation, as well as by the general cast of the melody. It is followed by a fine soliloquy for the same actor, in an accompanied recitative, à tempo, or measured, which if not the first, was at least a very early attempt at such a dramatic effect. Cuzzoni after this had an air in the highest style of pathetic: Se il mio duol, of which the melody, harmony, and accompaniment by a flute, violin, tenor, bassoon, and base, are in Handel's best style of cantabile. This air can never be old-fashioned, as long as a good finger and orchestra can be found. Senesino's next air is light and agreeable, Verrete a consolarmi. These words are not in the printed book, but instead of them the follow-

(u) The original score of Rodelinda in his Majesty's possession, has been much deranged by the composer, who, on the revival of this opera at different times, changed some of the airs, and removed others from their original station. The duet has been taken out, probably for insertion in some other drama; and instead of it there are two airs: S'armi a miei danni, for a tenor, and Dal mio brando, for a counter-tenor, of which the words are not to be found in the printed book of this drama. These are both airs of spirit, and full of Handel's usual fire. The admirable duet: Io t'abbraccio, was performed in the Pantheon at the Commemoration of Handel, in the account of which, p. 66. some of its beauties are specified.

ing: Se fierà belva, to which I find no Music in the original score. Borosini has after this an animated and passionate recitative, followed by a pastoral air of the most elegantly simple kind: Pastorello di povero armento. A very pleasing and lively air for Cuzzoni: Mio caro, caro bene, with a light and chearful chorus, terminate the opera; which contains such a number of capital and pleasing airs, as entitles it to one of the first places among Handel's dramatic productions.

April 5th, DARIO, a new opera, set by Attilio Ariosti, was first performed, and had nine representations. The author of the poem is not mentioned. It was originally written in 1716, for the theatre of St. Angelo, at Venice, and set by the musical ecclesiastic, Don Antonio Vivaldi. This opera was followed, May 11th, by ELPIDIA, a drama written by Apostolo Zeno, of which the Music is said, in the printed book of the words, to have been "composed by Leonardo Vinci, excepting some airs." The singers were Senesino, Pacini, Boschi, Borosini, Cuzzoni, and the Sorosini. As the Music of this opera was never printed, nothing can be said of its merit. The composer was young, and but little known in Italy at this time; and if the composition was in the free and elegant style of his later operas, which rendered him so famous, we seem to have been ignorant of its worth; the songs were but little noticed, and soon forgotten. It was, however, performed eleven times. It is by slow degrees that the superior genius of a young artist makes its way into the world; mankind in general judge not from feeling; they wait to be told what is excellent, by the voice of fame.

The opera-house was shut this season, May 19th. In autumn, Elpidia was again performed five times, from November 30th to December 14th, after which Rodelinda was revived, and had four representations (x).

(x) The newspaper records of 1725 inform us, that January 14th a general court of the Royal Academy of Music was summoned for the 20th, and February 2d, there was a call of £.5 per cent, on all the subscribers, being the 13th. December 1st, a general court was likewise convened for the purpose of electing a deputy-governor and directors for the ensuing year; in which advertisement, the subscribers were reminded 1726. After four representations of Rodelinda, the first new opera for the beginning of this year was ELISA, January 15th, a pasticcio, which after six representations was consigned to oblivion. February 8th, Otbo was revived, and had a run of nine nights. February 28th, the court of directors ordered a call of £. 5 per cent. being the fifteenth, "to be made payable on all the subscribers, on or before the 4th of March. After which SCIPIO, a new opera, set by Handel, was performed by the same singers as the preceding drama, except Borosini and the Dotti, who seem to have been superseded by Antinori and the Costantini. Baldi, a contralto, also appears in this opera for the first time. The words seem to have been altered from an opera of the same name, written by Apostolo Zeno. The composition of the Music was not finished, according to Handel's own record in the score, till March 2d (y). So that it must have been brought on the stage with great rapidity, as its first performance, according to the newspapers, the most indisputable authority in such matters, was on the 12th of the same month.

The overture is spirited and pleasing in a different style from all his former prefatory compositions. The fugue, in triple time, is upon two pleasing and marked subjects, and the last movement, a minuet, of an agreeable and uncommon cast. The march which was played on the drawing up of the curtain, for Scipio's triumph, was a general favourite, and adopted by his Majesty's life-guards, and constantly played on the parade for near forty years; and, soon after its first performance, it was likewise introduced by Gay in his opera of Polly, to the words, Brave boys prepare. The two first airs in this opera, for Baldi, are not very striking; but the third: Un caro amante, for Cuzzoni, is a very pleasing pastoral. Senesino's first air, Lamentandomi corro a volo, is likewise agreeable, though cast in no uncommon mould. The Costantini's first air:

ed of an order passed in May 1724, "that no member of this corporation should have a vote in the choice of a deputy governor, or directors, who has not paid the several calls made by the Royal Academy at the time of such election." December 8th, was advertised a fourteenth call of £. 5 per cent. on all the subscribers, payable on or before the 22d inst.

(y) Fine dell' opera. G. F. H. March 2. 1726. MS. in his Majesty's Collection.

Libera chi non è, discovers her voice to have been a contralto, but manifests no abilities in the finger. Antinori's first song does not require great abilities in the expression or execution, though the composition is lively and agreeable. Cuzzoni's second air in this act: Dolci aurette, with only a violoncello accompaniment, is pleasing and pathetic, and in her best style of singing (z). And Senesino's second song: Dimmi, cara, was long in favour throughout the nation. The melody is natural, elegant, and pleasing; and being without any other accompaniment than a violin all' ottava with the voice-part, and a violoncello, could be sung by every one possessed of an ear and a voice. Vanne, parti, a third song, for Cuzzoni, is spirited and agreeable; and the air, Figlia di reo timor, for Senesino, which terminates the act, has merit of a different kind: it is plaintive, pleasing, and natural; but there seems to be less of Handel's accustomed fire, originality, and contrivance in the airs of this act, than in any of those that preceded this period.

There is an admirable air in Handel's manuscript score: So gli altri debellar, of which the words are not to be found in the printed book, where the first air, is Braccio sì valoroso, a most admirable base song, that was sung by Boschi. The second air: Tutta raccolta ancor, sung by Cuzzoni, is a delicious morsel! Senesino's first air in this act, Parto, fuggo, which paints the rage of a jealous lover on the point of quitting his mistress for ever, is extremely characteristic and theatrical; and though there is no other accompaniment than that of a single violin, the agitation and passion of the finger is admirably expressed and supported throughout. Nor has Cuzzoni's next air, Come onda incalza altr' onda, less merit, of a very different kind: it is all tenderness and expression, and written in Handel's never-failing Sicilian style, of which this air may be placed at the head, for the beauty of the melody and richness of the accompaniment. The next two airs, for inferior characters, are less happy, yet not without musical merit, though less impassioned and dramatic. But the subsequent air: Cedo a Roma, of two characters, is full of dignity and passion, and calculated to display the abilities of a great actor as well as singer. In the allegro part of this air, Handel penetrated into future times, by the use he has made of iterated notes in the accompaniment; as he did by all the passages in the voice-part, and kind of spirit in the symphony and accompaniment of the next air, for Cuzzoni: Scioglio d' immota fronte, in which the style is as bold, fanciful, and elegant, as in any of the best dramatic songs of Vinci or Pergolesi, with a more rich and full accompaniment for three violins, two hautbois, tenor, bassoon, and base. This second act of Scipio is equal in excellence to that of any of Handel's most celebrated operas.

(z) That is, in the style of falsa imagine.

The first air in the third act: Tutta rea la vita umana, was sung by Boschi, and may be ranked among the most agreeable of the many admirable songs which Handel composed for this singer. The second air: Se mormora riva, for Senesino, is a cantabile in a very pathetic style, and in which many bold and new effects are produced. The next air: Già cessata, for Cuzzoni, appears now more common and unimportant than any one in the opera, though it seems to have been Handel's design to have terminated the second act with it.

Scene the fourth of this act, opens with an excellent symphony for the ceremony of Scipio's reception of ambassadors. The subsequent air Gioja si spero, sung by Baldi, is gay and pleasing. From this air to the end of the opera, there is little correspondence between Handel's score and the printed book of the words, either in the songs or recitatives. There is a long scene in the manuscript score, terminated by a most agreeable air, alla Siciliana, La nobiltà del regno, composed for Antinori, of which not a line is to be found in the printed copy of the words; but instead of it, there is a scene, terminated by a different air, Del debellar, the Music of which is not in Handel's score. The air, Come al natio boschetto, for Senesino, is however in both, and one of the most agreeable of all Handel's gay opera songs; the melody itself is natural and pleasing, and each of the instrumental parts has a distinct character, which is preserved in an ingenious and masterly manner during the whole first part of the song. Cuzzoni's next air, Bella notte, is less happy, the passages are more common, and their repetitions too frequent. After this air, a whole scene has been omitted in the printed copy of the poem, which occurs in Handel's score, and in which there is a very pleasing song for Senesino: Son pelegriño, sweetened with two or three strokes of unexpected modulation. A duet, less original and pleasing than many of his former dramatic duets; and a gay chorus, in the style of a march, and less slight than the usual finale of a serious opera, terminate this drama, according to the printed book of the words; but in Handel's manuscript in his Majesty's possession, there is an additional base song, for Boschi, T'aspetta fuor dell' onde, which is excellent; and the fragment of another, Mi par sognar, for Cuzzoni, which is very promising. Upon the whole, though the first act of this opera is rather feeble, and the last not so excellent as that of some of his other dramas, the second act contains beauties of various kinds sufficient to establish its reputation, as a work worthy of its great author in his meridian splendor.
the

This opera continued in run, uninterruptedly, near two months, sustaining thirteen representations, from March 12th to April 30th inclusive.

On May 5th, the opera of ALESSANDRO, by an anonymous writer, and set to Music by Handel, first appeared. In the dramatis personæ of this opera we find the name of a new capital performer: SIGNORA FAUSTINA BORDONI, whose arrival forms an æra in the annals of musical contests. The umbrage given to Cuzzoni by her coming hither, proves that as Turkish monarchs can bear no brother near the throne, an aspiring sister is equally obnoxious to a theatrical Queen. As Alessandro was the first opera in which these rival sirens sung together on our stage, à parte eguale, this seems the place to characterize their talents, and give some account of their lives.

FRANCESCA CUZZONI was born in Parma, and had her vocal instructions from Lanzi, an eminent professor of his time, under whose tuition she became a most exquisite performer; having been endowed by nature with a voice that was equally clear, sweet, and flexible.

flexible. It was difficult for the hearer to determine whether she most excelled in slow or rapid airs. A native warble enabled her to execute divisions with such facility as to conceal every appearance of difficulty; and so grateful and touching was the natural tone of her voice, that she rendered pathetic whatever she sung, in which she had leisure to unfold its whole volume. The art of conducting, sustaining, increasing, and diminishing her tones by minute degrees, acquired her, among professors, the title of complete mistress of her art. In a cantabile air, though the notes she added were few, she never lost a favourable opportunity of enriching the cantilena with all the refinements and embellishments of the time. Her shake was perfect, she had a creative fancy, and the power of occasionally accelerating and retarding the measure in the most artificial and able manner, by what the Italians call tempo rubato. Her high notes were unrivalled in clearness and sweetness; and her intonations were so just and fixed, that it seemed as if it was not in her power to sing out of tune (a).

The first time that she appeared on the stage as a public singer, seems to have been with her rival Faustina in the opera of Lamano, set by Michel Angelo Gasparini, at Venice, 1719. She is called in the dramatis personæ of this opera, Virtuosa di Camera of the grand Duchess of Tuscany. After this, she sung in most of the great theatres of Italy, before her arrival in England, 1723, where she continued in undiminished favour till 1729, when she returned to Italy, where she frequently met her rival Faustina, particularly at Venice, in the Carnivals of 1729 and 1730; but never on the same stage: Cuzzoni generally singing at one theatre with Farinelli, and Faustina at another with Bernacchi or Pasi. In 1734, she came to England a second time, and sung in the operas composed by Porpora, under the patronage of the nobility, against Handel, in whose service Strada was engaged. Cuzzoni on her first arrival in England married Sandoni, a harpsichord-master and composer of some eminence. She came to London a third time,

(a) The chief part of this character is not merely traditional, but recorded by an excellent professor and judge, who not only conversed with her contemporaries in Italy, but frequently heard her himself, before her decline. See Pensieri e riflessioni pratiche sopra il canto figurato, di Giambattista Mancini. Maestro di Canto della Corte Imperiale, e Academico Filarmonico. In Vienna, 1774.

in 1749, just after Giardini's arrival, who performed at her benefit, at the little theatre in the Hay-market, the first time he was heard here in public. I was at this concert myself, and found her voice reduced to a mere thread; indeed, her throat was so nearly ossified by age, that all the soft and mellifluous qualities, which had before rendered it so enchanting, were nearly annihilated, in her public performance; though I have been assured by a very good judge, who frequently accompanied her in private, that in a room fine remains of her former grace and sweetness in singing Handel's most celebrated songs, by which she had acquired the greatest reputation, were still discoverable.

Many stories are related of her extravagance and caprice. She survived, however, not only her talents and powers of pleasing, but even those of procuring a subsistence; being long imprisoned in Holland for her debts, and at last ending her days in extreme indigence at Bologna.

FAUSTINA BORDONI HASSE, of Venice, wife of the celebrated Saxon composer Hasse, was a scholar of Michel Angelo Gasparini of Lucca. She in a manner invented a new kind of singing, by running divisions with a neatness and velocity which astonished all who heard her. She had the art of sustaining a note longer, in the opinion of the public, than any other singer, by taking her breath imperceptibly. Her beats and trills were strong and rapid; her intonation perfect; and her professional perfections were enhanced by a beautiful face, a symmetric figure, though of small stature, and a countenance and gesture on the stage, which indicated an entire intelligence and possession of the several parts she had to represent. She first appeared, as a theatrical singer, at Venice in 1716, when she performed in the opera of Ariodante, composed by Carl. Fran. Pollaro. In 1719, she appeared on the same stage with Cuzzoni and Bernacchi, in an opera composed by her master Gasparini. Here she is called Virtuosa di Camera of the Elector Palatine. In 1722, she sung in Leo's opera of Bajazet, at Naples; and in 1725, we find her at Vienna, where, according to Apostolo Zeno (b), she received great honours, as well as prefents. At the palace of Prince Lichtenstein, singing to a great assembly, she was presented with a purse containing a hundred pieces of gold (ungberi ruspi), and near as much more at the French ambassador's. "But," says this poet, "whatever good fortune or encouragement she meets with, she merits it all by her courteous and polite manners, as well as talents, with which she has enchanted and gained the esteem and affection of the whole court." The same author speaks della bravura di Faustina, and the bella Musica di Porfile, in an opera by the Abate Pasquini, performed at Vienna, 1725; and of the regret expressed by the whole court at her quitting that city to go to London. She remained here but two seasons, and then returned to Venice, where, in 1732, she was married to Haffe, and soon after went to Dresden, in the service of which court she remained till the year 1756. At the bombardment of that city by the late King of Prussia, Haffe, her husband, had all his manuscripts burned, which were to have been printed at the expence of his master and patron, the Elector.

(b) Lett. Tom. II. 395. 416. 418, Tom. III, 93.

During the war they went to Vienna, and remained there till the year 1775; then retiring to Venice, the place of the Faustina's nativity, they ended their days in that city, she in 1783, at the great age of ninety, and he soon after, at nearly the same age.

A late writer upon Music (c), of considerable merit with respect to the present times, though frequently erroneous as to the past, speaking of the Faustina, says that her agility of voice has seldom been equalled; a matchless facility and rapidity in her execution; dexterity in taking her breath, exquisite shake, new and brilliant passages of embellishment, and a thousand other qualities contributed to inscribe her name among the first fingers in Europe.

Such were the two performers who in the opera of Alessandro began to kindle the flames of discord among the frequenters of the opera and patrons of the art, which increased to a more violent degree of enmity than even the theological and political parties of high church and low, or Whig and Tory, which then raged in this country (d).

And

(c) Le Revoluz. del Teatro Mus. Ital. di Stef. Arteaga, Bologna, 1783, p. 307.

(d) It is related by the Hon. Mr. Walpole, that his mother, the lady of Sir Robert Walpole, had these two sirens at her house to sing in a concert, at which were
VOL. IV.

M m

all

And yet, according to Tosi, their cotemporary, and a most excellent judge of their several merits, their talents, and styles of singing, were so different, that the praise of one was no reproach to the other. "Indeed, their merit," says he, "is superior to all praise; for with equal force, in a different style, they help to keep up the tottering profession from immediately falling into ruin. The one is inimitable for a privileged gift of singing, and enchanting the world with a prodigious felicity in executing difficulties with a brilliancy, I know not whether from nature or art, which pleases to excess. The delightful soothing cantabile of the other, joined with the sweetness of a fine voice, a perfect intonation, strictness of time, and the rarest productions of genius in her embellishments, are qualifications as peculiar and uncommon, as they are difficult to be imitated. The pathetic of the one, and the rapidity of the other, are distinctly characteristic. What a beautiful mixture it would be, if the excellences of these two angelic beings could be united in a single individual (e)!"

Let us now see how Handel set these wonderful engines to work in Alessandro, the first opera in which he tried their powers upon the feelings of the public in this country (f).

There is no passing by the overture of this opera without remarking its excellence. The first movement, though cast in the general mould of the prefatory productions of the times, is written with uncommon force; and the modulation into the key of D minor at the fifth bar from the end, is as unexpected and pleasing, as the sliding almost imperceptibly into the major key before the close all the first people of the kingdom. She was under the greatest difficulty how to settle the precedence, or prevail on either to relinquish the pas, which could only be accomplished by renouncing the pleasure of hearing either of them herself: the knot could not be untied, but it was cut, by the following expedient. Lady W. finding it impossible to prevail on one to sing while the other was present, took Faustina to a remote part of the house, under the pretence of shewing her some curious china, during which time the company obtained a song from Cuzzoni, who supposed that her rival had quitted the field. A similar expedient was practised in order to get Cuzzoni out of the room, while Faustina performed.

(e) Offeron. sopra il Canto figurato,

(f) It is remarkable that the subscribers to this excellent opera, finely engraved and published by the author, did not amount to a hundred and twenty; and that among these not above two or three of the directors of the Royal Academy, or hardly any other great personages appear in the list, though the publication preceded the quarrel with the nobility, a considerable time!

is masterly and happy. Senesino's first song: Tra le straggi, is full of fire and contrivance, with divisions of a different cast from those of the times; which being, in general, such as may be said to have been set on the fingers barrel, and sure to be well executed, were in common with all composers. But these, particularly in the second part, are more difficult than any preceding divisions in the airs of this singer, whose articulate and voluminous voice must have rendered them very striking. The motivo of Cuzzoni's first air: Quanto dolce amor saria, is graceful and elegant; and Faustina's first air: Lusinghe più care, became a national favourite. Though there is no dignity in the subject, it is light and airy; and though the divisions were neither remarkably new nor difficult, we may easily suppose, from the renown of this singer for neatness of execution, that she performed the air with a rapidity and precision which, at this period, were very uncommon. The divisions in Cuzzoni's second air: No, più soffrir, if she sung them as fast, are quite as difficult as those given to Faustina. The symphony and accompaniments of this air must have had a new and fine effect. Great use is made of Faustina's brilliant shake in her second air: Un lusinghiero, which has, besides, several graceful passages that became fashionable in the melodies of other composers many years after. A quartetto, in the fifth scene of the first act, has not been printed. Boschi's air in this act: A sprone, a fren leggiero, is extremely gay and pleasing. The duet Placa l'alma, between two rival singers passibus equis, ambitious of fame and supremacy, must have excited as much emulation in them, as attention in the audience.

Act second opens with an elaborate and rich symphony to a fine accompanied recitative and pathetic air: Aure, fonti, which few singers, eminent for execution, are able to sing. Che tirannia, Cuzzoni's first air in the second act, is in Handel's never-failing Siciliana style of pathetic; and Faustina's subsequent air is a new and curious style of execution to contrast with it. The words: alla sua gabbia d'oro, &c. are ingeniously expressed both in the voice-part and accompaniment. Faustina had here a fair opportunity of warbling all "her native wood-notes wild," and rivalling the nightingale Cuzzoni, in bird-like passages. Senesino has an air in this act: Il cor mio, that is, and ever must be, pleasing to lovers of elegant simplicity. Faustina finished the act with a sprightly air in minuet time: Dica il falso, which, by her manner of singing, she doubtless rendered very interesting.

The third act begins with a very fine slow cavatina: Sfortunato è il mio valore, which was sung by Boschi, in the character of Clitus. Cuzzoni's first air in this act, is gay and pleasing in subject, but not marked by any peculiarity of composition or execution. But in the next: Brilla nell' alma, for Faustina, it is manifest that Handel intended to display the uncommon talents of a great singer. It is a bravura of the first class, for the time it was written: the divisions are long and rapid, and the singer is left to herself, with a quiet, pulsative accompaniment, of eight quavers in a bar, as regular as the vibrations of a pendulum; a species of accompaniment so favourable to the singer, either in airs of expression or rapidity, that to gratify the vanity and pretensions of even bad singers, less worth hearing than the instruments, the composers of Italy, since this period, have tired us of this inartificial and monotonous employment of the orchestra. Besides this mark of Handel's confidence in the abilities and firmness of the singer, he has given the Faustina an opportunity of displaying her taste and fancy in a cadence, ad libitum, at the end of each part of this song; a compliment but seldom paid to vocal performers at this period of time. In the next air: L' amor che per te sento, for Cuzzoni, is cast in a different mould from all the rest; and the composer's reliance on her steadiness and powers of pleasing, seems to have been so entire, that she is left solely to herself, during a considerable part of the air, without even a base to accompany her. Pupille amate, for Senesino, has little other merit than gaiety: it is a gavot with a slight accompaniment, and few new passages, at the time. The subsequent air for Faustina: Tempesta e calma, is a quick minuet in a minor key, and contains many new and many old passages and effects. The subject begins with the sharp seventh of the key, by a kind of appog-appoggiatura, a licence of which I can recollect no other instance. The divisions are more instrumental than vocal, and the closes quite antique; yet the last division in the first part required a flexibility and an accent in the execution, which, at this time, perhaps Faustina only could boast. The next air, for Senesino, is not in Handel's best manner, having neither the force nor dignity of the songs given to this singer in many of his other operas; and it seems in general that he tried to work better for his rival queens, than for the hero of the piece. The last air, which Senesino first sings with Cuzzoni, then with Faustina, in duo, and with both afterwards, as a trio; and which, at length, becomes the general coro finale, is graceful and pleasing; and this may be said of the whole opera, the third act of which seems inferior to the two first: nor do those, though charming, contain so many bold, original, and learned specimens of Handel's genius, as several of his former operas.

This drama continued in run till the end of the season, June 7th. It was advertised for the 11th, but Senesino being taken ill just before the time of performance, the company assembled at the opera-house was dismissed, and the money advertised to be returned to the purchasers of tickets, on the 13th, in the Daily Courant.

As soon as Senesino was able to travel, he set off for Italy this summer, for the recovery of his health, with a promise to return to London the next winter; which promise, however, was not performed time enough for the opera-house to open till after Christmas (g).

In the beginning of November, the theatre was occupied by an Italian company of comedians, who were patronised by the King,

(g) It appears from the London Journal, No. 382, for November 26th, 1726, that the opera of Camilla had been revived, entirely in English, upon which there is an eulogy, and the prologue spoken by Mrs. Younger on the occasion; but from neither does it appear at which of the English theatres, or by whom it was performed. Senesino's absence is confirmed by the following lines at the close of the prologue:

—“Ye British fair, vouchsafe us your applause,
And smile, propitious, on our English cause;

While Senesino you expect in vain,
And see your favours treated with disdain:
While, 'twixt his rival queens, such mutual hate
Threats hourly ruin to your tuneful state,
Permit your country's voices to repair,
In some degree, your disappointment there:
Here may that charming circle nightly shine;
'Tis time, when that deserts us, to resign.”

performing performing constantly by royal command, on Wednesdays and Saturdays, till operas were again resumed, and on different nights afterwards, during the whole winter.

December the 5th, a general court was summoned by the governor and directors of the Royal Academy, in order to elect a deputy-governor and directors for the year ensuing; and on the 17th was inserted in the Daily Courant the following "List of the deputy-governor and directors of the Royal Academy of Music, chosen last week:

Duke of Richmond, deputy-governor. Earl of Albermarle; Earl of Burlington; Hon. James Bruce, Esq. Hon. Patee Byng, Esq. Sir John Buckworth, Bart. Hon. James Brudenell, Esq. Marquis of Carnarvon; Earl of Chesterfield; Henry Davenant, Esq. Charles Edwin, Esq. Monsieur Fabrice; Sir John Eyles, Bart. Lord Mayor of London; Lord Viscount Limerick; Duke of Manchester; Earl of Mountrath; Sir Thomas Pendergrafs, Bart. Sir John Rushout, Bart. James Sandys, Esq. Major General Wade; Sir William Yonge; directors.

1727. January 2d, the court of directors of the Royal Academy begun this year by a call of £. 5 per cent. being the sixteenth call on all the subscribers, payable on or before the 18th inst. And under this notice, the public was informed by another advertisement, that annual tickets would be issued out for the ensuing season, entitling the bearers to the liberty of the house, on the same terms as last year.

January 4th, Senesino being returned, a new opera called LUCIUS VERUS, set by Attilio Ariosti, was announced for the 7th, and was repeated on the 10th, 14th, 17th, 21th, 24th, and 28th, of the same month.

On Tuesday, the 31st of January, Handel's opera of ADMETUS was first represented. This drama had a run of nineteen nights, without any other interruption than by the opera of Otbo one night for a benefit, and two other nights by the indisposition of Faustina, and afterwards of Cuzzoni (b). As this opera, according to the testimony testimony of a gentleman who constantly attended its representation, attracted more company every night than any other opera had ever done for so long a period of time, continuing from January 31st to April 18th, it seems to merit a particular examination.

(b) It was performed March 7th, with additions, for the benefit of Faustina. King George the First dying this summer at Osnaburg, in the electorate of Hanover, June

The overture is more in the style of Lulli than almost any one which Handel ever composed; and the fugue, though spirited and masterly, has been more injured by time than most of his productions of that kind; the chief passages upon which it is constructed having been before and since in very common use. The hautbois solo parts, particularly, are unmeaning, except one, which is very beautiful. The opening of this overture is in precisely the same notes as that of Lulli's Perjée. But it is only in the first movement, and the omission of a popular air after the fugue, that there is the least resemblance between the overtures of Lulli and Handel; for his fugues are not only upon better subjects, but treated with such force, intelligence, and original fire, as Lulli never manifested in any overture he ever composed. There is no air, or third movement, at the end.

This opera was composed by Handel during his greatest prosperity, and English patronage. The whole nation seems to have united in acknowledging his superior abilities, and nothing was disputed but the talents of his principal female singers, the Faustina and Cuzzoni. Senesino was established in the public favour as first man; Boschi had likewise great merit in his style of singing; and the rest, Baldi, Palmerini, and the Dotti, were unexceptionable in the inferior parts.

The first act opens with a dance of Spectres in the bed-room, where Admetus lies in sickness and delirium. The Music to this dance is very original and characteristic. After the dance there is an impassioned and admirable accompanied recitative, followed by one of the finest pathetic airs that can be found in all Handel's works: Chiudete vi miei lumi. I have been told by persons who heard this opera performed when it first came out, that Senesino never

June 11th, may have somewhat shortened the theatrical season, in London. The general election in August, had likewise, in all probability, an effect upon public places in the capital.

fung

sung or acted better, or more to the satisfaction of the public, than in this scene. After which, Boschi, in the character of Hercules, had an admirable base song. In the next scene, which is very dramatic, the Faustina, in the character of Queen Alcestes, trying to soothe and tranquilize her sick lord, had a charming pathetic song.

After this, Cuzzoni appeared; the air, however, which she had assigned to her in this scene, does not seem to indicate the great composer or great singer: indeed, it seems to partake but little of the best manner of either. We have then an air in a Sicilian style, followed by one for Senesino, which is very chearful and pleasing; as is the subsequent air: Un lampo è la speranza, which was a great favourite in its day, though some of the passages now have lost their charms of novelty. The next air: Se l' arco avessi, is one of the best and most agreeable hunting songs that was ever composed. The French-horn parts are remarkably well written, and introduced with peculiar propriety. This air remained in public favour many years after the run of the opera was over. The last air of the first act: Sen vola, was calculated to display the seeming natural warble of Cuzzoni*. Its merit has suffered but little diminution in sixty years; so that a favourite singer might still recover its charms; and not only this air, but all the first and third scenes of this act, would still, if well performed, have a fine effect on the stage, and be well received by the public.

At the beginning of the second act, in the book of the words, a horrid symphony to express the cries and shrieks of tortured souls in the infernal regions, is announced; but instead of wild jargon and hellish dissonance, Handel has given us a regular overture with one of the most artificial chromatic fugues that was ever produced; in which the subject, in itself very curious and uncommon, is reversed in the answer, and then interwoven and carried on as a counter subject throughout the movement. There is, however, a bold and picturesque symphony, while Hercules attacks the Furies in order to rescue Alcestes from their tortures.

The subsequent air: Quanto godrà, was sung by Faustina, but

* While she was singing this song, a fellow cried out in the gallery: "D—n her! she has got a nest of nightingales in her belly."

though

though an allegro, it affords but little opportunity for the display of that neat and articulate execution for which she was so celebrated; the divisions being given to the instruments more liberally than to the voice.

Handel's science and invention could make the songs of the inferior characters of an opera interesting to judges of Music, by the ingenuity of the composition: thus the next song of this drama, Bella non t'adirar, though the voice-part says but little, is enriched and enlivened by a very curious accompaniment. After a second easy simple air, Cuzzoni has a song of great spirit, in which, though there are few divisions, she had frequent opportunities for the display of her fine shake, for which she was much celebrated. The next air was sung by Senesino: Sparate o pensieri, and seems to have been in his best style of singing, which was pathetic, or majestic. This air is slow, simple, and often without any other accompaniment than a base, in order to furnish an opportunity for unfolding his whole volume of voice in all its purity and force. Cuzzoni sings the next air: Da tanti affanni, which is a pathetic Siciliana in Handel's best manner, and a kind of movement in which this singer was always much admired. After this, Faustina has an aria di bravura, with divisions more long and rapid than I have met with of the same period; and yet they are such as would not now establish the reputation of a singer for great execution, however neatly they may be executed. In the next scene, Senesino had a fine accompanied recitative, and a very pathetic air, accompanied in a rich and masterly manner. Cuzzoni, after a song by an inferior character of no great importance, has a very lively and agreeable air, in which her shake is again the most surprising part of the execution. The second act is terminated by an aria fugata, that is excellent composition; it was sung by Faustina, and though perhaps neither in her style of singing, nor dramatic, yet such was the taste of the times, that this artificial and elaborate kind of writing was more studied by masters and expected by an audience, than picturesque or passionate Music.

Act third opens with a very fine slow air of an original cast: A languire e a penar; it was sung by Senesino, and is written almost on a ground-bass; there is but one violin accompaniment, but this preserves a particular character of complaint from the beginning to the end, without disturbing the voice-part, which is truly pathetic. The second air, set for Palmerini, contains nothing remarkable. There must be, in every drama, inferior characters, voices, and abilities; and to make a hero of every attendant, would be as injudicious as to degrade the real great personages of the piece to a level with their domestics. If all the airs of an opera were equally laboured and excellent, the Music would be monotonous, and all abilities confounded. The next air, for Senesino, is spirited, but less original and happy in its conception than the rest of his songs in this opera. After this, we have an agreeable bass song by Boschi, but not written with that force with which many of the airs for this singer, in Handel's other operas, are composed. The next air, Là dove gli occhj io giro, for Faustina, is a very agreeable song for the display of her execution, which, though now it would not be thought wonderful, in the year 1727, was imagined to be supernatural (i). Cuzzoni has her aria d'abilità after this, in which a pleasing passage in the bass runs through the whole movement in a masterly manner, without impoverishing the voice-part. To enable my readers to form an idea of the comparative merit of these celebrated rival singers, I shall insert here the character drawn of them by an excellent and unprejudiced judge, the late Mr. Quantz, who was frequently present at the performance of this opera in London, during its first run, 1727.

“Cuzzoni had a very agreeable and clear soprano voice; a pure intonation, and a fine shake; her compass extended two octaves, from C to c in alt. Her style of singing was innocent and affecting; her graces did not seem artificial, from the easy and neat manner in which she executed them: however, they took possession of

(i) In the book of the words which has fallen into my hands, is written by the first proprietor (Lady Cowper) opposite to the name of Signora Faustina Bordoni, “she is the d—l of a singer.”

the soul of every auditor, by her tender and touching expression. She had no great rapidity of execution, in allegros; but there was a roundness and smoothness, which were neat and pleasing. Yet, with all these advantages, it must be owned that she was rather cold in her action, and her figure was not advantageous for the stage.

“Faustina had a mezzo-soprano voice, that was less clear than penetrating. Her compass was only from B flat to G in alt; but after this time, she extended its limits downwards. She possessed what the Italians call un cantar granito: her execution was articulate and brilliant. She had a fluent tongue for pronouncing words rapidly and distinctly, and a flexible throat for divisions, with so beautiful and quick a shake that she could put it in motion upon short notice, just when she would. The passages might be smooth, or by leaps, or consisting of iterations of the same tone, their execution was equally easy to her as to any instrument whatever. She was doubtless the first who introduced, with success, a swift repetition of the same tone. She sung adagios with great passion and expression, but was not equally successful, if such deep sorrow were to be impressed on the hearer, as might require dragging, sliding, or notes of syncopation, and tempo rubato.

“She had a very happy memory in arbitrary changes and embellishments, and a clear and quick judgment in giving to words their full power and expression. In her action she was very happy; and as she perfectly possessed that flexibility of muscles and features, which constitutes face-playing, she succeeded equally well in furious, amorous, and tender parts: in short, she was born for singing and for acting.

“The violence of party,” says M. Quantz, “for the two singers, Cuzzoni and Faustina, was so great, that when the admirers of one began to applaud, those of the other were sure to hiss; on which account operas ceased for some time in London.”

After these sirens have exercised their incantments, Signor Baldi has a very spirited and dramatic air, of which though many of the passages are now antiquated, yet the base and accompaniments give it it an energy which none but a great master could bestow on a similar air. We have then an admirable duet, written on a theme, which is led off by the violins in unison, and afterwards repeated by the base and other instruments alternately, while the voice-parts have traits of beautiful melody totally different from the subject of the accompaniment: I can recollect no duet of Handel's that is more pleasing or ingenious than this. The last air in the opera, Si caro, sì, sung by Faustina, is so natural and graceful, that such a favourite singer could not fail to render it pleasing to every class of hearers; indeed, this song was the delight of all lovers of Music throughout the kingdom many years after the opera was laid aside.

After the coro finale there are three additional songs in his Majesty's score of this opera: Spera sì, for Cuzzoni, and Io son qual Fenice, for the Faustina, with a slight air for an inferior singer. Cuzzoni's air is full of that graceful tenderness for which she was so much celebrated; and the air for Faustina, if it had been sung quick, would have been very difficult to execute; the time, however, is marked only andante, and even in that slow and sedate motion there are passages in arpeggio, that required a flexible throat to execute them.

The principal fable on which this drama was founded is admirably calculated for an opera, as it admits of passion, tenderness, and marvellous circumstances and situations for machinery and decoration; but the poet, whoever he was, has injured it greatly by the introduction of a counterplot, in order to introduce two heroines on the stage at once, a parte eguale, for the rival singers, Faustina and Cuzzoni.

Music had now quitted that tranquil and unimpassioned state in which it was left by Corelli; it was no longer regarded as a mere soother of affliction, or incitement to hilarity; it could now paint the passions in all their various attitudes; and those tones which said nothing intelligible to the heart, began to be thought as insipid as those of "founding brass or tinkling cymbals."

Upon

Upon the whole, this opera contains many of Handel's best dramatic productions, and if heard or examined by candid judges, (though at present sixty years old) it will long continue to give pleasure in the performance and perusal.

March 15th, a seventeenth call of £. 5 per cent. payable on or before the 30th, and a general court appointed for April 17th.

May 6th, a new opera set by Bononcini, called ASTYANAX, appeared, which seems to have been the last that this composer produced in England. Its first representation was postponed from time to time for several nights, on account of the indisposition of Cuzzoni; and Handel's Floridante revived and performed in its stead. Astyanax was written by N. Haym upon the same incidents as the Andromaque by Racine, and Distressed Mother by Philips. The author has dedicated this drama to the Duchess of Marlborough, not only as the patroness of the composer Bononcini, "but as the daughter of that great commander, who wanted not the swell of poetry to magnify his deeds, which so far surpassed those of the Grecian heroes of Homer, that instead of being ten years in conquering a single city, he had conquered more than ten such cities in one year." The singers in this opera were Senesino, who performed the part of Pyrrhus; Cuzzoni, Andromache; Faustina, Hermione; and Boschi, Baldi, and the Dotti, the rest. The Music was not printed, though it had nine representations; being performed, uninterruptedly, till the end of the season, June 6th. Indeed, this production seems to have been soon forgotten, except the slow and plaintive little air in minuet time: Ascolto o figlio, sung by Cuzzoni in the third act; which was long in favour at the playhouse in my own memory, whenever soft Music was wanted (k).

As Bononcini quitted the conflict with Handel after this opera, which terminated the contention between them on the English stage, this seems the place to take my leave of him.

(k) The air: Deh! lascia o core, sung by Cuzzoni, at the end of the second act, has been printed; the subject is pathetic, and the accompaniment judicious and masterly;

but the divisions in the voice-part are neither graceful nor pleasing, but awkward and difficult, without effect.

Of all the works which this celebrated composer published in England, his book of Cantate e Duetti, dedicated to his Majesty George I. in 1721, the year after his arrival here, seems the best. Of these an account has already been given, page 177. In 1722, his Divertimenti da Camera, tradotti (transposed or accommodated) pel Cembalo da quelli composti pel Violino o Flauto, were published by himself, and sold at his lodgings in Suffolk-street. In these we meet with pleasing and masterly passages, but they are so inferior in force, contrivance, and invention, to the lessons of Handel, that even his admirers, on a comparative view, must have regarded them as frivolous and trivial. The adagios are the best movements in them, and have notes of taste and passages of expression, which must have been then new to English ears. Bononcini, however, like other composers of his time, is very sparing of his passages, and indulges idleness and want of invention by frequent Rosalias, which Handel seems always to avoid more than any composer of this period, except the Scarlattis, father and son. In several of these lessons the subject is heard in one part or other throughout a whole movement: as in the minuet, page 35, the first bar is perpetual.

His funeral anthem for the Duke of Marlborough, was set and performed the same year, 1722. The short symphony, and whole first movement are grand, and of a melancholy cast. The second movement has not much to recommend it. The third, is more languid, than passionate or pathetic. The fourth, is plaintive, but was not new at the time it was written. The fifth, and last movement has musical merit, but none of true feeling, or genius; no "heart-rending sighs," or such exclamations of sorrow and affliction as would naturally be expected from a man of great abilities, who either felt the words, or the loss of his patron.

Bononcini was a celebrated and voluminous composer long before he arrived in England: his eighth work, consisting of Duetti da Camera, was dedicated to the Emperor Leopold, and published at Bologna in 1691 (1). The seven operas he composed during his

(1) An account has already been given of this work, in speaking of chamber vocal duets, Vol. III. chap. viii.

residence in England, make but a small part of his dramatic productions. He produced two operas at Rome in 1694; after this he went to Vienna, where he composed many operas and oratorios for the Imperial Court and Chapel. In 1720, he was again in high reputation as a dramatic composer at Rome, whence he was invited to London by the directors of the Royal Academy of Music. In 1732, he published Twelve Sonatas for two Violins and a Base. It was about this time that he was accused of arrogating to himself a madrigal composed by Lotti of Venice, and published in that city in 1705, in a work entitled Duetti, Terzetti, e Madrigali a più Voci, dedicated to the Emperor Joseph. The title of the madrigal is La vita caduca, and has for initial line, In una siepe ombrosa. I am in possession of the book in which this composition was printed, and, upon examination, am extremely astonished that Bononcini would risk the great reputation of which he was already in possession, for a production which could increase it so little. The counterpoint of this madrigal is certainly correct, but it is dry, and all the subjects of fugue are such as had been used by thousands before Lotti was born. There are many madrigals by much older masters, particularly Luca Marenzio, Stradella, and the elder Scarlatti, that are learned and pleasing in modulation, and more fanciful and agreeable in the traits of melody that are used as subjects of imitation. Indeed, Bononcini's plagiarism was as weak as wicked. I used to doubt the truth of the charge, from an idea that his reputation was so well established, and his genius so fertile, that he had not the least occasion to have recourse to such illicit means of extending it. The crime of theft is very much aggravated when the thief is not impelled to it by want. Rich men and misers have, however, been often detected in illegal appropriation. Yet upon a careful and critical examination of the works of John Bononcini, I think his wealth did not consist in rich and deep mines of science, nor were his resources in learned and elaborate composition either in the ecclesiastical or madrigal style, very great. His performance on the violoncello, his cantatas, and his operas, had been admired
in.

in every part of Europe; but not content with partial fame, he aimed at universality. In his anthem for the funeral of the Duke of Malborough, he attempted to rival Handel in his grand church style; and finding in how much veneration well written madrigals were held at the Academy of Ancient Music in London, where Handel at this time was regarded as a modern, and an innovator, he was tempted to risk the reputation he had fairly acquired, by trying to augment it in an illegal manner. Tradition had filled my mind with ideas of his abilities, which the examination of his works has diminished; while a strict scrutiny into Handel's productions has greatly augmented my veneration for that composer. I have now before me, in a printed pamphlet, all the letters that passed between the secretary of the Academy of Ancient Music and Signor Ant. Lotti on this occasion, with such testimonies and certificates from the most respectable professors at Venice and Vienna, in proof of the madrigal in dispute having been composed by that master and not by Bononcini, that not the least doubt remains of the fact.

Soon after the funeral of the Duke of Malborough, the Countess of Godolphin, who, upon the decease of her father, became Duchess of Malborough, as settled in his patent of creation, received Bononcini into her house, in the Stable-yard St. James's, and settled on him a pension of £. 500 a year. Here he lived in ease and affluence, enjoying as an artist the otium cum dignitate in its full extent: the duchess having concerts twice a week, in which no other Music was performed to the first people in the kingdom than the compositions of her favourite master, executed by the principal singers of the opera. It is supposed that he gained a £. 1000 by the book of cantatas which he published by a two-guinea subscription: many of the nobility subscribing for five or ten copies; the Duke and Duchess of Queensbury for twenty-five books each, and the Countess of Sunderland alone for fifty. After the dispute concerning this madrigal, his importance and reputation diminished considerably; and about the year 1733, he quitted the kingdom.

After

After which he resided at Paris for several years, where he composed masses and motets for the Chapel Royal. At the conclusion of the peace of Aix la Chapelle in 1748, he was invited to Vienna by the Emperor of Germany to compose the Music for that occasion, and is said to have been presented with eight hundred ducats for his trouble. After the celebration of the peace was over, quitting Vienna in company with Monticelli, he set off in the same post-chaise with this celebrated singer, for Venice, where they were both engaged, Bononcini as composer, and Monticelli as first man, in the operas for the ensuing Carnival, in that city. Here we lose sight of this renowned composer, who if we suppose him to have been no more than thirty years of age in 1691, when his eighth work was printed at Bologna, and dedicated to the Emperor Leopold, he must at this time have attained his eighty-seventh year; which will give weight to the general opinion, that his life was extended to near a century!

May 10th, during the run of Astyanax, notice is given that a general court of the subscribers will be held on the 15th, "when a new subscription is to be proposed." Which seems to imply a total expenditure of the sum for which the members of this society first engaged to be answerable. This meeting was adjourned till the 22d, "when all the subscribers to the said academy were desired to be present, the new subscription being then to be taken into consideration."

On June 6th, the last night of the performance of Astyanax, and of the season, according to the London Journal, a weekly newspaper published June 10th, 1727, "A great disturbance happened at the opera, occasioned by the partizans of the two celebrated rival ladies, Cuzzoni and Faustina. The contention at first was only carried on by hissing on one side, and clapping on the other; but proceeded, at length, to the melodious use of cat-calls, and other accompaniments, which manifested the zeal and politeness of that illustrious assembly. The Princess Caroline was there, but neither her Royal Highness's presence, nor the laws of decorum, could restrain the glorious ardor of the combatants (m)."

July 13th, the following advertisement appeared in the Daily Courant: "Whereas several persons stand indebted to the Royal Academy for calls and otherwise, the court of directors do hereby order notice to be given, that they shall pay or cause to be paid, at the office in the Hay-market, or to the person attending them in that behalf, such sum or sums as they are owing, on or before Wednesday the 19th, inst. otherwise they shall be obliged to cause process to be made at law against them, in order to recover the same."

October 2d, in the same newspaper, notice was given that "My Lord Chamberlain, at the request of the directors of the Royal Academy of Musick, had ordered a general court of the said academy on the 6th, inst. upon extraordinary business." This notice was repeated on the appointed day. On the 18th, another call of £. 5 per cent. payable the 25th, being the eighteenth call. On the 21st, in order to prevent frauds, the method of receiving tickets was changed: at the front and back-door a box was placed, leading into the stone passage in which gentlemen and ladies were desired to drop their tickets at going into the house. Subscribers only admitted by producing their silver tickets.

The autumnal season began October 3d, with Admetus; and on the 11th of the next month, RICARDO PRIMO, RE D' INGHILTERRA, an opera, written by Rolli, and set by Handel, was first represented. This drama is dedicated in an Italian sonnet by the poet to the new King, George II. The singers were the same as in the preceding winter: Senesino, Boschi, Baldi, Palmerini, Cuzzoni, and Faustina.

The introduction in this overture is one of the best written and the most spirited of all Handel's prefatory movements. At the eighth bar the first violin leads off a passage, which is inverted in the base for four or five bars in a very masterly manner; and the leading notes to the first bar of the movement, after the close, is full of fire. The fugue is admirably worked, and the three initial notes of the dux, or subject, are finely introduced in accompanying the solo parts for the hautbois (n). The want of a third movement for unlearned hearers, has kept this overture out of many a concert.

The first air for Cuzzoni: Se perì l'amato bene, is plaintive, pleasing, and original. And the second: Vado per ubidirti, for Faustina, is the most agreeable song of execution of the times. I have been told that the brilliancy of her voice made its way through the busy accompaniment of this song in a manner which filled the whole theatre (o). A close in this air appears for the first time, which has since become fashionable, as well as the return to the subject in the Da Capo. There are fine things in Senesino's first song: Calmate le tempeste, but the subject passage is too often repeated. Faustina's second air in this act: Bella teco, has an original character, and though the time is only andante, afforded opportunities to manifest a fine shake, and voluble throat. Cuzzoni's second song is more passée. The subsequent air: Agitato da fiere tempeste, for Senesino, is in a grand style of bravura, and must have had a great effect when accompanied by a good orchestra, and thundered by such a voice. Though many of the divisions appear in his former songs, yet there is one passage which Farinelli, Baverese, Monticelli, and other singers of later times, frequently introduced in their songs of execution as an extraordinary feat:  Nothing can be more elegant and pleasing than the next air for Cuzzoni: Di notte il pelegriano. This is followed by a base song for Boschi,

(n) If there is any thing less pleasing than the rest in the theme of this fugue, it is the fifth note in the second bar, which is awkward to the hand, and not very pleasing to the ear. In modern times this G would have been sharp.

(o) E was a remarkably powerful note in this singer's voice, and we find most of her capital songs in sharp keys, where that chord frequently occurred.

fugato in the accompaniment with Handel's usual superiority. The subsequent air for Faustina has no peculiar character of execution or expression, but might be made very agreeable by a good singer and a good band. Cuzzoni's next song: Caro vieni a me, is truly captivating, and needs only to be sung by a singer of taste and feeling, to be modern now, or at any more distant period from the time of its first performance. The short but exquisite cavatina: Quanto tarda, in Handel's best style of cantabile, is a canevas which a great singer only can colour, and souls susceptible of pleasure from the most select and sentimental sounds can truly enjoy. After this, Faustina has a coquetish, gay, and lively air: Ai guardi tuoi, with two or three volate in it, which however laborious to sluggish throats were sport to her. Nube che il sole, is a very agreeable air, which was sung by Senesino. After this Faustina had an air, L' aquila altera, in a very masterly style of composition, which has been long banished from the opera-house. The duet which finishes the second act, has in it many fine passages, but some of them having been frequently used by Handel elsewhere, are more withered and faded than the rest.

In the third act, Senesino's first song: All' orror delle procelle, is a song of great execution, not only for that time, but for any time, and any singer. Handel's fire blazes in the orchestra, and the whole composition glows with genius. Cuzzoni sung the next air: Morte vieni, which is mixt with accompanied recitative, and is in a very sublime style of pathetic. The next air: Quell' innocente, in a totally different style from the other two, was sung by Faustina, and is in the highest degree graceful and pleasing. I have never met with three successive airs by the same composer, at once so beautiful and so various. After these, Boschi has an air of great fire and spirit, in which all the parts are busy, but that of the first violin is remarkably cramp and difficult. The air which succeeds this: Bacia per me la mano, seems to me one of the finest pathetic airs in all Handel's works; it was sung by Cuzzoni, and though there is a peculiar character supported throughout in the base, and the violins and tenor are almost constantly employed, the melody of the voice-part is never disturbed, but is uniformly clear and plaintive, from the beginning to the end. After these five capital songs, there are three others that have considerable merit: one for Cuzoni, with a German-flute accompaniment; one for Faustina, with very difficult divisions; and a very sweet and graceful air for Senefino: Volgete ogni desir. Upon the whole, the last act of Richard is replete with beauties of every kind of composition, and seems not only the best of this particular opera, but of any that I have yet examined.

The performance of this opera was continued till December 16th, having eleven representations; after which Alessandro and Radamisto, were revived, and alternately performed till February 17th, 1728, when SIROE a new opera, by Handel, was first represented.

Dec. 4th, a general court was called for chusing a deputy-governor and directors for the year ensuing, on which occasion none would be allowed to vote who had not paid their arrears. December 23d, a nineteenth call, for £. 5 per cent. on all the subscribers.

1728. The opera of Siroe, which at present every one acquainted with the Italian language almost knows by heart, was so new to my countrymen at the time it was first brought on our stage, that Nicolino Haym ventured to dedicate the poem to the directors and subscribers of the Royal Academy of Music, as his own (p), and the plagiarism, however flagrant, seems to have been successful; for it does not appear that it was ever detected. This drama, written expressly for Venice in 1726, was first set by the celebrated Leonardo Vinci, for the theatre of San Giangrisostomo in that city; but it has since been set by almost every eminent composer who has been employed for the stage. Upon collating the poem which Handel set with the opera of Siroe, in the third volume of Metastasio's works, there appears very little difference between them, except that Haym has foisted into his edition two or three airs of a much coarser texture than can be found in that of the original author (q).

(p) Alli eccellentissimi ed illustrissimi Signori Li Signori Direttori, e sottoscrittori dell' Accademia Reale di Musica Umilmente dedica questo Drama l' umilissimo e devotissimo

Servitor loro, N. Haym. These words spread out on the surface of a whole page, have all the appearance of author-like appropriation.

In the first movement of the overture there are two or three strokes of bold and happy modulation, particularly the A flat in the base of the twelfth bar, which manifest the great master. The fugue, of which the third bar of the subject, which furnishes the chief solo parts for the hautbois, has been too often used by others to give much pleasure now, is treated with his usual superiority and strength; and the jig was always a favourite as long as movements in that measure were in fashion. Handel himself seems to have been not insensible to its merit, for I heard him play it by memory as a lesson at Mrs. Cibber's, with wonderful neatness and spirit near twenty years after it was composed.

The fingers were the same as in the opera of Riccardo. The first air for Boschi: Se mio paterno amore, is in the free and animated style of many of the excellent base songs he wrote for that performer. Faustina's first song: D'ogni amator la fede, may perhaps have been since set to a more graceful melody, but has never been accompanied with so much meaning and ingenuity. Senesino's first air: Se il labbro, was not, at the time it was first performed, in so captivating a style as many others which Handel had composed for him, and yet there are still passages in the base and accompaniment which are heard with pleasure by true judges of composition. Palmireni's first air: O placido il mare, is spirited, and required considerable agility of throat in the execution. To the words of Senesino's next air: La sorte mia tiranna, so many other airs are vibrating in modern ears, that Handel's would not now be fairly heard; but with Senesino's voice and action it doubt-

(q) This drama, the first of Metastasio's writing that was performed in this country, had certainly more poetical merit than any which Handel had as yet ever set to Music, though he long remained ignorant perhaps of the real author.

During the run of this opera there was a call by the court of directors on all the subscribers to the Royal Academy of £3.

per cent. which was the twentieth call, to be paid on or before the 30th of March. And April 3d, the governor and court of directors summoned a general court, "to consult such measures as may be thought most proper for the speedy recovery of all their debts." Another call of two and a half per cent. being the twenty-first call, on or before the 24th of April.

less had a fine effect in 1728. The subsequent air: Vedeste mai, for Faustina, is extremely pleasing, and must have exhibited the brilliant execution of that singer to great advantage. The words of the air with which Haym has finished the first act: Or mi perdo, which Handel has adapted in his foul score to the Music of another air: Ho nel seno, are not the same as in Metastasio, who terminates the act with Fra l' orror della tempesta, which has been often admired as a dramatic song of passion and execution in the Siroe of different composers. Handel's air to the words Or mi perdo, is originally and beautifully accompanied (r).

The second act begins with an exquisite cantabile: Deb! voi mi dite, for Senesino, which wants nothing but length to render it equal to Handel's most excellent songs of that kind. The next air: Mi lagnerò tacendo, sung by Cuzzoni, is a beautiful Siciliana of a peculiar cast. The complaint expressed in the words and melody is admirably enforced from time to time by a single note in the violin accompaniment. After this Senesino had a very pleasing and dramatic air: Mi credi infedele, in which the accompaniment is modern and the modulation affecting and masterly. Faustina's next air: Sgombra dall' anima, long enjoyed the public favour for the natural gaiety of the melody. The air Fra l' orror, with which Metastasio has terminated the first act, Haym has transplanted into the fifth scene of the second. Handel has set it to an admirable instrumental movement in five parts, strictly fugato. As it was written for Baldi, a singer of no great abilities, he took the opportunity of rendering the composition interesting by assigning the chief part of the business to the instruments, which, so employed, were better worth hearing than the voice. Boschi had the next air: Tu di pietà mi spogli, which is spirited, and cast in a different mould from all his other admirable songs. The subsequent air: Fra dubbj affetti, is less happily set than usual with Handel in composing for Senesino: it is a soothing minuet, but without dignity or

(r) There is an air wanting in the score: Chi è più fedele, and instead of it two or three scenes of another opera, in which the names of Olibrio and Placidia two characters in a drama written by Apostolo Zeno, occur.

passion. Cuzzoni had the next air: L' aura non sempre, which is light and gay, but unmarked by any peculiar force or expression; but the final air of this act: Non vi piacque, ingiusti Dei, is one of the most elegant, beautiful, and pathetic, in all Handel's works; it was set for the Faustina, and conveys an idea of her great abilities as a cantabile finger, as most of her other songs do of neat and brilliant execution.

The third act begins with a short and spirited symphony, consisting of only twenty-two bars; in which, however, Handel's fire began to blaze sufficiently to make us wish it had been longer. The first air, for Cuzzoni: Se il caro Figlio, is graceful and pleasing, and was among the favourite songs of that finger. The next air: Gelido in ogni vena, is so fine a composition of the grand pathetic kind, that it is difficult which most to admire, the richness of the harmony, learning of the modulation, texture of the parts, or expression of the words. Palmerini sung the subsequent air: Benchè tinta, which has merit and fire in the composition, though it was not likely to be a favourite, as he was not a captivating finger, and performed a detestable character in the drama. The whole next scene, beginning with an accompanied recitative: Son stanco, and ending with the air Deggio morire, for Senesino, was justly admired, at the time of its first performance, and is still new and replete with refinements, which have been imagined of much later times (s). In the symphony to the accompanied recitative, Handel seems to have made a new use of piano and forte, and in the second violin, tenor, and base parts of the subsequent air, to have anticipated the quiet accompaniment of modern times. Faustina had the next air: Cb' io mai vi possa, which has few peculiar beauties of invention or expression; and the air in the next scene for Senesino: Se l' amor tuo, though the voice-part is graceful and pleasing, is rendered somewhat monotonous by a too frequent repetition of the same passage in the symphony and accompaniment. But the following air: Torrente cresciuto, for Cuzzoni, is perhaps the most elegant, fanciful, and pleasing, of all Handel's dramatic songs of the bravura kind. The next air: La mia speranza, and the last in the opera, was sung by Faustina. It is of the same kind, gay and agreeable; but seems now the eldest of the two by many years.

(s) See Sketch of Handel's Life, p. 24, & seq.

This opera, of which Handel himself, in the foul score preserved in his Majesty's collection, has signed and dated the coro finale, "London, February 5th, 1728," contains many proofs of the superior abilities of this great composer; but chiefly in the last act, which seems greatly to surpass, in musical excellence, the rest of the drama.

The opera of Siroe was first performed February 17th, when it was honoured with the presence of their Majesties, the Princess Royal, Princess Amelia, and Princess Caroline. It had nineteen representations successively; but having a very powerful rival at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, in the Beggar's Opera, which came the out same winter, joined to the factious disputes concerning the superiority of the singers, this was not an auspicious season for the musical drama.

A letter ascribed to Dr. Arbuthnot, which was inserted in the London Journal, March 23d, during the first run of Siroe, describes the declining state of operas at this time so well, that I shall insert part of it here, as a fragment of musical history.

"As there is nothing which surprises all true lovers of Musick more, than the neglect into which the Italian operas are at present fallen, so I cannot but think it a very extraordinary instance of the fickle and inconstant temper of the English nation: a failing which they have always been endeavouring to cast upon their neighbours in France, but to which they themselves have at least as good a title; as will appear to any one who will take the pains to consult our historians." After several other just reproaches, for the childish eagerness with which we had discarded our own language and Music for the Italian, which the instant we had acquired in the greatest perfection, only serving to raise disputes among us and to divide the nation into parties, proved that our excessive fondness for Italian operas proceeded not from a true taste for good Music, but a violent affectation of it. The author concludes in the following manner: "The Beggar's Opera, I take to be a touch-stone to try British taste on; and it has accordingly proved effectual in discovering our true inclinations; which, how artfully soever they may have been disguised for a while, will one time or other start up and disclose themselves. Æsop's story of the cat, who at the petition of her lover was changed into a fine woman, is pretty well known: notwithstanding which alteration, we find, that upon the appearance of a mouse, she could not resist the temptation of springing out of her husband's arms to pursue it; though it was on the very wedding night. Our English audience have been for some time returning to their cattish nature; of which some particular sounds from the gallery have given us sufficient warning. And since they have so openly declared themselves, I must only desire they will not think they can put on the fine woman again, just when they please, but content themselves with their skill in catter-wauling.

"For my own part, I cannot think it would be any loss to real lovers of Music, if all those false friends, who have made pretensions to it only in compliance with the fashion, would separate themselves from them; provided our Italian opera could be brought under such regulations as to go on without them. We might then be able to sit and enjoy an entertainment of this sort, free from those disturbances which are frequent in English theatres, without any regard, not only to performers, but even to the presence of Majesty itself. In short, my comfort is, that though so great a desertion may force us to contract the expences of our operas, as would put an end to our having them in as great perfection as at present, yet we shall be able, at least, to hear them without interruption."

1728. The opera of TOLOMEO RE D'EGITTO, written by Haym, was first performed April 30th, by the same singers as Siroe. In the dedication to the Earl of Albemarle, the author implores the protection of this nobleman for operas in general, as "being on the decline (t)." Whether this was occasioned by the feuds concerning Handel and Bononcini, Faustina and Cuzzoni, or from caprice or satiety, I know not ; but if there ever was a time when this species of amusement merited the national support more than another, it seems to have been at this period, when we were in possession not only of the best composer in Europe, but the three greatest singers which the lyric stage could boast.

(t) Fate, che da lei prenda vigore il sostento delle opere quasi cadenti nell' Inghilterra.

The fugue in the overture to Ptolomy is written on a subject so lively, and is treated with such freedom and spirit, that none of the trammels of this species of composition appear in the execution. And though the first three bars of the movement are almost entirely built upon the common chord of the key-note, no idea of monotony, or want of variety in the harmony, is excited during the performance. The French-horns in this fugue were unusual, and have an admirable effect.

The first scene opens with a very fine accompanied recitative, which with Senesino's voice and action must have had a great effect. The subsequent air for the same singer: Cielo ingiusto, is spirited, and has the hand of a master upon it, but the style and passages are now a little antique. The next air: Non lo dirò, for Baldi, is an elegant ballad ; but the third air: Quell' onda, set for Faustina, is the most elegantly gay and fanciful imaginable ; performed by such a singer, and neatly accompanied, it would please now as much as ever ; as would the subsequent beautiful pastoral for Cuzzoni: Mi volgo ad ogni fronda, which is of all times and all places. Faustina's next air: Se talor, is in a style which Handel's pen, and the singers of the time, could render expressive ; but it has so long been discontinued, that we now hardly know how to perform, or hear it. After this, there is a short but beautiful Siciliana: Tiranna miei pensieri, which was sung by Senesino. The next, is an elaborate and pathetic composition in seven parts, to the words: Fonti amiche, for Cuzzoni, which did the composer and performer equal credit. After this, an agreeable base song, and a pathetic air: Torna sol, for Senesino, of the most soothing and tender kind, finished the first act.

The second act begins with a cantabile air of a very beautiful and uncommon cast: Voi dolci aurette, sung by Faustina; to whom the second air: Quant' è felice, was likewise assigned. This air, though not rapid, seems to have been written for her peculiar talent of neat execution. The next air: Aure portate, for Cuzzoni, seems now old-fashioned and common, from the frequent use which others have since made of the passages. The subsequent air: Se un solo è quel core, for Senesino, is not of the first class of pathetic; it is languid, without passion or novelty. The following air: Il mio core, sung with the spirit and precision of a Faustina, would always please. The next song: Pur sento, for Baldi, is a pleasing composition. Then follows an air that was called the echo song: Dite che fà? chiefly sung by Cuzzoni; several of the passages, however, were repeated by Senesino, behind the scenes, by which his recognition was brought about in the drama. The melody of this air is extremely graceful and pleasing, and the accompaniments are rich and beautiful. Boschi has, after this, an admirable base song: Piangi pur, with a running accompaniment in a very bold and masterly style. The second act is terminated by one of the most pleasing of all Handel's duets, in the favourite style of the times: Se il cor ti perde. The imitations are natural and plaintive, and the accompaniment quiet and curious.

The third act begins with a short but very pathetic and expressive accompanied recitative. Baldi sung the first air in this act: Se l' interno, which is spirited and uncommon. The next which is a very agreeable base song: Sarò giusto, was sung by Boschi. Faustina's first air in this act: Voglio amore, is less happily composed than the songs which Handel usually gave her; and the subsequent air, for Cuzzoni: Senza il suo bene, though plaintive, has lost much of its grace and novelty by time. After this, Faustina has an air of passion and spirit: Ti pentirai, which her neat execution must have rendered captivating. Senesino had the next air: Son qual Rocca, which has in it a considerable portion of Handel's fire and thunder; the style, however, is now no longer in use for a first finger at the opera. Cuzzoni's next air: Torna omai, is an andante, and is pleasing; but not of the first class in the graziosa style. The whole next scene for Senesino, consisting of an accompanied recitative, beginning: Innumano Fratel, and an air: Stille amare, with which it is terminated, is, however, so pathetic and masterly in a truly grand dramatic style, that it ought to save the worst opera, in other respects, that was ever composed. After this, a lively duet, and a very gay chorus terminate the drama; which, though it abounds with fewer striking and favourite airs than many of Handel's preceding operas, has many that are beautiful, and some in his best style of writing. The author himself has settled the time when this composition was finished by the following memorandum, on the last page of his Majesty's original score: "Fine dell' opera, G. F. Handel, April 19th, 1728."

This drama was performed but seven times, during its first run; after which, Admetus was represented three times: May 25th, 28th, and June the 1st, which not only terminated the season, but was the last opera performed under the auspices and direction of the Royal Academy of Music; an institution, in the support of which the whole sum of £.50,000, originally subscribed, seems to have been sunk in less than seven years, besides the money produced by the sale of tickets, and that which was taken at the door, for the admission of non-subscribers.

The governor and directors of the Royal Academy of Music, after the sum originally subscribed for its support was expended, relinquished the idea of entering into new engagements for amusing the public at their own expence. Indeed, either from the difficulty of finding a sufficient number of subscribers that were willing to involve themselves in so costly and hazardous an enterprise, or from an opinion that the opera being no longer in an infant state, was now robust enough to go alone, it appears by the bills and advertisements, that there were no annual subscribers in 1727, but its whole maintenance and support depended on the original subscribers and public favour. Whether the feuds which so long agitated the critics and patrons of Music, concerning the abilities abilities of Handel and Bononcini, and of Faustina and Cuzzoni, precipitated the dissolution of the Royal Academy, or the disagreement between Handel and Senesino, cannot now be easily determined. Perhaps all these causes conspired to relax discipline and to tire the public; for though zeal and attention were at first stimulated by these debates, yet they seem to have been succeeded by disgust and indifference.

At the close of this season the whole band of singers dispersed, and the next year we find Senesino, Faustina, and Baldi, performing in one theatre at Venice, and the Cuzzoni, with Nicolini, Farinelli, and Boschi, at another, in the same city.

May 15th, a general court was summoned of all the subscribers to the Royal Academy of Music. And on the 16th, notice was given in the same paper, "That the general court of the Royal Academy of Music stands adjourned till eleven o'clock on Wednesday next, the 22d inst. in order to receive any further proposals that shall be offered for carrying on the operas." Another meeting, by adjournment, on the 29th. On the 31st, "The general court of the Royal Academy of Music stands adjourned till eleven o'clock on Wednesday the 5th of June next; in order to consider of proper measures for recovering the debts due to the Academy, and discharging what is to be due to performers, tradesmen, and others; and also to determine how the scenes, cloaths, &c. are to be disposed of, if the opera cannot be continued. N. B. All the subscribers are desired to be present, since the whole will be then decided by a majority of votes."

Nothing farther appeared in the newspapers concerning the Royal Academy of Music, till December 2d; when the following advertisement was inserted in the Daily Courant: "The time appointed by the charter of the Royal Academy of Music for chusing a deputy-governor and directors of the said Academy, being on the 22d of November in each year, or within fourteen days after; notice is hereby given, that a general court, by order of the governor of the said Academy, will be held at twelve o'clock on Friday next, being the 6th inst. at the usual place in the Hay-market." Whether the court ever met, or any measures were taken, in consequence of this advertisement, does not appear.
the

In the autumn of this year, and the spring of the next, the opera-house was shut up, and the musical drama suffered to lie fallow till December 2d.

1729. Though there was no vocal opera performed at the theatre in the Hay-market this year, yet January 23d, there was a ball; February 13th another; and April 10th, "an assembly with several alterations; to begin with the instrumental opera of Radamistus." Indeed, Handel had prepared the soil for cultivation by a new compost, and had transplanted new exotics from Italy, in order to try the influence of our climate upon them. For finding the theatre abandoned by the fingers, and unsupported by its former patrons, he entered into an engagement with Heidegger, who was then in possession of the opera-house, to carry on the musical drama at their own-risk. And in order to save time, and not to trust to the uncertainty of report concerning the abilities of distant performers, in the autumn of 1728, he set off for Italy, where he engaged an entire new band of fingers, who did not, however, arrive in London before the autumn of the year following. These were announced to the public in the Daily Courant for July 2d, 1729, in the following manner:

"Mr. Handel, who is just returned from Italy, has contracted with the following persons to perform in the Italian operas: Signor Bernacchi, who is esteemed the best singer in Italy. Signora Merighi, a woman of a very fine presence, an excellent actress, and a very good singer, with a counter-tenor voice. Signora Strada, who hath a very fine treble voice, a person of singular merit. Signor Annibale Pio Fabri, a most excellent tenor, and a fine voice. His wife, who performs a man's part exceeding well. Signora Bertoldi, who has a very fine treble voice; she is also a very genteel actress, both in men and women's parts. A base voice from Hamburgh, there being none worth engaging in Italy." This last was John Godfrid Riemerschneider.

These

These new performers gave birth to new ideas and a new style, particularly in divisions, which by writing for nearly the same fingers during six or eight years, Handel had often repeated.

The first opera in which he employed his new fingers was LOTHARIUS, a drama written by Matteo Noris, and originally called Berengario Re d' Italia (u). The first representation of this opera did not take place till December 2d; whether this late commencement of the season, after a Sabbatical year, was occasioned by the late arrival of the vocal performers, or by obstacles which are now forgotten, is at present difficult to discover. The score was not finished till November 16th, according to Handel's own record (x); so that it was transcribed, got by heart, rehearsed, and brought on the stage, in the fortnight.

The first movement of the overture is majestic and pleasing; and the second movement, which is a fugue upon two gay subjects in triple time, is chiefly constructed on a ground-base, and is perhaps the last agreeable and successful effort of a great composer under such restraint. It is a species of writing which admits of ingenuity, but is necessarily monotonous. The last air of this overture is gay and graceful.

The first scene opens with a cavatina, of a very uncommon cast: Grave è il fasto di regnar; it has never been printed, but was probably intended to display the peculiar abilities of the new tenor, Annibale Pio Fabri (y). The second air: Non pensi quell' altera, was

(u) The English edition of this drama is printed without preface, dedication, or the least information concerning the poet.

(x) "Fine dell' opera, G. F. Handel, November 16th, 1729." MS. in his Majesty's possession.

(y) The merit of this tenor was often sufficient in Italy to supply the want of it in the principal soprano. Indeed, Bernacchi was at this time past his meridian; his voice was never good, but now little was left, except a refined taste and an artificial manner of singing, which only professors and a few of the most intelligent part of the audience could feel or comprehend. I purchased, at a stall, some years ago, an old music-book, in which were Solfeggi di Soprano, del Signor Annibale Pio Fabri, by which we may judge of his taste and knowledge. They contain many of the useful as well as ornamental passages of the day, and those of Leo, that have been so long celebrated, and used as lessons to form the greatest singers in Europe, can boast no other merit. Many of the passages are now become so common and vulgar as to be shunned by all good composers; and are, therefore, useless to singers of modern Music.

was performed by the same singer; it is a song of spirit, but the voice-part is not loaded with divisions, like modern tenor songs, of which though the subjects are frequently grand and interesting, yet the constant roulemens which it is thought necessary to give to the voice, soon degrade it to the level of a mere instrument which has nothing to do with poetry or articulation. The divisions in this air of Handel, which are numerous, are given with great propriety to the violin, by which means the singer was allowed more leisure for action, energy, and expression of the words (z). The third air: Venne a colei, was sung by Signora Merighi; it is written in the contralto, in F, though it was afterwards printed five notes higher. It is a natural, and pleasing air, which required no great abilities to execute (a). The subsequent air: Per salvarti, is in triple time, and was sung by Signora Bertolli, in a male character. The most striking passage in this song was afterwards used by Handel in his favourite minuet in the concerto he played in the oratorio of Esther:

rio of Esther:  &c. See his second

Organ Concerto. Bernacchi's first song: Rammentati cor mio, is an air of great dignity, and susceptible of much taste and expression; particularly as Handel judiciously left this singer to himself undisturbed by instruments, through which his voice had not sufficient force to penetrate. The first song that was sung by the new base voice, Riemschneider: Se il mar promette calma, though it was never printed, is admirable for the contrivance of the parts, as well as vocal melody; it is in a different style from all the airs of Handel previously attempted for Boschi, or afterwards for Montagnana, and may be ranked among his most ingenious and spirited compo-sic, who require exercises for the voice formed of all such divisions and difficulties as are in the highest favour with great composers and with the public: otherwise their labour is vainly bestowed on useless and inelegant traits of melody, that are not likely to occur, or to give pleasure to a polite audience, if accidentally introduced as changes or embellishments to airs in present use.

(z) This air which was printed in C, is in A, in Handel's original score.

(a) Hasse afterwards worked on the same theme in Gianguir, but in different measure, to the words: Parto se vuoi così.

sitions of that kind. The next air: Quel cor che mi donasti, the first that STRADA ever sung on our stage, seems chiefly calculated to display her fine and brilliant shake, for which there are more than thirty occasions in the course of the song. This singer had many prejudices to combat on her first arrival in this country: the enemies of Handel were of course unwilling to be pleased with any part of the entertainment he had provided for the public; the abilities of Cuzzoni and Faustina had taken possession of the general favour; and Strada's personal charms did not assist her much in conciliating parties, or disposing the eye to augment the pleasures of the ear; for she had so little of a Venus in her appearance, that she was usually called the Pig. However, by degrees she subdued all their prejudices, and sung herself into favour, particularly with the friends of Handel, who used to say that by the care he took in composing for her, and his instructions, from a coarse singer with a fine voice, he rendered her equal at least to the first performer in Europe. Bernacchi's second song, in this act: Già mi sembra, has no peculiar merit; it is an allegro with a very thin accompaniment, and the melody itself is not very striking. There is a gay chorus: Viva, viva, after this air, in Handel's manuscript score, of which even the words are not printed. After this Morighi had a lively air: Orgoglio setto v'è l'augelletto, in triple time and in a minor key, which is not of a kind to have been ever in high favour. The next: Scherza in Mar, and the last in the act, is an aria di bravura, for Strada, in which Handel has given her many of his favourite divisions, which frequently occurred to him afterwards in composing and playing. It is a spirited song, in which not only the singer, but orchestra, has much to do (b).

The second act opens with a short but admirable military symphony at the close of a battle, followed by an accompanied recitative. The first air in this act: Regno, e grandezza, which was sung by Annibale Pio Fabri, is calculated to display a good actor and singer of considerable execution; but as this air was not printed, it seems as if it had not been in much favour with the public. The subsequent air, Tiranna, ma bella, sung by Bernacchi, is natural and pleasing, but not of that kind which, if well performed, would establish the character of the singer, either for agility, taste, or expression. The Strada's first air in the second act: Menti eterne, is truly pathetic, and fit only for a singer possessed of science and feeling. After this, there is a spirited air in Handel's score: Non t'inganni la speranza, which was sung by the German Baritone, Riemschneider, that was not printed; indeed, as none of this performer's songs were published with the rest of the opera, soon after its first representation, it seems to imply his want of success on the stage. The next air: Arma lo sguardo, composed for the Merighi, in the contralto, is injured, in the printed copy, by a transposition from its original key of F minor to A natural. There is much peculiar spirit of haughtiness and disdain in this air, that suited the situation of the singer in the character of Matilda. The following air: Bella, non mi negar, for Bertolli, who performed a man's part, though it is a pleasing composition, was not printed, which it certainly would have been, had a singer of the first class awakened the attention of the public. Another reason may be assigned for the next air: D'una torbida sorgente, not having a place in the printed copy: it was probably too new and ingenious in the accompaniment to be generally admired or comprehended. Bernacchi had, after this, a cavatina: Quanto, più forte, of great beauty, of which the symphony is grand and original. This air, which was never printed, is followed by a brilliant and agreeable song of execution: D'instabile fortuna, which was sung by the tenor, Fabri. After which, the act is terminated by a charming air, richly accompanied: Non disperi pelegriño, for Bernacchi. Several passages in this song occurred to Handel in subsequent compositions, particularly in Return, O God of hosts, where there is a modulation into the minor third of the key.

(b) This air seems to lose some of its original spirit by being transposed from A sharp, in which it was composed, to G.

The third act begins with a short spirited symphony, whence he afterwards drew several passages for his organ concertos. Strada's first air: Non sempre invendicata, which is not printed, has infinite spirit, and affords opportunities for good action as well as singing; while the orchestra supports the situation of the performer with great force and effect. This is followed by an impassioned air: Vi sento sì, for Fabri, in which there is a passage in the accompaniment of peculiar energy, which, tho' often repeated in different modulations, is always welcome:

The next air: Quel superbo, which was sung by the Merighi, and is not printed, has great instrumental and dramatic spirit. Then after a short military symphony, there is an admirable base song: Alza al ciel, in Handel's best style, which was sung by Riemtschneider, but never printed. The next air: Vedrò più liete, composed for Bernacchi, has many divisions in triplets, and abounds with spirit more than any other song that was assigned to this singer in the opera (d). Merighi then has an air of character: Impara cordardo, which has considerable spirit and originality. This is followed by a pathetic and supplicating air of a peculiar cast: S'è delitto, sung by Bertolli; and a very pleasing duet: Si bel sembiante, with which, after a cheerful chorus, the opera is terminated. Upon the whole, though this has many agreeable songs, it abounds with fewer airs on great and masterly subjects than many of his preceding operas; and whether oppressed by opposition and less supported by his singers than formerly, his invention seems to have been less fertile than usual, to which the success of the songs seems to have been proportioned; as no one of them appears to have ever been in general favour throughout the nation.

1730. This opera continued in run from December 2d till January 13th, 1730, and had ten representations. After which, Julius Cæsar was revived, and performed nine nights. And February 24th, a new opera was brought on the stage, called PARTHENOPE, written by Silvio Stampiglia, originally for Naples, but new set by Handel, for the same singers as performed in Lotharius.

(c) This passage occurs in one of his hautbois concertos.

(d) Though this air is printed in G, the original score is in E sharp.

The overture of this opera is less captivating than that of any of his former productions of this kind. The first movement, in the style of Lulli, contains nothing new; and the fugue, on a convulsive and unpleasant theme, is embellished by no solo parts for hautbois, and but little diversified by counter subjects or episodes. The last movement is the best, though in jig time, and at present somewhat vulgar. Act first, after a short recitative, there is a very pleasing chorus: Viva, viva, Partenope. The first air in the opera: L' amor ed il destin, which was sung by Strada, abounds with passages of execution of a very agreeable and uncommon kind, that required a flexibility and agility of voice superior to any difficulties which this singer had to encounter in Lotario. The next air: O Eurimene, sung by Bernacchi, is a beautiful cantabile, with no other accompaniment than a violoncello. After this, there is a pleasing Sicilian: Se non ti sai spiegar, sung by the Merighi, which is followed by a natural and agreeable air, though of no uncommon cast: Voglio dire, for Bertolli. The next air, sung by Merighi: Un'altra volta, is, however, of an original and lively kind, and abounds in passages that are interesting. After this, there is a fine pathetic air, for Bernacchi: Sento amor, of which the melody and accompaniment are truly elegant. Then follows one of the most agreeable of all Handel's base songs: T' appresta forse amore, for Reimschneider, to which there is a rapid accompaniment for the violin that is carried on with much art and fancy. The next air: Sei mia gioia, for Strada, is lively, but less uncommon, than the following: Io son ferito, which was both elegant and new at the time it was composed, though it has not been printed. The next air: Dimmi pietoso ciel, for Bernacchi, has the stamp of a great master upon it, though many of the passages are now out of favour. This is followed by an air of some difficulty in the execution: Anch' io pugnar saprò, for Fabri; but of which the divisions are the least pleasing parts of the melody. After which, there is an air: Io ti levo l' impero, for Strada, in the style which Hasse and Vinci were now successfully cultivating, and in which the melody of the voice-part was more polished, and the accompaniment more simple.

and.

and quiet, than any that could be found in the songs of their predecessors. For the subsequent air: Ora spiegarsi, written for a singer of the second or third class, but not printed, Handel put himself to no great expence of thought. The next: E figlio il mio timore, for Bernacchi, though printed, is not in Handel's manuscript score. This air has some pretty passages, but is not to be ranked among his capital productions; it is followed by an elaborate hunting song, in a score of nine parts: Io seguo sol, in which the French-horns have solo parts; many of the passages are now become common, from the constant use of them by others, in airs of the same kind; yet the effect of this composition, which terminates the first act, if well accompanied by a powerful and well-disciplined band, would be still admirable. It was sung by Merighi, whose voice, though a female, was a low contralto.

In the beginning of the second act, we have several species of military Music: an excellent march, which serves as an accompaniment to a dialogue or duet, between the leaders of the two armies, and a chorus; after which, there is a martial symphony during an engagement; and a song of triumph at the end of it. In the second scene, there is an excellent accompanied recitative, followed by an air: Barbaro fato, for the tenor, Annibale Pio Fabri, which required great abilities of execution. Scene third, Strada had a short flow air of great dignity and beauty: Care mura. The subsequent air: Voglio amare, which is extremely graceful and pleasing, was likewise sung by Strada. It is an andante allegro, in which while the base chiefly moves in quiet iterated notes of a modern cast, the other instruments carry on a subject, different from the principal cantilena, in a very masterly and agreeable manner. This air is so smooth and free from wrinkles that it is difficult to imagine it to be near sixty years of age. It is followed by an agreeable duet, or rather dialogue, of a peculiar kind: E vuoi con dure tempore, by Bernacchi and the Merighi, in which one of the two lovers, who have quarrelled, only upbraids the other from time to time with the epithets infido, ingrato, without ever singing together. Fabri after this had a gay and graceful air, which is misplaced placed in the printed copy : Qual farfalletta, in as modern a style as if it had been composed but last week. The next air, however : Furie son dell' alma mia, for Merighi, though spirited and masterly, is now somewhat rude and uncouth. The subsequent air : Poterti dir vorrei, for Bernacchi's contralto voice, is a pleasing minuet ; but it is followed by a jig that is less agreeable. The next air : Furibondo spira il vento, which finishes the act, is animated with Handel's genius and fire, though the passages have been long since vulgar and common.

The third act begins with a march, a symphony, and, after a scene of recitative, a short but agreeable quartetto, between the four principal singers : Non è incauto il mio consiglio. Then there is a fragment of a charming Siciliana : Arsace, o Dio così, which was sung by Merighi, and is followed by an agreeable air for Strada, and another of a superior cast for Fabri : La speme ti consoli. We have next an excellent aria di cantabile, for Bernacchi : Cb' io parla? which has no fault but brevity. Then a spirited song for Merighi, in triple time : Quel volta mi piace ; and in the next scene, another, in common time for Bernacchi : Nobil core ; this is enlivened and rendered very pleasing by an ingenious accompaniment. The Music of the next scene, which was performed by Bernacchi, is admirable ! It is in Handel's best dramatic style : after a short recitative, there is a very pathetic air in seven parts : two German-flutes, two violins, tenor, voice, and base, played on the theorbo-lute, and by the violoncellos and double basses, pizzicato : Ma quai notte di mesti lamenti ; this air, at the close of which the hero of the drama falls asleep, is finely written, and will be always elegant and pleasing. It is followed by a fine accompanied recitative, and a trio for Strada, Bernacchi, and Merighi, of great spirit, and well calculated for action. After this, the air : Fatto è amor un Dio d' inferno, for Bernacchi, is full of Handel's own fire and originality ; the base is remarkably bold, busy, and, being in F minor, difficult of execution. The subsequent air : La gloria in nobil alma, for the tenor, Pio Fabri, is likewise on a spirited and pleasing subject ; but seems somewhat degraded by the divisions, many of which, though natural and easy to a harpsichord player, can hardly be called vocal. The next air: Sifcherza, which is the last, is light and airy, but not very common. It was sung by Strada, but required no great powers of execution or expression. The coro finale is an agreeable gavot, in which there are some masterly imitations.
of

This opera, which is among the best of Handel's dramatic productions, was finished, according to his own date at the end of the manuscript score, the 12th of February 1730, and first performed on the 24th of the same month, had but seven representations. It was, however, revived the next season, and performed in December and January seven times more. But in the spring of 1730, after the first run of Parthenope was over, and one performance of Julius Cæsar before his Majesty, March 31st, for the benefit of Anna Strada del Pò, ORMISDA, a new opera, was performed; but whether a pasticcio, or by whom composed, does not appear by the book of the words, public papers, or by any other record that I have been able to find (e). It had an uninterrupted run of thirteen nights, from April 4th to May the 14th; and was again performed June 9th, November 24th, 28th, and December 1st, 5th, and 8th. In the middle of the run of this opera, April 21st, there was however, a change of twelve songs, which seems to imply a want of attraction in those that were superseded. None of the airs appear to have been printed, except a few for the flute, with those of Parthenope, by Walsh. The singers were the same as had sung in Handel's opera of the same year, and the performance must have been under his direction, which excites curiosity to know what compositions he thus honoured with his approbation. Previous to the close of the spring season his own opera of Ptolemy had six representations. In the advertisement for the performance of this opera, inserted in the Daily Journal June 2d, several alterations were promised; and notice given, that "as the opera was

(e) The Drama of Ormisdà was written by Apostolo Zeno, and originally set for the Imperial Court at Vienna, 1722, by Caldara; but whether this was the Music to which it was now performed in London, I am unable to discover.

short, it would not begin till seven o'clock." The season was terminated by the performance of Ptolemy, June 13th.

August 28th, in the Daily Post it was said that "Signor Senesino, the famous Italian singer, was engaged to come over against the winter to perform under Mr. Heidegger in the Italian opera;" and October 9th, by a paragraph in the Daily Journal, the public was informed that "grand preparations were making at the opera-house in the Hay-market, by new cloaths, scenes, &c. and, Senesino being arrived, that the performances would begin as soon as the court returned to Saint James's (f)." And yet an opinion has long prevailed that the chief cause of the dissolution of the Royal Academy of Music, was a disagreement between Handel and this singer, and that the separation which ensued upon the breaking-up of that establishment, 1728, was perpetual. The return of Senesino however at this time to sing Handel's Music, when the theatre was chiefly under his own direction, proves the contrary. Indeed, it seems as if the quarrels of the singers, and disagreements with this composer, had not so much contributed to the ruin of the Academy, as the enormous expence, and want of persons sufficiently intrepid to involve themselves in the renewal of so hazardous, or rather ruinous, an undertaking, as the opera had hitherto been.

November the 3d, the ensuing season was begun with the revival of Scipio, which was performed six times; and this, with five representations of Ormisda, and four of Parthenope, in all which Senesino and the Strada sung, finished the year.

1731. Parthenope was likewise performed January 2d, 5th, and 9th; and on the 12th was represented an opera called WENCESLAUS, by an anonymous composer (g). A musical drama of the same name was performed in England two or three times in 1717, to Music of different composers. Of the airs now used, under Handel's direction, we are at present utterly ignorant. It sustained at this time only four representations; after which, February 2d, a new opera, the Alessandro of Metastasio, under the

(f) This summer was spent by the King and royal family at Windsor.

(g) This drama, written by Apostolo

Zeno, was first performed at Venice, 1703, to the Music of Carlo Fran. Pollarello.

name of PORO, was brought on the stage, in which Senesino performed the principal part.

The first movement in the overture is grave and grand, in Lulli's meliorated style, by Handel. The fugue is in jig time, and is more German of that period, and less pleasing, than most of the second movements of his other opera overtures. There is no third movement, or air, after this allegro. The original performers in this opera were Senesino, contralto; Annibale Pio Fabri, tenor; and Comano, base: with the Strada, soprano; and the Merighi and Bertolli, both counter-tenors.

The first air, for Bertolli: E prezzo leggiero, though it is neither remarkable for learning nor invention, is gay and pleasing, and fit for a singer of limited abilities and of small importance in a drama. The second air, which was sung by Senesino: Vedrai con suo periglio, is spirited, natural, and enlivened by the ritornels and accompaniment. The third air, for Annibale Pio Fabri: Vil trofeo, is in a style which a good singer can always render modern and interesting. The next air: Chi vive amante, sung by Merighi, is lively and agreeable, and though it displays no particular talent in the performer, has little strokes of ingenious composition, which are only to be found in the works of able masters. But in the next short air, for Senesino: Se mai più, which has no second part, there is a happy and impassioned boldness and expression in the appoggiaturas, which I do not recollect to have seen hazarded by any composer of that period. This cavatina, in other respects, is admirable.

1st violin.

2d violin.

viola.

The

The subsequent air, which was the first in Strada's part, might be rendered extremely pleasing by a performer possessed of a fine voice, a good shake, and an elegant manner of singing. After this, Senefino had an air: Se possono tanto, which has been always justly admired for its elegance. It is written in a measure and style in which Handel had been frequently successful; but the clear and quiet accompaniment in iterated notes was that which Hasse and Vinci rendered fashionable, and which subsequent masters carried to excess (b). The next air: Compagni nell' amore, is light and pleasing, with a lively accompaniment for violins in unison. After this, Fabri had an agreeable air: Se amor a questo petto, which required considerable agility in the execution. The first act is terminated by an admirable duet: Se mai turbo, in which the lovers, Porus and Cleofida, are ironically repeating the former promises which they had made to each other of fidelity and confidence. The composition of this duet is excellent, and in a style truly dramatic, which has been since generally adopted.

After a bold and spirited military symphony, the second act begins with another duet in a very different style: Caro amico amplesso, of which the words are not to be found in Metastasio. The composition, which more resembles that of the chamber-duets of Steffani than the preceding, is masterly; and the four instrumental parts of the accompaniment being totally different from the vocal, render the harmony very rich and grateful. The following air: D' un barbaro scortese, for Fabri the tenor, is in a very spirited and original style. After this, Strada had an air: Digli ch' io son fedele, which is fugata and more laboured, but less captivating than the former. Senefino had after this, a very pleasing air: Senza procelle ancora, of which the accompaniments, by French-horns, flutes, violins, tenor, and base obligati, must have had an admir-

(b) This air has been lately revived, and admirably sung by Rubinelli, for whose compass of voice it is as well suited as that of the original singer, Senefino. It is so different from the generality of Handel's airs in the accompaniment, that the Italians, who had only seen it in manuscript, were unwilling to allow it to be of his composition.

However, the printed copy, as well as the original score in Handel's own hand-writing, which are both before me, render these doubts ridiculous. The composer seems to have finished this song with unusual attention: having cancelled eleven bars in his manuscript, and made several other changes both in the melody and instrumental parts.

able effect when performed by a well-disciplined opera-band. The next air: Se il ciel mi divide, sung by the Strada, with a solo accompaniment on the violin by Castrucci, the first violin of the opera at this time, is now a little passée (i).

Bertolli, after this, had an exquisite air, alla Siciliana, beginning: Se viver non poss'io, which is the best of Handel's innumerable songs in that style. The last air in the second act: Di render mi la calma, for Merighi, is very gay and agreeable. According to Handel's own memorandum, the composition of this act was finished December 30th, 1730.

In the manuscript score there is an inedited symphony at the beginning of the third act, in G minor, and in the usual style of the first movement of Handel's overtures. The first air of this act: Risveglia lo sdegno, sung by Senesino, is spirited, but of no peculiar cast of melody or design. The next air was assigned to Strada: Se troppo crede. It is an andante in a minor key, with a second part in a major key, which is much more pleasing than the first. This is followed by an air for Merighi: Come il candore, of no great beauty. The next air: Serbati a grandi imprese, for Fabri, has, however, considerable merit, as a bravura of the time; many of the divisions are, indeed, instrumental, but the voice singing an octave above the base, while the accompaniment is busy, has a new and good effect. The subsequent air for Senesino: Dov' è? Si affretti, is in a grand style of theatrical pathetic. It is not only the best air in this opera, but equal, at least, to any of Handel's best dramatic productions. The plan of accompaniment is majestic, and melody impassioned and expressive. This is followed by a short and simple air: Mio ben, in a ballad style, for Bertolli; after which, there is a very pleasing and characteristic pastoral: Son confusa pastorella, which was long in high favour, not only with singers, but performers on the German-flute. The next air: Spirto amato, for Strada, is written on a short ground-base, of one bar only,

(i) These words seem never to have been set with so much genius, passion, and effect as by Piccini. His air was never performed on our stage, when it was introduced in repeated fourteen or fifteen times ; while the melody is as free and pathetic as if the composer had been under no such restraint. Handel has manifested great abilities in writing upon this theme, which offers no very obvious accompaniment:

Didone, a passiccio opera, in 1786, by the Mara, without a general and rapturous crescendo.

The last air : Cara vieni, which was first sung in Dialogue by Senefino and Strada, afterwards in duo, and finally in chorus, was so simple and pleasing that it soon became a national favourite (k).

This opera, though it contains but few airs in a great and elaborate style, was so dramatic and pleasing, that it ran fifteen nights successively in the spring season, and was again brought on the stage in the autumn, when it sustained four representations more.

After the first run of Porus was over, the opera of Rinaldo was revived, and performed five times (l) ; when it was succeeded by Rodelinda, with the seventh representation of which, the season was closed, May 29th (m).

In the autumn, besides the repetition of Porus, Tamerlane and Admetus were revived, and these continued to be performed till January 15th, 1732, when the opera of Ezio, written by Metastasio and set by Handel, was brought on the stage.

The overture to this opera, was originally intended, according to the title given it by Handel in his foul score, for another drama, entitled Titus l' Empereur. In the manuscript there is a third movement, à tempo di gavotta, which is not printed in Walsh's edition of Ætius. The opening and fugue are pleasing, but not writ-

(k) The Music of Porus has been printed more conformably to Handel's original manuscript score, than any other which Walsh published ; no entire songs, or instrumental parts have been omitted, and nothing is wanting, except the recitatives, to render it complete.

(l) In the title-page of the printed book of the words, this opera is now said to have been "revived, with many additions by the author, and newly done into English by Mr. Humphreys."

(m) February 22d of this year, a concert was advertised at Hickford's room, for the benefit of Signor Castrucci, first violin of the opera, who was to play the first and eighth concertos of his master, the famous Corelli, and several pieces of his own composition, particularly a solo, in which he engaged to execute "twenty-four notes with one bow." This advertisement was burlesqued, the next day, and a solo promised by the last violin of Goodman's Field's playhouse, in which he would perform "twenty-five notes with one bow."

ten with the force and originality of some of his anterior opera overtures (n).

The first scene opens with an agreeable march, which has not been printed with the songs. The first air: Se tu la reggi, for Bagnolefi, has dignity and character in it suited to the business of the drama. The second air: Pensa a serbarmi, for Senesino, is a short, simple, and beautiful Siciliana, which must always please when well sung. The third air: Caro padre, for Strada, is plaintive, but not likely to captivate an audience, unless it is performed by a great and favourite singer. The fourth air: Il nocchier, for the tenor Pinacci, is in minuet time, and written with thoughtless rapidity. The fifth air, to the charming words: Quanto mai felici siete, is marked by Handel's originality and contrivance, but seems to be less simple than the poetry requires. In the sixth air: Se un bell' ardire, Handel brings into action the base voice of Montagnana, but neither fatigued himself nor the singer by labour or difficulty: it is light and chiefly in unisons and octaves. The next air: Se povero il ruscello, for Pinacci, is in Handel's best manner; it consists of two movements, the first innocent and pastoral, the second rapid and full of spirit: in both, the beautiful words of Metastasio are well expressed. The subsequent air: So chi t'accese, is animated and dramatic. Senesino's voice and action probably gave weight and dignity to the next air: Se fedele mi brama; but at present it does not seem likely to charm an audience by common singing. The final air of the first act: Finche' un zefiro, is an elegant mezza bravura, richly and ingeniously accompanied, which the voice, spirit, and abilities of the Strada, must have rendered charming.

The second act opens with a very fine solemn symphony, and accompanied recitative: Qual silenzio è mai questo! which are not printed. The first air: Vi fido la sposa, was sung by Bagnolefi, in the character of the emperor Valentinian. It appears now of an ancient cast, but well expresses the perturbation into which the

(n) After the overture there is a chorus in the manuscript: Numi eccelsi, with a running accompaniment for the violins, which does not belong to the opera of Ætius.

finger is thrown by his situation in the scene. The second air of this act: Va dal furor, is full of fire, and paints the fury and indignation excited in the personage for whom it was composed. After this, Strada had an accompanied recitative, in which the harmony and modulation are extremely masterly, and the words expressed in a manner truly pathetic. The next air: Recagli quell' acciario, delivered with the majestic voice and style of Senesino must have had a great effect. The words of this air have, however, been often set since Handel's time in a manner more dramatic, by making it an air of two characters: in the first, expressing indignation at delivering up that sword to the Præfect with which he had defended the imperial throne; and in the second, addressed to Fulvia, his intended spouse, softening into love and tenderness. After this, Strada had an air: Quel fingere affetto, on a pleasing subject, and abounding with graceful and elegant passages; among which those in triplets are not included, as they seem common and foreign to the subject; Handel has, however, made a good use of them in the accompaniment. The subsequent air: Nasce al bosco, for Montagnana, is composed on a plan different from most of Handel's other base songs, and was manifestly intended to exhibit the peculiar power of the finger. After this, Bertolli had an air of no great consequence: Finchè per te; this is followed by another for Strada: La mia costanza, which, though spirited and pleasing, is not one of Handel's happiest effusions. The act is terminated by a very beautiful Siciliana for Senesino: Ecco alle mie catene, the melody of which is elegant and impassioned, and the accompaniment delicate, clear, and amical to the voice-part (o).

The first air in the third act: Guarda pria, which was likewise set for Senesino, is full of spirit and dignity, with a busy and masterly accompaniment (p). The second air: Peni tu, for Bertolli, is graceful and pleasing (q). The third, for Senesino: Se la mia

(o) There are two scenes terminated by the two airs: Di tante roffore, and Che mi giova, in the drama of Metastasio, which Handel has not set.

(p) There is in Handel's manuscript, at the beginning of the third act, a short agreeable symphony, in E minor, which is not printed.

(q) It is remarkable, that this air in D minor begins with the chord of B flat, or sixth to the key-note.

vita, is a magnificent aria concertata in ten parts, with solo passages for the first violin, tenor, violoncello, flutes, and French-horns. It is in a grand style of cantabile, and with Senesino's voice and action must have had a great effect (r). The next air: Per tutto il timore, sung by the Bagnolefi, is spiritedly accompanied in an ingenious and masterly manner. The subsequent air: Tergi l' ingiuste lagrime, for the tenor, Pinacci, is elegantly pathetic, and may always be rendered captivating by a singer of taste and expression. Handel seems to have bestowed uncommon study and pains in the accompaniment of the second part of this charming air. All the twelfth scene of this act, for the Strada, consisting of an accompanied recitative: Misera dove son! and terminated by the air: Ab non son' io, is admirably composed in a grand style of theatrical pathetic. The last capital air of this opera: Gia risonar d' intorno, is a military song, for Montagnana, accompanied by a trumpet, and composed in Handel's fullest and best style of martial Music. The rest of the original manuscript is wanting; but on examining the book of the words, it appears, that nothing has been lost but the recitative of the two last scenes, and a light air in gavot time, which has been printed: Stringo al fine. It was sung alternately, en vau-deville, to different words, by Senesino, Strada, Bertolli, and Montagnana; and lastly, as a coro finale, by all the characters of the drama (s).

This opera, the third which Handel set of Metastasio's writing, with all its musical merit, and the beauty of a new species of lyric poetry, was represented but five times, at the four last of which the King and royal family were present.

After the short run of Exio, Julius Cæsar was revived, and performed five times, from February 1st to the 15th inclusive; and on the 19th of the same month, a new opera called SOSARMES, written by Matteo Norris, and set by Handel, was brought on the

(r) This air might have been well revived by Rubinelli, whose voice and majestic style of singing would have done it ample justice.

(s) The whole opera of Exio, or Ætius, was printed in score by Walsh, and advertised in February. A spurious copy of the favourite songs previously appeared at the printing-office in Bow church-yard, established by Cluer.

stage (t). This drama continued in run till the 21st of March, and sustained ten successive representations.

The overture of Sofarme is one of the most pleasing, in all its movements, of Handel's productions of this kind. The opening being in triple time gives it a different cast from the generality of cotemporary overtures upon Lulli's model. The fugue on a marked and pleasing subject, is treated with great art and spirit; and the minuet, in which the hautbois enforce every other bar, almost from the beginning to the end, in an ingenious and uncommon manner, seems liable to no objection except the too frequent repetition of the same passage, which perhaps to some ears may have a monotonous effect.

The singers in this opera were the same as in Ezio. After the overture there is a fine accompanied recitative, followed by a spirited military chorus: Alle stragge, alla morte, filled with Handel's polyphonic art. Then another accompanied recitative precedes a charming air, for Strada: Rendi il sereno, of which the sweet voice of Harrison has lately renewed the public favour. The next air: Forte inciampo, though full of lively passages of the times, will hardly be called again into notice; but the subsequent air: Fra l' ombra e l' orrori, for Montagnana, in which the base voice of this new singer, its depth, power, mellowness, and peculiar accuracy of intonation in hitting distant intervals, were displayed, will ever be admired by judges of composition, and heard with delight by the public whenever it is executed by a singer whose voice and abilities shall be equal to those of Montagnana. The next air, for Bertolli: Sì, minaccia, is as good as generally comes to the share of a subaltern singer of bounded abilities, and has, moreover, the merit of facility and a sprightly accompaniment. This is followed by an air written for Senesino, with more science and care: Il mio valore; which, though in a style that has been long abandoned by dramatic composers, is so ingenious and amusing to professors, that they cannot help admiring the art with which it is constructed. The subsequent air: La turba, for the tenor singer, Pinacci, is excellent in the present theatrical style; in which the agitation and passion of the singer is painted by the instruments in iterated notes, which neither incommode the performer, nor distract the attention of the hearer by complication. After this, the Bagnolese has an air in a pleasing and masterly style of composition: Due parti del core. The next, which terminates the first act, is a capital bravura air for the Strada: Dite pace, in which her powers of voice and execution are displayed with great abilities, in turbulent accompaniments and difficult divisions.

(t) The original title of this opera was Alfonso Primo; but Handel, after adhering to the author's dramatis personæ, when he first set it to Music, changed all the names in his foul score, before it was performed.

He has very minutely recorded in his manuscript score the time when he had finished the composition of this opera, in the following manner: Fine dell' opera. G. F. Handel. Venerdì li 4 di febbrajo, 1732.

The second act is opened with a charming cavatina of a truly pathetic and tender cast: Padre, Germano, e sposo, in which the same performer had an opportunity of exhibiting powers of a very different kind from those which the preceding air required. This air is followed by a duet: Se m' ascolti, for two subordinate characters in the drama, and has the merit of being theatrical, though its effects off the stage would not be very captivating; it is, however, followed by a graceful air: Se discordia, which, if well sung, would please at all times and in all places. The next air: So che il ciel, is original and masterly; and as the words: cader l' indegna frode su l' autor che l' inventa, the modulation is extremely curious. This is followed by a spirited and excellent base song for Montagnana: Sento il cor, in which the accompaniments, as usual in Handel's airs of this kind, are busy to great effect. After this, there is an extremely graceful and pleasing duet: Per le porte del tormento, which, though written for Senesino and Strada, would be very welcome to modern ears, if executed by favourite singers of the present times. This is followed by an elaborate air, accompanied by French-horns, written for Senesino, in a score of nine parts: Se la sfera della gloria, of which the passages are extremely natural and pleasing. The next is a passionate and characteristic air of great spirit: Vado al campo, which was sung in the counter-tenor by Bagnolese; after which we have a very graceful and pleasing air in minuet time: In mille dolci modi, which was sung by Senesino, and, according to tradition, always heard with great pleasure. This is followed by a rapid and pleasing air, for Strada: Vola l'augello, which terminates the act (u).

The third act opens with a short agreeable military symphony. The first air: S'io cadrò per tuo consiglio, was sung by Pinacci, it is of a very original cast both in melody and accompaniment; indeed, it seems impossible to name any dramatic composer who so constantly varied his songs in subject, style, and accompaniment, as Handel, for he not only avoided ever setting two airs following each other in the same key or measure, but seems studiously to have precluded all resemblance between one air and another throughout a whole opera. The second song in the third act of SOSARMES: Cuor di madre, is an admirable aria parlante calculated not only to display the powers of an actor and singer, but the abilities of the principal violin, Castrucci, for whom there was a solo part. This is followed by a light and easy air: Sincero affetto, for the Bertolli. After which Senesino has an air of spirit: M' opporrò da generoso, which, taken from its niche, would have no great effect; but the agitation and fury of the character for whom it was composed considered, it has great theatrical merit. The next, seems now to be an air of small importance: Vorrei ne pur; but a great singer renders trifles interesting, and this was sung by Strada. The following air: Tiene giove, in gavot time, for Montagnana, seems likewise to want a favourite singer to give it weight. These are followed by a very gay and pleasing duet: Tu caro sei, which, aided by the performance of Senesino and Strada, became a general favourite. After this duet, the opera is terminated by a pleasing finale, or chorus: Doppo l'ire, in a measure and style different from that of any of his preceding dramas. Though Sosarmes contains fewer great airs in an elaborate style of composition than several of Handel's more early operas, yet it may be ranked amongst his most pleasing theatrical productions.

March 25th, Attilio's opera of Coriolanus, composed in 1723, was revived under Handel's direction, and performed five times:

(u) This air, though inserted in the printed copy, is not in his Majesty's original MS.

after which it gave way to his own Flavius, which had immediately succeeded Coriolanus, when its first run was over. This revived opera sustained four representations; after which Handel introduced a new species of exhibition at the opera-house in the performance of ESTHER, a sacred drama, and ACIS AND GALATEA, a pastoral drama, both performed at the opera-house, in English, and in still life.

Handel seems to have been stimulated to this attempt by the encroachments of other adventurers upon his property. But as the success of this undertaking gave rise to the composition and performance of his immortal ORATORIOS, I shall present the reader with all the information, I have been able to obtain on this curious point of musical history.

Oratorios, though common in Italy during the last century (x), were never attempted in England, either in public or private, till the year 1720, when Handel set the sacred drama of Esther for the chapel of the Duke of Chandos at Cannons. In 1731, it was represented, in action, by the children of his Majesty's Chapel, at the house of Mr. Barnard Gates, their master, in James-street, Westminster (y). After this, it was performed by the same singers at the Crown and Anchor; but this being a subscription concert, the exhibition could not be called public. However, in the beginning of April 1732, the following advertisement appeared in the Daily Journal: "Never performed in public, at the great room in Villar's-street, York-buildings, by the best vocal and instrumental Musick, ESTHER an ORATORIO, or sacred drama, will be performed, on Thursday, April 20th, as it was composed for the most noble James Duke of Chandos, by George Frederick Handel. Each ticket five shillings (z)."

April 19th, the following advertisement appeared above the preceding, in the same newspaper: "By his Majesty's command, at the King's theatre in the Hay-market, on Tuesday the 2d day of

(x) See Chap. II. of this volume.

(y) See Sketch of the Life of Handel, p. 22.

(z) In the next two advertisements, the words were said to have been written by Mr. Pope; an assertion that was never contradicted by that great poet.

May, will be performed the sacred story of ESTHER ; an oratorio in English, formerly composed by Mr. Handel, and now revised by him with several additions, and to be performed by a great number of voices and instruments. N. B. There will be no acting on the stage, but the house will be fitted up in a decent manner, for the audience. The Musick to be disposed after the manner of the coronation service. Tickets to be delivered at the usual prices."

By another advertisement after the first performance of Esther, the purchasers of tickets by persons who could not obtain admission, are told that their money would be returned, or the tickets changed for another day ; which seems to imply that the house had greatly overflowed.

A similar provocation seems to have been given to Handel for the performance of ACIS AND GALATEA, by the following advertisement: "May 10th, at the theatre in the Hay-market, on Thursday the 12th inst. Acis and Galatea, a pastoral drama, set by Mr. Handel, will be performed, with all the choruses, scenes, machines, and other decorations ; being the first time it was performed in a theatrical way. The part of Acis by Mr. Mountier, being the first time of his appearing in character on any stage ; Galatea by Miss ARNE. Pit and boxes at five shillings (a)."

This exhibition took place on the 17th, which seems to have produced the following advertisement from Handel: "June the 10th, will be performed Acis and Galatea, a serenata, revised with several additions, at the opera-house, by a great number of the best voices and instruments. There will be no action on the stage, but the scene will represent, in a picturesque manner, a rural prospect, with rocks, groves, fountains, and grottos, among which will be disposed a

(a) It seems as if the elder Arne, the Upholsterer, in King's-street, Covent-garden, mentioned in the Spectator, and father of Dr. Arne and Mrs. Cibber, had been the principal projector and manager of these performances of Handel's compositions to English words ; as it is said in one of the advertisements, that subscriptions for English operas "are only taken in by Mr. Arne, at the Crown and Cushion, King's Street, Covent-garden." J. C. Smith, J. F. Lampe, and Harry Carey, as well as his son young Arne, were adventurers in this undertaking ; and Miss Arne, and Miss Cecilia Young, afterwards Mrs. Arne, were the principal female singers.

chorus

chorus of nymphs and shepherds, the habits and every other decoration suited to the subject." It was repeated the 13th, 17th, and 20th; and next season, December the 5th, 9th, 12th, and 16th. And this seems to have been the origin of Handel's performance of oratorios in still life, and of serenatas and other secular musical dramas, during Lent, in the manner of oratorios.

Between these two admirable productions in English, an Italian opera, entitled LUCIO PAPIRIO DITTATORE was represented four several times. Whether this was a pasticcio, or by whom the Music was composed, does not appear from any publication that has come to my knowledge.

June 24th, a pastoral entertainment, composed by Bononcini, was performed at the opera-house by command of her Majesty Queen Caroline, then regent in the absence of King George II. and with this performance the season was closed.

In November following the lyric theatre was opened with a new opera called CATO, which had six representations. No composer is mentioned, though the favourite songs were printed by Walsh, during its run. A drama, however of the same name, set by Leo, was performed at Rome and Venice in 1728.

In December, Handel's Alexander was revived, and represented six times; which, with four performances of Acis and Galatea, finished the year.

1733. January 2d, Ptolemy, an opera composed by Handel in 1728, was revived and performed seven times. After which, January 23d, he brought out a new opera called ORLANDO, originally written by Braccioli, in 1713, for Venice, and set by Alberto Ristori. It was afterwards set by many different masters, particularly by Orazio Pollaroli, in 1725, and in 1727, by Vivaldi, for Venice; but the Music to which it was now performed in London was entirely new composed by Handel, and finished, according to his own memorandum, November 20th, 1732.

The overture, though an excellent composition, has never been in great favour, or general use; and this neglect has not arisen from the want of a third movement for those who, unable to follow a composer composer through the mazes of learned modulation and complicated parts, listen only to the tune of the principal melody; for there is a very gay and airy jig at the end. But the difficulty of the key in which this overture is written, which is F sharp, seems to render its performance infrequent. In the first movement, where the two violins set off in regular fugue, the subject is inverted in the base; and this ingenious artifice is again practised in another key, previous to the close. The fugue is clear and masterly; but being in triple time, and not enlivened by any counter subject, or solo parts for hautbois, has in it less dignity and variety, than most of Handel's fugues in common time.

The first scene opens with a fine accompanied recitative, à tempo, or aria parlante, which was composed for Montagnana, in the character of the Persian philosopher Zoroastre, who in a night scene is introduced meditating on the motions of the heavenly bodies: Gieroglifici eterni; the Music of this scene, which is not printed, has a wild grandeur in it of a very uncommon kind. This is followed by a charming cavatina, for Senesino: Stimolato dalla gloria, with no other accompaniment than a violoncello. Montagnana has the next air: Lascia amor, in eight parts, which is extremely spirited, and rich in harmony and contrivance; the violin accompaniment has, however, rapid passages, that are very awkward and difficult, without effect. After this, there is another accompanied recitative followed by an agreeable air: Non fù già, for Senesino. We have then another accompanied recitative, which introduces an innocent pastoral air: Ho un certo rossore, for Signora Celeste, who performed a subordinate character. These are followed by a pleasing air: Ritornava al suo bel viso, in dialogue, between Strada and Bertolli. After which, Strada has a lively air: Chi possessore è; and Bertolli one that is plaintive: Se il cor. The next air: O care parolette, is very gay and pleasing; and this is followed by an elegant slow air for Strada: Se fedel. Then Senesino has a very animated air: Fammi combattere; after which, an agreeable terzetto: Consolati o bella, finishes the first act.

The second act begins with a very elegant and pleasing pastoral air: Quando spieghi, for Celeste, which seems to require greater abilities abilities in the execution, than are usually found in a singer of the second or third class. The same performer had likewise the next air: Se mi rivolgo, which is a beautiful Siciliana. Then Senesino had an air of great spirit and passion: Cielo se tu, which displayed his abilities in acting and execution. This is followed by an admirable base song for Montagnana, in a style different from most of his celebrated songs for a base voice. Bertolli, after this, has a very graceful and pleasing air, alla Siciliana: Verdi allori; and Strada two in very different styles: the one lively: Non potrà dir mi, with divisions which required considerable agility; the other: Verdi piante, pathetic, and richly accompanied. The whole last scene of this act, which paints the madness of Orlando, in accompanied recitatives and airs in various measures, is admirable. Handel has endeavoured to describe the hero's perturbation of intellect by fragments of symphony in $\frac{5}{8}$, a division of time which can only be borne in such a situation.

The air in gavot time: Vaghe pupille, of which the two first bars are so frequently repeated, always disappoints my ear, which expects the key to be D minor, and the C in the second bar to be sharp:

In the larghetto part of this air, upon a ground-base, Handel hazarded a transient chromatic in the accompaniment, perhaps for the first time, which has since been adopted to excess, in modern compositions:

The

The third act opens with a symphony in four parts, which has not been printed. The style in which this movement is written is now out of fashion, but the harmony, contrivance, and activity of the several parts will always please real judges of musical composition. The first air: Vorrei poter, sung by Bertolli, is gay and natural. The next scene has no regular air, but fragments of airs, sung by the frantic Orlando. In these, there are fine passages, though designedly incoherent. In the subsequent scene, Strada has a graceful and pleasing air: Così giusta. After this, Celeste had a gay, spirited, and beautiful air: Amor e qual vento, in which Handel seems to have first ventured at the diminished seventh, the invention of which was afterwards disputed in Italy by the friends of Jomelli and Galuppi (b).

This is followed by an admirable base song, in Handel's grandest style of writing for a base voice: Sorge infesta. Montagnana, who sung this air, must have had an uncommon compass and agility of voice to do it justice. The divisions in many songs written expressly for his voice are both numerous and rapid, and sometimes extend to two octaves in compass. Handel, in his score, has cancelled many passages in this air, which was originally much longer than in the printed copy. After this comes a duet: Finche prende, which is chiefly in dialogue, upon a constantly moving base, and is the most masterly composition in the opera. This duet is followed by an accompanied recitative, which is admirably characteristic of Orlando furioso; and this is succeeded by a beautiful invocation to sleep: Già l'ebro mio ciglio, which was sung by Senesino, accompanied by violette marine. This accompaniment was written, according to Handel's own manuscript instructions to the copyist, for the two Castruccis: per gli Signori Castrucci (c). This air is followed by another fine accompanied recitative for Montagnana, in the character of Zoroaster, who appears in this drama more as a magician than philosopher or legislator. He undertakes, by the power of enchantment, to cure Orlando of insanity; and to assist his charms and incantations a beautiful symphony was played, which has never been printed. The hero's last air: Per far mio diletto, has an original boldness in it, which seems extremely suitable to the character. This is soon followed by the final chorus, which is a pleasing gavot.

(b) See account of this controversy, Vol. II. p. 164, et seq.

This opera sustained ten representations during its first run, and six more in April and May.

After the first run of Orlando was over, Floridante, an opera composed by Handel in 1721, was revived March 3d, and performed four times. March 17th, DEBORAH was performed, in English at the opera-house for the first time, on a Saturday night, by his Majesty's command, instead of an Italian opera. It was executed, according to the advertisement, "by a great number of voices and instruments, being the last dramatic entertainment at the King's theatre before Easter." And a promise was made; that "the house should be fitted up and illuminated in a new and particular manner." Tickets for this night only, were one guinea each; gallery half a guinea. But this seems to have been a trial of public liberality, which did not succeed; as the second time Deborah was performed, March 27th, the prices were reduced to the common standard. This composition was not then generally called an oratorio; for in the Daily Journal, April 2d, a paragraph says, that "the King, Queen, Prince, and three of the eldest Princesses, went on Saturday night to the King's theatre in the Hay-market, to see the opera of Deborah."

Esther was revived April 14th and performed in the same man-

(c) The violetta marina seems to have been a kind of viol d'amour, with sympathetic strings. Castrucci first played upon it in England at his own benefit concert, at ner, on opera nights. After which, April 24th, Orlando was again brought on the stage, and exhibited six times. Then Floridante twice more; and lastly, Bononcini's opera of Grifelda, composed in 1722, was revived May 22d, and represented till the close of the season, June 9th. By what influence this opera, the work of a rival composer, was now brought on the stage, and whether performed under Handel's direction, is not easy to discover. Had the private quarrels of public characters been then the subjects of newspaper discussions, as frequently as at present, it would not have been difficult to clear up these points of musical history (d).

Hickford's room, 1732, when it was advertised, that he would play "a solo on a fine instrument called violetta marina."

It seems to have been about this time that the quarrel between Handel and Senesino became serious; for June the 13th, a few days after the opera-house was shut up, the following advertisement was inserted in the Daily Post: "The subscribers to the opera in which Signor Senesino and Signora Cuzzoni are to perform, are desired to meet at Mr. Hickford's great room, in Panton-street, on Friday next, at eleven o'clock, in order to settle proper methods for carrying on the subscription. Such persons who cannot be present are desired to send their proxies."

Orlando was the last opera in which Handel composed songs expressly for Senesino; and whether the quarrel, which had been long fermenting between them, and which at length terminated in an open rupture and perpetual separation, operated insensibly upon his faculties in writing for this singer, or whether, as an intentional mark of resentment, he was careless of his own fame, in order to diminish that of his enemy, is now out of the reach of conjecture; but by a comparison of the songs intended for Senesino, after the opera of Porus, with those which Handel had composed for him previous to that period, there seems a manifest inferiority in design, invention, grace, elegance, and every captivating requisite.

There were in England at this time several candidates for fame in theatrical and choral Music: Arne, Lampe, Smith, Defesch, and Greene, tried their strength against Handel; but it was the (d) It is, however, most likely that Heidegger, the proprietor of the theatre, had lent it to Bononcini, when Handel's season was over.

contention of infants with a giant. Indeed, they composed for inferior performers as well as inferior hearers; but they appear to have been so sensible of their own want of resources, that the utmost they attempted seems to have been an humble and timid imitation of Handel's style of composition. Arne began to distinguish himself by new setting Addison's opera of Rosamond; Lampe by Amelia, an English drama written by Carey; and Smith by Taraminta, another opera, written by the same author; these were all said, in the play-bills and advertisements, to be set in the Italian manner. Defesch set an oratorio, called Judith, and Dr. Greene a Te Deum, and part of the Song of Deborah. These, though not very successful, contributed to diminish the public attention to Italian operas, and by that means injured Handel, without essentially serving themselves.

But Handel had a rival to contend with, whose reputation and patronage were far superior to those of any one already mentioned. The nobility and gentry, subscribers to the opera, who had taken sides in the differences between him and the singers, Senesino and Cuzzoni, and were offended at the advanced price for admission to the oratorios on opera nights, opened a subscription for Italian operas at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, inviting Porpora hither to compose and conduct; and engaging Senesino, Cuzzoni, Montagnana, Segatti, Bertolli, and, afterwards, Farinelli, to perform there.

The first opera that was brought on this stage was ARIADNE, written by Paolo Rolli, per la nobiltà Britannica, and set by NICOLA PORPORA. As little of the Music of this opera was printed, and a manuscript score is not to be found, I am unable to speak of its merit, but by analogy. Porpora was more a man of judgment and experience, than genius. His other operas and cantatas, which I have seen, are written with good taste; the melodies of the airs are graceful and natural; and the recitatives, particularly of his cantatas, are still regarded in Italy as models of perfection, for narrative Music. In his airs he rather polished and refined the passages of other composers than invented new; and in his accompaniment there is nothing very picturesque or ingenious. He was long esteemed the best singing-master in Europe, and was fortunate in the voices he had to form, particularly in that of Farinelli.
8
fortunate

Porpora's Ariadne was first performed December 29th, 1733, and continued in run till February 2d of the next year. After which it was discontinued till the arrival of Cuzzoni, when it was resumed and frequently performed till the end of the season, June 15th. This opera, supported by the spirit of party, probably, more than by its intrinsic worth, sustained twenty representations. Before the arrival of Cuzzoni, it was performed ten times; FERDINANDO, set likewise by Porpora, four; Bononcini's Astarto, five; BELMIRA, a pasticcio, four; and Ariadne in April and May, after the arrival of Cuzzoni, ten times. Then a new opera called ÆNEAS, by an anonymous composer, had six representations, which with repetitions of Ariadne brought the season to a close, June 15th.

The opera-house in the Hay-market was opened October 30th, with a drama called SEMIRAMIS, by an anonymous composer; which, after four representations, gave way to Handel's Otho, revived November 13th, and represented likewise four times. Who were the performers in these operas, I am unable to tell, not being in possession of the printed book of the words; but December 4th, a new opera, probably a pasticcio, called CAJUS FABRICIUS, was brought out in order to display the abilities of a new singer, GIOVANNI CARESTINI, who now appeared on our stage for the first time.

This was so renowned a theatrical singer, that some respect is due to his memory. His abilities have been celebrated by Quantz (e), and Mancini (f), who had frequently heard him at the best period of his performance. He was born at Mount Filatrana, in the March of Ancona, and at twelve years old went to Milan, where he was patronised by the Cusani family, whence he was frequently called Cusanino. His voice was at first a powerful and clear soprano, which afterwards changed into the fullest, finest, and deepest counter-tenor that has perhaps ever been heard (g). His first appearance on the stage seems to have been at Rome, in the female character of Costanza, in Bononcini's opera of Grifelda, 1721. In 1723, he was at Prague, during the great musical congress there, on occasion of the coronation of the Emperor Charles VI. as King of Bohemia. In 1724, I trace him at Mantua, and in 1726 at Venice, where he performed with Farinelli, and the famous tenor Paita. In 1728, he was at Rome, and again in 1730, where he performed in Vinci's celebrated operas of Alessandro nell' Indie and Artaserse, both written by Metastasio. He was now engaged by Handel to supply the place of Senesino, who together with his whole troop, except the Strada, had deserted from him, and enlisted under the banners of Porpora and the Barons at Lincoln's-Inn Fields. Carestini's person was tall, beautiful, and majestic. He was a very animated and intelligent actor, and having a considerable portion of enthusiasm in his composition, with a lively and inventive imagination, he rendered every thing he sung interesting by good taste, energy, and judicious embellishments. He manifested great agility in the execution of difficult divisions from the chest in a most articulate and admirable manner. It was the opinion of Hasse, as well as of many other eminent professors, that whoever had not heard Carestini was unacquainted with the most perfect style of singing. He continued in the highest reputation for twenty years after quitting England, and sung at Berlin with the Astrua in 1750, 1754, and 1755.

(e) See Present State of Music in Germany. Vol. II. p. 181.

(f) Pensieri sopra il Canto fig. p. 18.

The opera of Fabrizius, in which the part of Pyrrhus was performed by Carestini, was represented but four times, and those at the distance of a week between each representation; but such was the influence of Handel's enemies and Senesino's friends, that it seems to have repressed all curiosity for what was now transacting at the opera-house.

(g) Handel seems to have expected to find it a soprano, for the songs he composed for him in Ariadne, before his arrival in England, are written in that clef and com-pafs; and his whole part of Theseus was obliged to be transposed a note and sometimes two notes lower, than it stands in the original score.

1734. January 5th, ARBACES, a new opera, was performed at the King's theatre in the Hay-market, of which I am unable to give any account either of the words or Music. In all probability it was an old drama with a new name, and adjusted to airs selected from the works of different masters. After six representations it was superseded for ARIADNE IN CRETE, a new opera set by Handel. So many dramas have been written for Music with the title of Ariadne, that I am unable to assign the poetry of this opera to any particular author. Though it was not performed till January 26th, the composition was finished the 5th of October, in the preceding year (b), near three months before Porpora's opera of the same name was brought on the stage, and which was now in run at Lincoln's-Inn Fields. Handel's singers were Carestini, Scalzi, and Waltz, for the men's parts; and for the female the Strada, Durastanti, just arrived for the second time, after an absence of ten years, and the Negri. Abandoned by his former singers, opposed by the nobility, and depending solely on the public at large for protection and patronage, he seems to have exerted his powers of invention, and abilities in varying the accompaniments throughout this opera with more vigour than in any former drama since the dissolution of the Royal Academy of Music in 1728.

The overture of Ariadne is so well known and has continued in such constant favour, that little need be said in its praise. The subject of the fugue, which seems to promise no great variety of accompaniment, has been enlivened and embellished through all its repetitions in a manner peculiar to Handel. The minuet which pleases in every way in which it is tolerably performed, must have had a very striking effect in the theatre, as it is not played as part of the overture, but, after the curtain was drawn up, as a symphony to the first scene, where Minos King of Crete receives the tribute of Athenian youths and virgins, to be sacrificed to the Minotaur. It being first played, piano, without wind-instruments, and afterwards, forte, with French-horns and hautbois, surprised and pleased the audience in an uncommon manner, at that time. The first air: Mira mi, has spirit and originality. The second air: Dille che nel mio seno, though simple in melody, is curious in modulation. The third air: Deh lascia, for the Strada, has an agreeable vivacity in it, which a favourite singer would render very captivating. The subsequent air: Nel pagnar, which is the first in Carestini's part, is admirable, as a spirited composition intended to display the great and peculiar abilities of that singer. His low notes, fine shake, and articulate execution of divisions, were all put in action in the course of this air (i). Scalzi, the second man, to whom Handel gave but little to do in this opera, had the next air: Tal' or d' oscuro velo, does not rise above the dignity of a pleasing ballad (k). The Negri seems to have possessed no uncommon abilities; the first air that came to her share: Quel cor, is enlivened by a very pretty accompaniment. As Carestini's first air afforded him an opportunity of manifesting energy and spirit, the second: Sdegnata sei, is a fine cantabile, in which, according to tradition, his feeling and expression were equally eminent. Strada's next air: Sdegno amore, which terminates the first act, is extremely spirited, and of an original cast.

(b) The author has written with his own hand on the last page of the foul score; Fine dell' opera, Londres 5 Octobre 1733. G. F. Handel.

The beauties of the first scene of the second act, of which the symphony, accompanied recitative, and air, have been all printed, have not been surpassed in any one of Handel's dramatic works, that I can recollect (l); they all belong to Carestini's part, as did the next air: Salda quercia, though it is given to Strada, in the printed copy. This air, which he sung a note lower than it was engraved, is in a grand style of bravura, and contains longer and more difficult divisions than had been heard on our stage before the arrival of Farinelli. The next air: Non bà difesa, for Scalzi, contains nothing that would augment the reputation, or disgrace a composer or singer; it is innocent of meaning and passion, like the

(i) Handel, in accompanying the roulens in this song, seems first to have adopted the quiet effect of iterated notes, which then prevailed in the airs of Haffé and Vinci.

(k) According to Mancini, this performer became afterwards a singer of the first class:

CARLO SCALZI Genovese, riuscì nella professione un soggetto sì valente, che fù stimato fra il numero de' primi cantanti. Pensieri sopra il Canto figurato, Vienna 1774, p. 26.

(l) The recitative begins: O patria, oh cittadini! and the air: Sol ristoro.

poetry.

poetry. Strada had the subsequent air: So che non è, which is a very beautiful melody, alla Siciliana (m). After this, Durastanti had an animated air: Qual Leon, in ten parts, and cast in a mould totally different from all the rest. The next air for the Negri: Narrar gli allor, contains no peculiar beauties; nor is there much invention or felicity in either of the two airs which succeed this. Scalzi had, however, after these a very plaintive and pleasing air: Son qual stanco pellegrino, with a fine solo part for the violoncello, intended to display the abilities of Caporale, just come over. The next air: Se ti condanno, was sung by Waltz, a German, with a coarse figure, and a still coarser voice (n). This base song is followed by a very graceful and pleasing duet: Bell' idolo amato. After this, Strada had a plaintive pastoral air: Se nel bosco, which terminated the second act (o).

The first air in the third act: Un tenero pensiero, bears a great resemblance, in many passages, to the jig in Corelli's twelfth solo. The second air, however: Par che voglia, is not only more original, but more pleasing. The next song in the original score, though in Walsh's mangled copy it has been misplaced, is the celebrated air: Bella forge, which was long a national favourite; it was composed in E flat, but being transposed for Carestini, and printed in D, the flute players eagerly seized it as their property. In the next scene Carestini, in the character of Theseus going to attack the Minotaur, has a fine accompanied recitative and an air: Qui ti fido, of infinite spirit, heightened by a full and rapid accompaniment. After this, Strada had a very pleasing air of a more placid kind: Turbato il mar; and the Negri another: In mar tempestoso, of a

(m) In this air occurs the only combination of major third and minor sixth that I have seen in Handel's works, except in one of his organ fugues, where it seems to have had admission for the sake of bringing in a counter-subject.

(n) It has been said that he was originally Handel's cook. He frequently sung in choruses and comic entertainments at Drury-lane, in my own memory; and, as an actor, had a great deal of humour. It was imagined that his countryman Lampe had this song and singer in mind when he set "Oh, oh, master Moor," in the Dragon of Wantley.

(o) This air has still many beauties, though a little wrinkled by time. It has been printed with only a single violin accompaniment; but in the original manuscript there are parts for a second violin and tenor, which are very important to the harmony and effects.

gay and original cast, in which the second violin seems to be assigned the part of Boreas. The duet which follows: Mira adesso questo seno, is admirable, though in a style somewhat ancient. After which, the favourite air: Bella sorge, is sung in chorus, as a finale to the opera.

Handel's Ariadne was performed, during its first run, from January 26th to March 12th, thirteen times; and being revived in the autumn following, had six representations more, which made its performances, in the course of the year, amount to nineteen; the exact number of times which Porpora's opera of the same name had been exhibited.

This being the time when the Prince of Orange was in England, and his nuptials with the Princess Royal daily expected, all the theatres in London were preparing some exhibition in honour of that solemnity. And on Monday, March 11th, was inserted in the Daily Journal the following paragraph: "We hear that amongst the public diversions, preparing on occasion of the approaching nuptials, there is to be performed at the opera-house in the Hay-market, on Wednesday next, a serenata called PARNASSO IN FESTA. The fable is, Apollo and the Muses celebrating the marriage of Thetis and Peleus. There is one standing scene, which is Mount Parnassus, on which sit Apollo and the Muses, assisted with other proper characters, emblematically dressed, the whole appearance being extremely magnificent. The Music is no less entertaining, being contrived with so great a variety, that all sorts of Music are properly introduced in single songs, duettos, &c. intermixed with choruses, somewhat in the style of oratorios. People have been waiting with impatience for this piece, the celebrated Mr. Handel having exerted his utmost skill in it."

This serenata was performed March 13th, and on the 14th the wedding was solemnised. The serenata was repeated again the 16th, 19th, and 23d. The King, Queen, Royal Family, and Prince of Orange, honoured the first representation with their presence.

The Music of this exhibition, of which his Majesty has a fine score transcribed by Smith, was chiefly selected from the oratorio of Athalia, Athalia, which having been only performed once at Oxford, the preceding summer, was new to the ears of the greatest part of a London audience; and Handel with all the riches of his genius and invention, was very œconomical, and as frequently turned and patched up his old productions, as if he had laboured under indigence of thought. The second movement of the overture is the same as had been performed at Oxford, and which has been lately printed to the oratorio of Athalia, in Dr. Arnold's edition of Handel's works. The first air: Virginelle dotti e belle, is likewise the same air as was set to Blooming virgins, in that sacred drama. After this, we have a very lively chorus: Corriamo pronti, which is in Athalia to the words "The traitor if you there descry." The subsequent air: Deb! cantate, which is the same Music as "Ty-rants would in impious throng," of Athalia, has choral parts, and a very original accompaniment of a kind not very easy for any instrument. This movement, the melody of which is very graceful, must have had a fine effect, with the solo parts sung by Carestini and Strada. It is followed by a fine pathetic air, richly accompanied: Spira il sen, the same as "Softest sounds no more can ease me," in Athalia. This was supposed to be sung by Orpheus; and the next: Gran tonante, Giove immenso, by Apollo. And these airs, well executed, must have been thought, in 1734, worthy of the characters to which they were assigned. The next movement is an excellent chorus upon a spirited kind of ground-base: Già vien da lui, (The cloudy scene begins to clear.) After this, the air: Con un vezzo, is the same as Strada sung at Oxford, in Athalia, to the words "Soothing tyrant." A natural and elegant duet followed this: Sin le grazie nel bel volto, to the same air as "Joys in gentle trains." After which, the air in Athalia: "Faithful cares in vain extended," is adjusted to the words, Quanto breve è il godimento. Then we have a spirited chorus: Cantiamo a Bacco, to "Chear her O Baal;" a beautiful air: Sciolga dunque al ballo; and, lastly, S' accenda pur, a chorus full of fire and pleasing effects, which terminates the first part.

The second part begins with an air and chorus from Athalia: "The rising world," to the Italian words: Nel petto sento. The following air: Torne pure, seems not to have been taken from Athalia. Nel spiegar, is the same as "Through the land." But the charming hunting chorus: O quanto bella gloria, in thirteen vocal and instrumental parts, which fills twenty-eight folio pages in the manuscript, seems originally composed for the serenata; as does Fra sentier di amene selve; after which, part of the chorus: O quanto bella, is repeated. Già, già le furie, taken from "Hark! hark! his thunders," is a fine composition, fugata, in the accompaniments. Dopo d'aver perduto, an accompanied recitative, is seemingly original; but the admirable subsequent pathetic air: Ho perso il caro ben, given to Orpheus, and the chorus, into which it is afterwards formed, are both in Athalia, to the words "O Lord, whom we adore," and "Hear from thy mercy seat." After these, the graceful dialogue and duet: Cangia in gioia, in the parts of Apollo and Clio, are exact transcripts of, "Cease thy anguish," in the same oratorio; as is the coro finale of the second part: Coralli e perle, of "The gods who chosen blessings send," a little simplified in the accompaniment (p).

The third part begins with a military symphony, for the entrance of Mars; which, after a short recitative, is followed by a very animated chorus of sixteen parts, in the time, key, and style of the symphony. The first fourteen bars only of this admirable song and chorus, seem new; after which the chief part of the base song and chorus of Athalia: "When storms the proud to terrors doom," are worked in. These are followed by a pathetic air: Da sorgente rilucente, in the same motivo as "Joys in gentle trains," but in a minor key. Then an air, alla breve: Sempre aspira, the same as "Gloomy tyrants;" and a most agreeable pastoral, in Corelli's style, for Apollo: Non tardate fauni, ancora, which terminates in chorus. This is not to be found in Athalia. Circond' in lor vite, the same as "My vengeance awakes me." Si parli

(p) This chorus, if I mistake not, may be found in one of Handel's early operas; and, indeed, more than the mere subject, in Arne's

Comus: "Away, away! to Comus' court repair."

ancora, altered from "Round let acclamations ring." Han mente eroica, is not in Athalia, any more than the song and final chorus: Lunga serie; these are in a military style, with trumpets, wind-instruments, and long solo parts in bravura, for the first soprano, the divisions of which, as usual, are more thread-bare than the rest of the movement: the choral parts, indeed, are admirably interwoven with the principal voice-part, and the whole is conducted with great fire and spirit.

The Italian words are adjusted to the Music with such intelligence and attention to accent and expression, that if we were not acquainted with the new and particular occasion on which Parnasso in Festa was prepared, it would be difficult to discover whether the Music was originally composed for that serenata, or for the oratorio of Athalia.

After the fourth night of this serenata, Arbace was performed twice; and then the oratorio of Deborah was revived, April 2d, and performed three times, always by his Majesty's command; and though in English and still life, always on the nights usually appropriated to the Italian opera. Then Ariadne, Sofarmes, Acis and Galatea, till May the 18th, when Pastor Fido, was revived, "with several additions, intermixed with choruses; the scenery after a particular manner, and preceded by a new dramatic entertainment, called a Prologue in the book of the words, but in the advertisement it is entitled Terpsichore." All the choruses and most of the airs, as well as the prologue and overture, were new. It ran thirteen nights, and terminated the season July 6th, and Handel's contract with Heidegger, in the Hay-market. There was but one chorus in the drama of the same name, that was performed in 1712, and at the distance of twenty-two years, the style of singing and the public taste were extremely changed; the first, Pastor Fido, was uncommonly simple, even for the time; and Carestini and Strada were possessed of vocal abilities unknown at that period, on our stage, and perhaps on any other.

October 5th, Handel having quitted the King's theatre, began his campaign in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, with the same auxiliaries as the preceding season. Here he performed Ariadne and Pastor Fido, till December the 18th, when he removed to the new theatre in Covent-garden, where he brought out an opera called ORESTES; but whether new, or by whom composed, does not appear by newspapers, libretto, or any other record that I have been able to find. It was only represented three times: December 18th, 21st, and 28th; Handel furnished the overture (q).
the

The opera established by the nobility against Handel, at the theatre in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, under the direction of Porpora the preceding season, was now rendered doubly attractive by the arrival of Farinelli. Handel having abandoned the theatre in the Hay-market, the troop in opposition quitting Lincoln's-Inn Fields, took possession of it, and began the season October 29th with the opera of ARTAXERXES, cast in the following formidable manner: Artaxerxes, by Montagnana; Arbaces, FARINELLI; Artabanes, Senefino; Megabyfes, Signora Segatti; Semira, Signora Bertolli; and Mandane, by Cuzzoni. The Music of this opera was chiefly by Haffé and Riccardo Broschi, the brother of Farinelli. The airs of greatest favour, were Palido il sole, set by Haffé, and sung by Senefino; Per questo dolce amplesso, by the same; and Son qual nave, by Broschi; all performed by Farinelli (r). This renowned singer, whose voice and abilities seem to have surpassed the limits of all anterior vocal excellence, was born at Naples 1705; he learned the rudiments of Music of his father, and singing of Porpora, as he informed me himself. In 1722, at the age of seventeen, he went from Naples to Rome, with his master, then engaged to compose for the Aliberti theatre in that city, where he contended with a famous performer on the trumpet (s). Here he continued with Porpora till 1724, when he first went to Vienna. In 1725, he performed at Venice in Metastasio's first opera of Didone Abbandonata, set by Albinoni. After this he returned to Naples, where he performed with the celebrated female singer Tesi, in a serenata composed by Haffé. In 1726, he sung at Milan, in Ciro, an opera set by the elder Ciampi. In 1727, he performed at Bologna, with Bernacchi, in an opera set by Orlandini. In 1728, he went to Vienna a second time; and afterwards returning to Venice in autumn, he sung with Faustina, just returned from England, in Metastasio's Exio, set by Porpora. Here he continued two years, performing in 1729 with Gizzi and Nicolini, in Semiramide Riconosciuta, set likewise by Porpora, and in Cato, by Leo; and in 1730, with Nicolini and Cuzzoni in Haffé's celebrated opera of Artaserse, in which he first appeared in England; and in Idaspe, set by his brother Riccardo Broschi. In 1731, he returned to Vienna a third time, where he continued in increasing favour with the Emperor Charles VI. till his arrival in England.

(q) The names of Mr. Beard and Miss Cecilia Young, afterwards Mrs. Arne, first appear in the dramatis personæ of Handel's operas, performed at Covent-garden, this season.

(r) Son qual nave was an additional aria di bravura, composed by Broschi to display his brother's amazing powers of execution.

(s) See Present State of Music in France and Italy.

As general praise would convey to the mind of a musical reader no distinct ideas of the powers of this extraordinary singer, it will be necessary to discriminate the specific excellencies of which he seems to have been possessed.

No vocal performer of the present century has been more unanimously allowed by professional critics, as well as general celebrity, to have been gifted with a voice of such uncommon power, sweetness, extent, and agility, as CARLO BROSCHI DETTO FARINELLI (†). Nicolini, Senesino, and Carestini, gratified the eye as much by the dignity, grace, and propriety of their action and deportment, as the ear by the judicious use of a few notes within the limits of a small compass of voice; but Farinelli without the assistance of significant gestures or graceful attitudes, enchanted and astonished his hearers by the force, extent, and mellifluous tones of the mere organ, when he had nothing to execute, articulate, or express. But though during the time of his singing he was as motionless as a statue, his voice was so active, that no intervals were too close, too

(†) It has been said, that he had the cognomen of Farinelli, from farina, flour; his father having been a miller, or mealman: but as he said he learned the rudiments of Music of his father, and his brother was a composer of some rank, it seems as if his ancestors had not contented themselves with the mere clack of the mill. Indeed, when he was ennobled in Spain, and made knight of the order of Calatrava and St. Jago, it was necessary for him to send to Italy for his pedigree; and the Neapolitan heralds were diligent and ingenious enough to deduce his lineage from an ancient and honourable stem.

wide,

wide, or too rapid for his execution. It seems as if the composers of these times were unable to invent passages sufficiently difficult to display his powers, or the orchestras to accompany him in many of those which had been composed for his peculiar talent. And yet, so great were his forbearance and delicacy, that he was never known, while he was in England, to exclaim, or manifest discontent at the inability of the band, or mistakes of individuals by whom he was accompanied. He was so judicious in proportioning the force of his voice to the space through which it was to pass to the ears of his audience, that in a small theatre at Venice, though it was then most powerful, one of the managers of the opera complained that he did not sufficiently exert himself—"let me then," says Farinelli, "have a larger theatre, or I shall lose my reputation, without your being a gainer by it."

On his arrival here, at the first private rehearsal at Cuzzoni's apartments, Lord Cooper, then the principal manager of the opera under Porpora, observing that the band did not follow him, but were all gaping with wonder, as if thunder-struck, desired them to be attentive; when they all confessed, that they were unable to keep pace with him: having not only been disabled by astonishment, but overpowered by his talents. This band was small, consisting only of Carbonelli, Mich. Christ. Festing, Valentine Snow, afterwards serjeant-trumpet, and Mr. Vezan, a dancing-master, who was likewise a steady and excellent concert-player on the violin, and constantly employed whenever Carbonelli or Festing was the leader: it was from this worthy man that I had this anecdote.

There was none of all Farinelli's excellencies by which he so far surpassed all other singers, and astonished the public, as his mezza di voce, or swell; which, by the natural formation of his lungs, and artificial œconomy of breath, he was able to protract to such a length as to excite incredulity even in those who heard him; who, though unable to detect the artifice, imagined him to have had the latent help of some instrument by which the tone was continued, while he renewed his powers by respiration.

Of his execution the musical reader will be enabled to judge by a view of the most difficult divisions of his bravura songs. Of his taste and embellishments we shall now be able to form but an imperfect idea, even if they had been preserved in writing, as mere notes would only shew his invention and science, without enabling us to discover that expression and neatness which rendered his execution so perfect and surprising. Of his shake, great use seems to have been made in the melodies and divisions assigned to him; and his taste and fancy in varying passages were thought by his contemporaries inexhaustible.

The opera of Artaxerxes, in which he first appeared on our stage, had an uninterrupted run of eleven nights, and was afterwards so frequently revived, that the whole number of its representations, during Farinelli's residence in England, amounted to no less than forty. However, when it was performed the twentieth time, for his benefit, March 15th 1735, it was said to be revived with alterations and additions. Of what these consisted, is now not easy to discover; but as the three capital songs mentioned above seem to have supported their favour through all the subsequent changes and additions, and form an æra in theatrical Music, I shall, on the next plates, insert the most difficult of them for the satisfaction of my critical readers.

After the eleventh night of this opera, Otho was performed, December 10th, 14th, 17th, 21st, 23d, 28th, and 31st. As this Drama was not said in the bills to be new, but was merely called an opera, it is most probable that the Music was Handel's, in the performance of which Senesino and Cuzzoni had been so much applauded (u).

As two lyric theatres were now open, and both supported by composers and performers of great eminence, I shall recount their several transactions in opposite columns, to enable the reader to judge of the conflict, by a view of the forces that were opposed to each other, and the means that were severally used for obtaining a victory.

(u) Ottone in Villa, an opera set by the celebrated Vivaldi, was performed at Venice 1729; whether this or Handel's Music was now used, is difficult to discover.

1735. King's Theatre, Hay-Market.

Composer, Nicola Porpora.

Singers : Senesino, Farinelli, Montagnana ; Cuzzoni, Bertolli, Segatti.

January, Artaxerxes was performed twice a week during this whole month.

February 1st, POLIFEMO, a new opera written by Paolo Rolli, and set by Porpora, per la nobiltà Britannica, was first performed. In examining the favourite songs of this opera that were printed by Walsh, among which are five of Farinelli's, with one of Senesino's, and one of Montagnana's, there appears to be considerable merit in the melody. Indeed, much of the new taste, and new passages of this period, seems to have been derived from Porpora's songs ; that the difference of style and fancy in the airs of Farinelli with those that were sung by Nicolini two or three and twenty years before, is wonderful. Yet the songs of Nicolini being the best of the time, were equally admired by the public, who reason from what they hear, and improve in criticism by excellence in composition 1735. Covent-Garden.

Composer, Geo. F. Handel.

Singers : Carestini, Messrs. Beard, Waltz, Stoppelaer ; Strada, Maria Negri, Mrs. Young.

January 8th, ARIODANTE was first performed. This opera continued in run, and always by his Majesty's command, till March 5th. Some friend of the composer had endeavoured to excite expectation in the public for the Music of this opera, by inserting in the London Daily Post, so early as November the 4th of the preceding year, the following paragraph : " We are informed, that when Mr. Handel waited on their Majesties with his new opera of Ariodante, his Majesty expressed great satisfaction with the composition, and was graciously pleased to subscribe £.1000 towards carrying on the operas this season at Covent-Garden."

Nothing but the intrinsic and sterling worth of the composition could have enabled Handel at this time to make head, not only against four of the greatest singers that ever trod the opera stage, but against party prejudice, and the resentment, power, and spleen of position and performance, so much, as never to tolerate inferiority, while memory enables them to form a comparison. The King, Queen, Prince of Wales, and Princesses, honoured the first representation of Polifemo with their presence, and there was the fullest house of the season (x).

Opera-House.

This opera, with no other interruption, than the benefits continued in run twelve or thirteen nights.

In Lent, as Handel was to be attacked at all points, Porpora had an oratorio of his own composition, called DAVID, performed at the King's theatre. In this attack he seems to have sunk under his antagonist's superior force and fire. For this oratorio was executed but three times, while Handel continued the performance of different oratorios, without operas, for near two months.

April the 8th, ISSIPILE, a new opera, by a composer at present unknown, was first performed; it lived but four nights,

(x) London Daily Post.

when

Covent-Garden.

of the principal patrons of Music among the nobility and gentry of this kingdom. Ariodante was performed twelve times (y). After which, as Handel's capital singers were inferior in number and renown to those of his rival, he very wisely discontinued the performance of operas for a considerable time, and rested his fame and fortune on his choral strength in the composition of oratorios, in which species of writing posterity has done him the justice to allow his superiority in learning, force, and effects, to any composer that the world has yet seen. Esther was performed six times this spring; Deborah thrice; and Atbalia five times.

April 16th, ALCINA was first performed: an opera with which Handel seems to have vanquished his opponents, and to have kept the field near a month longer than his rival Porpora was able to make head against him. This opera, which was always performed by command of their Majesties, till the King went to

(y) We shall review this opera hereafter, in the same manner as the preceding dramatic productions of Handel.

X x 2

Hano-

Opera-House.

when recourse was had to the favourite opera of Artaxerxes, which, with several alterations and additions, was represented till the 3d of May; after which, another short-lived new opera was brought out, called IFIGENIA, which, after five performances, was likewise superseded for Artaxerxes, which was repeated till the 7th of June, when the season was closed with Polifemo, by command of her Majesty.

During the run of Polifemo at the Opera-house, the footmen terrifying the ladies by crouching into the lobby with lighted flambeaux, and refusing to retire when ordered by the gentlemen, created a great disturbance; and the assistance of the guards having been called for, the Marquis of Tweeddale's servant received a wound of which he died a few days after.

Farinelli sung at a great entertainment given by Count Montijo, the Spanish ambassador, at Powys-house: and likewise in a Te Deum performed at the Portuguese Chapel on the Princess of Brazil's being brought to bed of a daughter (z).

(z) The newspapers of the times tell us that "His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was pleased to make a present of a Covent-Garden.

Hanover, and then by command of her Majesty only, till the close of the season, July 2d, sustaining eighteen successive representations.

Besides the royal patronage and public approbation with which Alcina was honoured, Handel's friends seem to have been zealous and active in his favour: for on the first day of performance was inserted in the London Daily Post, the following paragraph: "Their Majesties intend being at the opera in Covent-Garden to-night; and we hear the new opera will exceed any composition of Mr. Handel's hitherto performed." And in the middle of its run, another paragraph says: "Last night their Majesties and the Princess Amelia were at the opera of Alcina, which meets with great applause."

Carestini,

fine wrought gold snuff-box, richly set with diamonds and rubies, in which was inclosed a pair of brilliant diamond knee-buckles,

Carestini, immediately after the twentieth performance of Alcina set off for Venice, where he was engaged to sing the ensuing season.

The opera of Ariodante was originally written by Antonio Salvi, and set by Carlo Pollaroli, for Venice. The subject was taken from the sixth book of Ariosto, and was first performed under the title of Genevra.

The first movement of the overture to this opera, as set by Handel, is majestically pleasing; the fugue, upon a plain subject in triple time, is clear and spirited, but rigidly pursued without episode, or solo part for wind-instruments. The last movement is a very agreeable gavot, accented in a way that would admirably mark the steps of a dance.

The first act opens with a very pleasing air: Vezzi, lusinghe, with an original and gay accompaniment; it was sung by Strada, as was the next: Orrida agli occhj miei, which is a cavatina full of spirit and pleasing passages. The third air: Apri le luci, belongs to the second woman's part, Dalinda, which was performed by Miss Cecilia Young, who was afterwards the wife of Dr. Arne. This part seems to have been intended for another singer, as it is written in Handel's original score, for a contralto voice, and Mrs. Arne's was a high soprano. The air is elegantly simple and not more elaborate than a pleasing ballad. The next air: Coperta la frode, for the Negri, is not of a more exalted kind; but both have the stamp of a master upon them. After this, Carestini has a very beautiful pathetic cavatina: Quì d' amor, upon a very elegant and original plan: it is accompanied, alla moderna, in a clear and quiet manner by three violins, tenor, and base, which never disturb or divert the hearer's attention from the voice-part; in the short symphony, however, the first violin and violoncello are dialogued in a very pleasing and masterly manner; and during the song, the base buckles, as also a purse of one hundred guineas, to the famous Signor Farinelli, who had constantly attended all his Royal Highness's concerts since he came from Italy." They likewise have recorded, that he went to Scarborough in the summer with the Duke of Leeds; a nobleman after whom Farinelli made great enquiries when I saw him at Bologna in 1770.

is silent till there is an opportunity for its saying something interesting. This air is followed by a very graceful and pleasing duet, between the two principal characters of the drama: Del Fato piu inumano. The next air: Volate amori, was a kind of bravura in its day; but it has now lost its bloom, and is more wrinkled than any other movement in the opera. This is, however, followed by an admirable base song: Voli colla sua tromba; it was sung by Waltz, and accompanied by two French-horns, though the words called for a trumpet. This air deserves a better singer, for Waltz had but little voice, and his manner was coarse and unpleasant; but the rival theatre had not only robbed Handel of his base singer, Montagnana, but of his trumpet, SNOW, who had the brightest tone, and most accurate intonation, of any performer I ever heard on that instrument. The poet has given the composer but little variety of expression and imitation in the latter part of this act, for we have wings and flying, in almost every air. Con l'ali d'amore, the next air in Carestini's part, is a gay and pleasing bravura of a very modern cast, except in the divisions, which, as usual, have been more frequently used by younger composers than the rest. The subsequent air: Spero per voi, for the Negri, has great spirit and originality (a). The next is a slight air: Del mio sol, that was sung by Mr. Beard; but his part in this opera was certainly not originally composed for him, any more than that of Miss Young, as the first is written in the soprano clef, and the second in the contralto. After a beautiful pastoral symphony, a gay gavot: Se rinasci, sung in duo, by Carestini and Strada, and repeated in chorus, a ballate, terminates the first act.

The second is opened with a moonlight scene; and Handel seems, by a gentle and gradual ascent of two octaves in the principal melody, of a short, but beautiful symphony, to follow the mild luminary up to her "highest noon." As the first act, in the poetry, is monotonously happy, this is replete with scenes of wretchedness and misery. The first air: Tu preparati a morire, which was sung by Carestini, is full of rage, distrust, and passion. The second sung by Mr. Beard, Se l'inganno, seems well calculated for a singer and actor of spirit; the first bar in this air is frequently introduced in the accompaniments with great art, as a subject of fugue and imitation. Carestini has the next air: Scherza infida, which paints his growing jealousy, indignation, and despair; and is admirably accompanied by two violins and tenor, con sordini, a base, pizzicato, and a solo part for the bassoon. This is followed by a very agreeable Siciliana for the second woman: Se tanto piace. After which there is a light air: Se l'inganno, which was sung by the Negri; and another of a common cast, for Waltz. In Handel's score, this is followed by a plaintive and charming Siciliana in F minor, for a base voice: Invida sorte, for which I can find no words in the libretto. Strada had the next air: Mi palpita il core, which though short, is characteristic, and of a cast totally different from all the rest. Beard then had an air: Il tuo sangue, full of energy and fire, which probably, as this seems to have been his first winter on the stage, contributed to establish his reputation for songs of that kind. After this, Strada had a fine accompanied recitative, and a very plaintive air: Il mio crudel martoro, by which she is lulled to sleep; and during her trance, there is a dance, or entrée des songe agréables, the Music of which is sketched out in Handel's foul score, and with which the acts was terminated (b).

(a) In this air, Handel is more licentious in the use of discords, than usual, particularly the seventh with the ninth.

The third act opens with a grave and sorrowful cavatina: Numi! lasciarmi vivere, for Carestini; who, after a long recitative, has another air: Cieca notte, of a bold and original kind. The next air: Negbittosi, or voi, for the second woman, is extremely animated; as is that which follows it, in a different style: Dover, giustizia, for the second man. Strada after this, in the character of Geneva, has a short, but very pathetic and tender air of supplication to her offended father: Io ti bacio, o mano augusta. Then Waltz had a short air; after which, Strada had an impassioned air of two

(b) Handel has made a memorandum on the first page of his score, that he began to compose the opera, August 12th, 1734; dates

the end of the second act September 9th; and the final chorus October 24th.

chacune. Si morrò: it begins slow and ends quick; the second movement is very original and masterly. It has a Recitativo for the first of four violins, and for the violoncello. Then Carestini had a very agreeable aria di bravura of considerable agility, with a modern accompaniment: Dopo notte. After which, the second man and second woman had a light duet, chiefly in dialogue: Dite spera. The scene then changes to a dungeon, where Genevra, the heroine of the piece, is imprisoned; who, after a complaining recitative, begins a very pathetic air: Manca, oh Dei! but this is interrupted at the fourth bar by a gay symphony, which is an introduction to the happy denouement that has been long thought necessary to the termination of a musical drama; the two principal characters, Ariodante and Genevra, represented by Carestini and the Strada, have then a very pleasing duet: Bramo aver mille vite, upon a plan and subject totally different from any of Handel's other opera duets, that I can recollect. After this, a lively chorus and a dance, in which the celebrated Mademoiselle Sallé performed, completed the opera; which, though it has fewer capital and captivating airs than some of his preceding dramas, abounds with beauties and strokes of a great master.

The drama of ALCINA, taken from the sixth and seventh cantos of Orlando Furioso, was originally written by Ant. Marchi, and set for Venice, in 1725, by Tommaso Albinoni. As the Armida of Tasso is an imitation of the Enchantress of Ariosto, it may be said that the opera of Alcina has given birth to all the Armidas and Rinaldos of modern times.

Handel must have set this drama during the violence of his conflict with the rival theatre, while he was making head against his opponents, and conducting the performance of Ariodante and his oratorios; for he dates the end of his work April 8th, 1735, and it was brought on the stage the 16th of the same month; yet few of his productions have been more frequently performed, or more generally and deservedly admired, than this opera. In the examination of which I shall be the more exact, as some have imagined that Handel when he composed it, adopting the new taste which Vinci, Porpora, and Haffé had rendered fashionable in Italy, had changed his style, and beat them at their own weapons. But though several airs might be pointed out in which the more modern dramatic style seems to have been followed, yet the best and most favourite airs of the opera were certainly composed by Handel in his own manner, without leaning to that of others, either by accident or design. Indeed, the airs of this opera may be numbered and classed in the following manner: arie all' antica, or in Handel's own style, twenty-one; alla moderna, eight; antica e moderna, or of a mixed style, three (c).

The overture of Alcina has always been a favourite of the public. The first movement is dignified with Handel's genuine gravity and grandeur. The fugue is unusually spirited and active; and at the eighteenth bar, when there was danger that the close adherence to the subject and its numerous repetitions would tire the ear, a new under subject of a totally different cast, is introduced in the base, and, afterwards, in all the other parts, alternately, in a very happy and masterly manner. The musette and minuet were within the comprehension of all hearers, and long served as models of imitation to our playhouse composers (d).

The chorus of the first act: Questo è il cielo di contento, is set twice over in Handel's manuscript: first, in the same graceful and pleasing manner as it is printed; but in the second, he has made the admirable first movement of his fourth organ concerto, the ground-work and accompaniment of this chorus. Dì cor mio, Strada's first air, is extremely elegant and pleasing; and La bocca vaga, in Carestini's part, is full of grace, passion, and new effects.

(c) Of the first class are: Chi m' insegna; Di te mi rido; Semplicetto; Sì son quella; Tornami; Col celarvi; Pensa a chi; Vorrei vendicarmi; Ama, sospira; Mio bel tesoro; Tra speme; Ab mio cor; Verdi prati; Ombre pallide; Credete al mio; Un momento; Ma quando; All' alma fedel; Mi restano; the trio, Non è amor; and the coro finale. Of the second class: O s' apre al riso; the chorus, Questo è il cielo; La bocca vaga; Qual portento; Mi lusinga; E un folle; the accompanied recitative, Ab! ruggiero; Sta nell' Ircana. And of the third class: E gelosia; Dì cor mio; and Barbara, Io ben lo so.

(d) Particularly to the late Dr. Howard, in his overture of the Amorous Goddess.

Qual portento, is grand in the style, original in the accompaniment, and dramatic in its arrangement. Mi lusinga, is one of the most graceful and agreeable airs in all Handel's works; and Verdi prati is always a new and charming composition, whenever it is revived by a finger of sufficient abilities to do it justice. Ab! mio cor! has merit of various kinds, but is peculiarly original and masterly in the continued activity of the base, and tranquility of the accompaniments in the first part, and their spirit in the second. These six airs are mentioned as capital. And among the agreeable may be instanced: O s' apre riso; Credete al mio dolor; Un momento; Mi restano; and many more. Some may be praised for their uncommon spirit: as, E un folle; Stà nell' Ircana; Barbara, io ben lo so: and others for masterly composition: as, Ombre pallide, and the Trio. Upon the whole, if any one of Handel's dramatic works should be brought on the stage, entire, without a change or mixture of airs from his other operas, it seems as if this would well sustain such a revival (e).

Handel having lost his first man, Carestini, was unable to engage another capital performer to supply his place before the next year.

The King's theatre was opened by his Majesty's command, October 28th, with the opera of Polypheme, which had a new run of eight nights. As this drama was performed twenty-one times in the course of the year, I was curious to see what share of its success could be ascribed to the Music; and having been able to procure a copy of the favourite songs, printed by Walsh during its run, which are chiefly those that were sung by Farinelli, I shall speak of each as they affected me on examination. Of the five airs that were expressly composed for the talents of this great singer, the first was a mezza bravura, accompanied on the hautbois by the celebrated San Martini. Two such performers must have made a worse production interesting; but the composition now appears poor, and

(e) It is remarkable, that of the original singers in this opera, consisting of three Italian, three English, and one German, the three English, Mr. Beard, Mr. Savage, and

Mrs. Arne, are still living, though now (in 1788) fifty-three years have elapsed since its first performance.

the passages light and frivolous. The second air, which abounds with phrases manquées, has long notes in distant intervals, and brilliant divisions, to display the voice and execution of the performer. The third air which is a cantabile, has elegant passages, and seems well calculated to shew the taste and expression of a superior singer. The fourth air is languid, common, and uninteresting, on paper; how it was embellished and meliorated by the voice and pathetic powers of Farinelli, those can best imagine, who have been delighted with the performance of a great singer, in spite of bad Music. The fifth air is a bravura with innumerable unmeaning shakes, and divisions that are now become common and insipid.

November 25th, ADRIANO, a new opera composed by Veracini, was first represented by his Majesty's command. This opera, of which though the favourite songs were printed, the plates have been long lost, ran to the end of the year, having ten representations. At this time, though Handel was silent, there were six theatres open in London: the King's theatre or Opera-house, Drury-lane, Covent-Garden, Goodman's-Fields, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and the Little Theatre in the Hay-market.

1736. This year, like the last, was begun with a revival of Artaxerxes at the Opera-house, which was performed four times successively; after which, January 24th, a new opera called MIRTRIDATE, was brought on the stage, of which no composer is mentioned in the bills of the time, and the airs were never printed. It was probably a pasticcio, and as it had but four representations, we may suppose that its favour with the public was not very great. After this, February 7th, the performance of Veracini's Adriano was resumed, and repeated seven times.

While these were the transactions of the King's theatre, Handel, unable to muster a sufficient number of Italian singers for an opera, set Dryden's Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, in English, and had it performed at opera prices during the second run of Adriano at the rival theatre, under the title of ALEXANDER'S FEAST. The public expectations and effects of this performance seem to have been correspondent; for the next day we are told in the public papers(f) that "there was never was, upon the like occasion, so numerous and splendid an audience at any theatre in London, there being at least thirteen hundred persons present; and it is judged that the receipt of the house could not amount to less than £.450. It met with general applause, though attended with the inconvenience of having the performers placed at too great a distance from the audience, which we hear will be rectified the next time of performance." And this happened when Farinelli was employed at another theatre, supported by the principal nobility in the kingdom, and when Handel had no other capital singer in his service than Strada.

(f) London Daily Post, and General Advertiser, February 20th, 1736.

Alexander's Feast was performed once a week till March 24th, when it was changed for Acis and Galatea, which was repeated the 31st. Thus far no organ concerto is mentioned; but April 7th and 14th, when the oratorio of Esther was performed, Handel played two concertos each night.

At the King's theatre, March 2d, a new pasticcio called ORFEO was brought on the stage, the airs in which were chiefly selected from the works of Haffé, Vinci, Araja, and Porpora; this drama had thirteen representations. Farinelli had again Artaxerxes for his benefit, Saturday March 27th, with an addition of several new songs. The same opera was repeated, the Tuesday after, when the following notice was inserted at the bottom of the bills: "Whereas the repetition of songs adds considerably to the length of the opera, and has been often complained of, it is hoped no person will take it ill, if the singers do not comply with encores for the future." It was very natural for lovers of Music to wish for a repetition of the delight they received from so exquisite a singer as Farinelli, and as natural for those whose pleasure was small to think these repetitions tedious; but it seems as if both parties might have been satisfied, if an uninteresting song by a bad singer had been omitted for every one of a different kind that was encored (g).

(g) I know it will be said by those who love poetry better than Music, that this would ruin the drama; but as the business of the drama is chiefly transacted in the recitative, and as few people interest themselves in England about an Italian drama, the evil would not be insupportable.

After

After another performance of Artaxerxes, Orpheus was resumed, and continued in run till April the 13th; when another new opera, called HONORIUS, was brought out. But after one performance, it was withdrawn, and never represented again, as I have been able to discover.

Handel was still unable to mount the stage for want of auxiliaries; with which the public was made acquainted by the following paragraph in the newspapers, April 13th: "We hear that Signor Conti, who is esteemed the best singer in Italy, being sent for by Mr. Handel, is expected here in a few days."

After the failure of Honorius at the Opera-house, the managers had again recourse to Orpheus, April 17th, 29th, and May 1st.

At this time her Serene Highness the Princess of Saxe-Gotha, to whom his Royal Highness Frederic Prince of Wales had been affianced, was daily expected, and all the theatres were eager to manifest their zeal in the celebration of so great an event as the royal nuptials. The Princess landed at Greenwich, on Sunday April 25th, where her Highness continued on Monday to repose herself after the fatigues of her voyage; and on Tuesday the 27th the marriage was solemnised in the Chapel Royal, at St. James's. Operas had been advertised for this week at both the lyric theatres: Orfeo at the Hay-market for Tuesday, and Ariodante at Covent-Garden for Wednesday; but both were postponed on this important occasion. On Thursday, however, the opera of Orfeo was performed at the Hay-market, and honoured with the presence of their Majesties, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and all the royal family. On Saturday, the same opera was repeated, and again honoured with the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales; and on the Tuesday following, May 4th, a THEATRICAL FEAST was promised in honour of the royal nuptials (b).

(b) This was a drama written by Paolo Rolli, and set by Porpora on the occasion, entitled, The Feast of Hymen: Festa d'Imeneo, per le nozze reale di Federico Principe reale di Vallia e Principe Elettorale di Hanover, con la serenissima Principessa Augusta di Sax-Gotha. Farinelli sung in this drama, which was performed in the manner of an oratorio, with only one fixed scene, painted by Kent.

As yet there had been no opera at Covent-Garden ; but a paragraph in the daily papers informed the public, that Handel had composed an opera on the occasion of his Royal Highness's marriage ; but as the wedding had been solemnised sooner than was expected, great numbers of artificers, as painters, carpenters, engineers, &c. were employed to forward it with the utmost expedition ; and that several singers who had been sent for from Italy for that purpose were lately arrived, and would make their first appearance in the opera of Ariodante."

Opera-House.

On Tuesday, May 4th, Porpora's drama called the FEAST OF HYMEN was first performed. We are not told how it was received ; but if we may judge from the shortness of its existence, its constitution was not very robust ; for it only survived four representations. After which, Adrian was resumed, and represented four times ; which, with one performance of Artaxerxes and four of Orpheus, brought the season to a conclusion, June 22d.

Indeed, there are no memorials of the uncommon prosperity of this theatre at a time of such universal joy and festivity.

Covent-Garden.

On Wednesday, May 5th, Handel began his campaign with the revival of Ariodante, an opera of the preceding year.

The next day the following eulogium on his new singer was inserted in the Daily Post : "last night Signor GIOACHINO CONTI GIZZIELLO, who made his first appearance in the opera of Ariodante, met with an uncommon reception ; and in justice both to his voice and judgment, he may be truly esteemed one of the best performers in this kingdom." Neither his friends nor the friends of Handel could venture to say more, while Farinelli was in the kingdom. Conti was at this time a young singer, more of promising, than mature, abilities ; and so modest and diffident, that when he first heard Farinelli, at a private rehearsal, he he burst into tears, and fainted away with despondency. He had his cognomen of Gizziello from his master Gizzi, once an eminent stage singer, who, in his old age, became an excellent master. Gizziello after he quitted England studied with such diligence and success, that he turned the tables, by exciting envy in Farinelli, at Madrid, where he sung with uncommon applause in the operas under his direction. He was one of the constellation of great singers which the King of Portugal had assembled together in 1755 (i). And narrowly escaping with his life, during the earthquake which happened at Lisbon that year, he was impressed with such a religious turn by that tremendous calamity, that he retreated to a monastery, where he ended his days. It was soon after this event that Guadagni shut himself up in the same convent, not so much for spiritual consolation as musical counsel; which he so effectually obtained from the friendship of Gizziello, that from a young and wild singer of the second and third class, he became, in many respects, the first singer of his time.

After a second performance of Ariodante, May 7th, Handel brought out his opera of "ATLANTA, composed on occasion of an illustrious marriage." May 13th, the following paragraph appeared in the Daily Post: "Last night was performed at the theatre-royal Covent-Garden, for the first time, the opera of Atlanta, composed by Mr. Handel on the joyous occasion of the nuptials of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. In which was a new set of scenes painted in honour of the happy union, which took up the full length of the stage: the fore-part of the scene represented an avenue to the Temple of Hymen, adorned with statues of Heathen Deities. Next was a triumphal arch, on the summit of which were the arms of their Royal Highnesses. Under the arch was the figure of Fame on a cloud, sounding the praises of this happy pair. The names FREDERICUS and AUGUSTA appeared above in transparent characters. The opera concluded with a grand chorus, during which, several beautiful illuminations

(i) These were, according to Pacchierotti: Elisi, Manzoli, Caffarelli, Gizziello, Veroli, Babbi, Luciani, Raaf, Raina, and Guadagni.

were displayed. There were present, their Majesties, the Duke, and the four Princesses, accompanied with a very splendid audience, and the whole was received with universal acclamations (k). This opera continued in run till the end of the season; June the 2d, it was performed by command of the Queen, the Duke, and Princesses; and on the 9th, when the season closed, her Majesty likewise honoured it with her presence (l).

Proposals for printing the opera of Atalanta in score, by subscription, were published immediately after its first performance; and early in June it was ready to deliver to the subscribers, who amounted to about one hundred and eighty.

The overture of Atalanta is uncommonly gay and spirited, as the hilarity of the occasion required. The fugue, different from most of Handel's other overture fugues, which are often upon grave ecclesiastical subjects, is light and airy; and the trumpet part, intended to display the tone and abilities of Snow, who had returned to his orchestra, has fewer notes that are naturally and inevitably imperfect in the instrument, than common. The fourth of the key is, however, too much used even for vulgar ears to bear patiently (m). The gavot is marked, pleasing, and popular.

The singers in this opera were Signor Conti, usually called Gizziello, Signora Strada, Signora Maria Negri, with Messrs. Beard, Waltz, and Reinhold.

Conti's two first songs in the first act (n), seem to have been written to his new, graceful, and pathetic style of singing. Beard's first song: S'è tuo piacer, is extremely agreeable, and of a kind which not only pleased the age in which it was produced, but will always please, when well sung. Waltz's air: Impara ingrata, has in it many passages and strokes of a great master (o). The Negri's air: Come alla tortorella, is an elegant pastoral. Strada's first air: Al

(k) The royal bride and bridegroom were this evening at Drury-lane to see the tragedy of Cato, and the farce of Taste à la mode.

(l) The King set out for Germany this year the 22d of May.

(m) At the sixty-fourth and sixty-fifth bars, and the seventy-seventh, eightieth, and eighty-first, the G is intolerable. Indeed, whenever the fourth or sixth of the key is otherwise used than as a passing-note, the ear is offended.

(n) Care selve and Lascia, ch'io parta solo.

(o) Lampe has burlesqued a fine passage of this air in, Ob! Ob! master Moor, of the Dragon of Wantley, at the word before.

varco, is of a very peculiar cast ; it is as spirited and original as her next air : Ripertai gloriosa palma, is elegant, gay, and uncommon. The last air in the first act : Non saria poco, for Conti, contains many agreeable passages ; the base and accompaniments are of a modern cast, and, except the closes and two or three of the divisions, the whole seems of the present age.

The chorus which opens the second act : Oggi rimbombano, is gay and pleasing. Strada's first air : Lassa ! ch' io t' ho perduta ; and the subsequent duet : Amarilli ? oh, Dei ! are more in Handel's own early style than any of the movements in the first act. Conti's second air : Sì, mel ricorderò is likewise all' antica ; as is Beard's Di ad Irene. The air for Negri : Soffri ni pace is of the same ancient cast, but extremely agreeable ; and the accompaniment, all' ottava, was not common at that time, and has a very pleasing effect. Conti's air : M' allontano, is more modern ; and Strada's : Se nasce un rivoletto, is a pleasing minuet, but not very new. This air finishes the second act, which we find, by Handel's dates, was composed in five days (p).

The third act is opened with a short, but spirited and agreeable symphony. The first air : Ben ch' io non sappia, is new and ingenious, and so much the composer's own property, that it cannot be classed with any thing else, either ancient or modern. Beard's air : Diedi il core, is gay and pleasing ; but has a tiresome rosalia of a common passage. The Negri's air : Ben' io sento, is new, in an old style of jig. The next short air, or cavatina : Custodite, o dolci sogni, for Strada, with no other accompaniment than a violoncello, would have but little effect from an ordinary finger, but is a canevas for a great finger that would admit of fine colouring. The air Sol prova, for Reinhold, is not in Handel's usual bold style of base song ; by being more modern, it is more feeble. Or trionfar, is a much better air ; but that and another : Tu solcasti, which are in the original score, have not been printed. Of the first, indeed, (p) The last movement in the first act is dated April 9th, and that of the second April 14th. At the end of the third act, he has Fine dell' opera. G. F. H. April 22d, 1736.

the words do not appear in the libretto, any more than of the duet: Cara, nel tuo bel volto, which is an agreeable mixture of antica e moderna, or rather Corelli highly polished. The gavot in the last chorus, from its facility and familiar style, was long a national favourite.

Handel never till now had a first man to write for with so high a soprano voice. Nicolini, Senesino, and Carestini, were all contraltos. There was often dignity and spirit in their style; but Conti had delicacy and tenderness, with the accumulated refinements of near thirty years, from the time of Handel's first tour to Italy. I think it is not difficult to discover, particularly in the first act, that in composing Conti's part in this opera, he modelled his melody to the school of his new singer. Indeed, Handel was always remarkably judicious in writing to the taste and talents of his performers; in displaying excellence, and covering imperfections.

Very soon after the two opera-houses were shut up, the public was informed, by a paragraph in the daily papers, that "several persons were sent to Italy from the two theatres, to engage additional voices for carrying on the operas next season: and that Signor Domenichino, one of the best singers in Italy, was engaged by Mr. Handel, and expected over in a short time."

It appears that Farinelli, during the summer of this year, made an excursion to France, as an article from Paris in the Daily Post of September 13th informs us, that "his most Christian Majesty had lately made a present to that celebrated performer of his picture set in diamonds."

Strada likewise made a tour to the continent; as the same paper, October 5th, says, that "last night the famous Signora Strada arrived from Holland, expressly to sing next Thursday in a concert of Music at the Swan Tavern, in Exchange-alley." The arrival of Signor Domenico Anibali, "a famous singer from the court of Saxony, engaged for Mr. Handel's operas," was likewise announced the same day. And soon after, it was said that this performer had been sent for to Kensington, "when he had the honour to sing several songs before her Majesty and the Princesses, who expressed the highest satisfaction at his excellent voice, and the judicious manner of his performance."

These paragraphs seem chiefly to favour Handel; but November 18th, the Daily Post informs us, that "Signora Merighi, Signora Chimenti, and the Francesina (three singers lately come from Italy for the Royal Academy of Music), had the honour to sing before her Majesty, the duke, and princesses, at Kensington, on Monday night last, and met with a most gracious reception; and her Majesty was pleased to approve their several performances: after which the Francesina performed several dances to the entire satisfaction of the court."

Handel, however, this season, got the start of his opponents, and opened his theatre more than three weeks before them. The Opera-house was repairing, and not ready for use till late in November; and on the first of that month a paragraph tells us, that their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales intended to honour Mr. Handel with their presence on Saturday next at the opera of Alcina: "which is the reason for performing operas earlier in the season than intended." And accordingly on the 6th of November, this opera was revived and performed by command of their Royal Highnesses, "to a numerous and splendid audience." On the 10th and 13th, this opera was repeated; and on the 20th, Atalanta was revived in honour of the Princess of Wales's birthday, at the end of which were exhibited on the stage "several fine devices in fire-works, proper to the occasion." Their Royal Highnesses were present at this performance; which was repeated the 27th. The opera of Porus was to have been revived by command of the Prince and Princess of Wales, December 1st, when Anibali was to have made his first appearance; but Strada having been taken ill of a fever and sore throat, the company was dismissed and the performance postponed till the 8th, when it was honoured with her Majesty's presence. This opera, which had now five representations, continued in run till January of the next year. Of the voice and abilities of the new singer, Domenico Anibali, we shall be better able to speak in reviewing an opera in which a part was expressly composed for him, as it is probable that the songs which were assigned to him in Porus, had been originally written for Senefino.

The other lyric theatre began the season November 23d with a new opera called SIROE, composed by Signor Haffé. This is the first time that I ever perceived the composer of an opera named in the advertisements and bills of the day. In all probability it was now thought of consequence to mention Haffé, whose reputation was very high at this time in all parts of Europe, otherwise the opera would have been thought the production of Porpora.

The favourite songs of this opera were published by Walsh during its first run, and I have them now before me. They were certainly written in the best taste of the times. There is not, indeed, the bold and vigorous invention, the richness of harmony, or ingenuity of accompaniment, which abound in the operas of Handel; but with respect to clearness, grace, and elegance, there is infinite merit in these early songs of Haffé. The first air that was printed in Siroe: Gelido in ogni vena, which was sung by Tolve, an obscure singer, has a beautiful continued accompaniment in triplets, to a melody that is grand and dramatic; and the closes to this and the subsequent airs are, in general, such as were then new, and which are still in use. Ghimenti, the first woman, this year, had a very pleasing air, in the simple and elegant style of Vinci: Sorger' benigna. Farinelli had another of the same kind, with a little more execution: Deh se piacer; and an aria di bravura: Parto con l'alma in pene, of which the most extraordinary passages will be exhibited on the next plates, filled with his peculiar difficulties of execution.

1737. After eight representations of this opera, in November and December, it was reinforced January 1st by an intermezzo, or comic interlude, called IL GIOCATORE, the first of the kind which was ever introduced between the acts of an Italian opera in England (q). This opera and intermezzo were repeated January 4th

(q) Her Majesty, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the duke, and all the princesses were at this opera the first night the Giocatore was performed; the King did not return

4th at the King's theatre; and on the 5th, Handel's Porus was performed at Covent-garden. On the 8th, MEROPE, a new opera, was first performed at the King's theatre; and on the 12th, ARMINIO, entirely new set by Handel, was brought out at Covent-garden (r). These two dramas were run against each other for upwards of three weeks; but neither of them seem to have been very successful: for on the third night of Merope it was thought necessary to tack to it the intermezzo of the Giocatore; and on the sixth and seventh the two last of its representations, a new interlude, called POURCEAUGNAC AND GRILETTA; and, after five representations of Arminio, Handel was forced to discontinue its performance and revive Parthenope.

The composition of Arminio was finished October 3d, 1736, though it was not performed till the January following. The beginning of the first movement of the overture is very beautiful, from the happy and masterly use that is made of the moto contrario, or contrary motion of the parts. The fugue is written upon a curious subject in triple time, which none but a veteran in that kind of writing would have ventured to treat. The minuet, indeed, is not very striking, and the whole overture, perhaps for that reason, was never in high favour.

The singers in this opera were Conti, Annibale, Strada, Bertolli, Maria Negri, Beard, and Reinhold.

In examining Handel's score of this opera, though there are but few captivating airs, and none that I remember to have been revived in modern times, yet fine things frequently occur which catch the eye, and manifest the great master. There is much art in the composition of Strada's air in the first act: Scagliano amore. Annibale's first air: Al par della mia sorte, discovers his voice to have been a counter-tenor, which Handel gave him an opportunity of displaying by a mezza di voce, or swell, at the beginning; but no pe-turn from his German dominions till the middle of January, having been detained at Helvoetsluis upwards of five weeks by contrary winds.

(r) This drama had been performed on our stage to other Music, 1714. The Prince and Princess of Wales honoured Handel's opera with their presence the first night of its performance.

culiar

culiar taste, expression, or powers of execution, appear in his part; his bravura air in the second act: Sì cadrò, contains only common and easy passages. His abilities during his stay in England seem to have made no deep impression, as I never remember him to have been mentioned by those who constantly attended the operas of those times, and were rapturists in speaking of the pleasure they had received from singers of the first class. The cavatina: Durilacci, which he had in the second act, is in a fine style of pathetic. The bravura for Conti: Quella fiamma, in the same act, and which was accompanied on the hautbois, by Martini, though spirited, contains but few passages worthy of such a singer, or such a player. Vado a morir, is a very fine slow air in Annibali's part, that is written in Handel's most solemn and best style. The next air, for Strada: Rendimi il dolce sposo, is an elegant and original strain, alla Siciliana. Annibali's accompanied recitative, in the third act: Fier teatro di morti; and the air: Ritorno alle ritorte, are in a grand and dramatic style. Và, combatti, for Strada, has original passages and peculiar difficulties of execution.

Upon the whole, it seems as if Handel had more bases and accompaniments in iterated notes, in this opera, than in any preceding work. He was advancing rapidly in the modern style of opera songs, when he quitted the stage, and retreated back to a more solemn and solid style for the church. It is chiefly in writing for Conti and Annibali that the conformity to a different style from his own appears. Strada was a singer formed by himself, and modelled on his own melodies. She came hither a coarse and awkward singer with improvable talents, and he at last polished her into reputation and favour. For which her husband, Del Pò, was the most ready to serve him—with a writ, when his affairs were deranged by opposition and misfortune (s). For Beard, Reinhold, and the Negri, he still adhered to his own early style.

A subscription was opened for printing the whole opera of Arminio, in score, at half a guinea, the second day of performance. The list of subscribers was published with the book, which did not amount to one hundred and fifty. But the being able to publish so many of his works in score, while those of his rivals were suffered to die in silence, after a short existence, manifests the different degree of respect in which Handel's compositions were held by the public (t).

(s) See Sketch of his Life.

The attractions of Merope and Arminio being found insufficient to draw company to the lyric theatres, while new operas were preparing to supersede them, Siroe had three representations at the Hay-market, and Parthenope as many at Covent-garden.

February 12th, the opera of DEMETRIO, by Pescetti, was first performed at the King's theatre, with the comic interlude called Il Giocatore; and on the 16th, at Covent-garden, a new opera set by Handel, called GIUSTINO, or JUSTIN. These two operas were run against each other till Lent; when Handel, probably to counteract or shun the centripetal force of Farinelli's attraction, gave notice at the bottom of the opera bills, that "the days of performance during Lent would be on Wednesdays and Fridays." But it seems as if a prohibition from the Lord Chamberlain, or the legislature, had obliged him to relinquish this idea: for on Friday, March 11th, the editor of the London Daily Post says "we hear since operas have been forbid being performed at the theatre in Covent-garden on the Wednesdays and Fridays in Lent, Mr. Handel is preparing Dryden's Ode of Alexander's Feast, the oratorios of Esther and Deborah, with several new concertos for the organ and other instruments; also a new entertainment of Music called Il Trionfo del Tempo, e della Verita, which performances will be brought on the stage and varied every week (u)."

(t) The favourite songs in Adriano by Veracini and Orfeo by Haffé, were, indeed, published by Walsh; but the plates have been long lost, and none of them were thought worth inserting in Le delizie dell'opera. Mitridate, Onorio, La Festa d'Imeneo, Merope, Tito, and Demofonte, in all which Farinelli performed, were never published, as I have been able to discover either from Walsh's catalogues or the newspapers of the times. In 1738, when the subscription to Faramond was closed, Walsh advertised it with seventeen other Italian operas of Handel, which had been published in score.

(s) His Majesty is in possession of Handel's original score of this work, composed while he was at Naples in 1710.

From

From this period may be dated the custom to which Handel afterwards adhered, of performing oratorios only on Wednesdays and Fridays during Lent, not merely on account of their gravity and fitness for that holy time, but to avail himself of the suspension of all other public amusements which were likely to divide the public attention and favour.

It appears from the newspapers of the time, that, besides five Wednesdays and Fridays at the beginning of Lent, Handel was allowed to perform oratorios on the four first days of Passion-week: for on Monday, April the 4th, was advertised Il Trionfo del Tempo; Tuesday the 5th, Alexander's Feast; and on Wednesday the 6th, and Thursday the 7th, the oratorio of Esther.

It does not appear that their Majesties went either to a play or an opera during this whole season, probably on account of the bad state of the Queen's health; but their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales very frequently honoured Handel's oratorios with their presence.

The favourite songs in Pescetti's opera of Demetrio, which had fourteen representations, were printed by Walsh. The air: Non so frena, which was sung by Farinelli, is in good taste still. This composer, who was a Venetian and scholar of Lotti, though he never had much fire or fertility of invention, was a very elegant and judicious writer for the voice. His melodies are extremely simple and graceful. He was in strict friendship with several of the greatest singers of his time, particularly Manzoli, who was so partial to his natural easy style, that it was with reluctance he sung any other Music (x).

(x) Pescetti came to England this year, to supply the place of Porpora, and remained here a considerable time. In 1739, he published a book of harpsichord lessons, which he dedicated to the Hon. Miss Boyle, daughter of the Lord Viscount Shannon; it consists of nine sonatas, with the overture Nel vello d'oro, adapted to the harpsichord for a tenth; and some ariette nell'opere sue. There are several flimsy fugues on common subjects, and the overture is a feeble imitation of Handel's style. There are, however, some agreeable movements among the lessons; but they could afford but little pleasure, at that time, to those who had been accustomed to the rich harmony and contrivance of Handel. Pescetti quitted England about the year 1740, and we heard but little about him, till the arrival of Manzoli, whose three favourite airs in the opera of Ezio: Recagli quell'acciaro; Caro mio bene addio; and Mi dona mi rendi, by Pescetti, all in different styles, are still remembered with pleasure.

Handel's

Handel's opera of Justin, which started with Demetrio, having been stopt in Lent, after the fifth representation, was not resumed till the month of May, when the oratorios were over, and then was performed but twice more, yet this opera has too much merit to be passed over in silence. I shall therefore, from a perusal of the original score, speak of it in the same discriminate manner as of his preceding dramas.

The overture of Justin may be numbered among the most agreeable of Handel's dramatic symphonies. The first movement, though shorter than usual, is not deficient in dignity or spirit; and the fugue, upon a natural and lively subject, is admirably worked; nor is the last movement, in a gavot style, inferior to any overture finale of that kind.

The singers in this opera were the same as in Arminio. The poem was written originally for Venice by the Count Nicolo Berregani, and had been set by Legrenzi, and afterwards by Tommaso Albinoni.

The first act opens with a short gay chorus. Conti sung the first air: Un vostro sguardo, which is very pleasing, alla moderna. The first close in this air was soon after copied by Arne in his popular song of Rule Britannia, in Alfred. The next air: Da tuoi begl'occhi, for Strada, is graceful and charming; a passage in this air was long after imitated by Perez. Può ben nascere, for Annibali, is a very pleasing cavatina, in Handel's first manner. Bel ristoro, an invocation to sleep, for the same singer, is excellent. Corri, vola, preceded by a long symphony, and terminated by a chorus, has great spirit, and is in Handel's most nervous style. The accompanied recitative: Cbi mi chiama, and the subsequent air: Se parla, for the contralto Annibali, are dramatic and full of fire. Nacque al bosco, for the second woman, Bertolli, is a very graceful and pleasing air of a very modern cast. Handel had at first set these words in a different but less pleasing manner, as appears by his foul score, where the first sketch is cancelled. E virtute, is a base song, in jig time, but not in Handel's best style. Allor ch' io forte, is a capital air in nine parts, with pleasing solo passages and echoes for the French-horn and hautbois. Conti's next air: Non si vanti, is of two characters: the first, graceful and ingeniously accompanied; the second, passionate and accompanied in a modern style. All' armi, is a cavatina of a bold and military cast, for Mr. Beard. Vanni, sì, is another spirited air for the same singer (y). In the last air of the first act: Mio dolce amato sposo, which is extremely pathetic, Handel has made a very new and curious use of chromatic intervals.

The second act opens with a storm and ship-wreck, during which a spirited symphony is played, which is good composition, but not picturesque. This is followed by a short but lively base song, for Reinhold: Ritrova bellezza. In the third scene of this act, fragments of a plaintive air are repeated by an echo; after which, while Justin engages and slays a sea-monster, a most animated and descriptive symphony is played. This is followed by a duet: Mia bel tesoro, which would have been very graceful and pleasing, if the first bar had not been so often repeated. After this there is a short and gay chorus of mariners: Per voi soave. The next is a cavatina for the Negri: Sventurata navicella, of a very lively and modern cast. The subsequent air: Verdi lauri, though now a little passée, is full of Handel's native fire and spirit. This is followed by an air for Annibali: Sull' altar, in a very grand and masterly style. The last air in the act: Quel torrente, seems written for the display of Strada's powers of execution, with a quiet accompaniment, alla moderna.

The first air in the third act, for Conti: O fiero e rio sospetto, is a very beautiful Siciliana. A spirited symphony, and an air for Mr. Beard: Il piacer, in which though some of the passages have been since in very common use, there are very strong marks of Handel's bold and original genius. The next air, for Conti: Zeffiretto, is an admirable cantabile, in a very modern style of pathetic; as the next air: Re sdegnato, is of spirit and passion. And these are still followed by an exquisite air: Il mio cor, for Strada, in such an elegant and masterly style of composition as was but little known in any part of Europe at this time. The base of the next air: Augelletti, reminds us a little of that to the celebrated jig in Corelli's fifth solo. The next short air: Dell' occaso, has Handel's stamp upon it, particularly in the base. There are besides two or three fragments of fine accompanied recitative, and several pleasing airs in this last act: as, Sollevar il mondo, for Annibali, which is very modern; Or che cinto, for Reinhold; Ti rendo questo cor, for Strada; and the finale: In braccio a te la calma, which is a charming quintetto, that terminates in a chorus. Upon the whole, this opera, so seldom acted and so little known, seems to me one of the most agreeable of Handel's dramatic productions.

(y) Arne took a favourite passage from the noon-tide air, in Comus, at the words, this song, when he set "Would you taste to love's alarms."

It is said in the newspapers of the time, that their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales were at the sixth representation of the opera of Justin, at which time "it was performed to a splendid audience." When this was discontinued, Handel revived Parnasso in Festa, March the 9th, as an oratorio, "with concertos on several instruments (z)." This was performed three times; Alexander's Feast twice; and, March 23d, IL TRIONFO DEL TEMPO, E DELLA VERITA, by command of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. It is called "a new oratorio, with concertos on the organ and other instruments(a)." It was repeated the 25th, and, according to the newspapers, "to a crowded audience." Alexander's Feast was performed again, March 30th, and oratorios April 1st, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th, the last four being in Passion-week.

On Wednesday the 13th of April was performed for the first time, at Covent-garden, by Handel's fingers and band, a new opera called Dido, concerning the Music of which I am unable to give any account. The songs were never printed, and no record remains of the existence of this opera but the advertisements of its

(z) These were Handel's grand concertos, which were now printing by subscription at two guineas the twelve, and of which during this and the next season, besides Handel's organ concertos, two were generally played between the several parts of his oratorios.

(a) This oratorio to Italian words was first set by Handel at Naples, 1710. His Majesty is in possession of the score in its original form.

performance, by which it cannot be discovered whether it was an entire work, by one composer, or a pasticcio by many composers; perhaps this opera was brought out during Handel's illness, for after three representations, at the distance of a week from each other, April 30th was inserted the following paragraph in the London Daily Post: "Mr. Handel, who has been some time indisposed with the rheumatism, is in so far a way of recovery, that it is hoped he will be able to accompany the opera of Justin on Wednesday next, the 4th of May; at which time we hear their Majesties will honour that opera with their presence." Justin was performed that day, and on the 11th; but it does not appear that their Majesties were there. However, May 18th the King, Queen, and all the royal family were present at the first performance of a new opera set by Handel, called BERENICE. This was the last drama which Handel composed for a set of singers in his own service, and the last in which Conti, better known afterwards by the name of Gizziello, and the Strada, sung for him (b).

The first movement of the overture is peculiarly majestic and masterly. The subject, led off by the first violin, and regularly answered by the tenor, second violin, and base, is spirited and pleasing; but the modulation in the fourth bar, by the D flat in the base, is remarkably striking and unexpected. The fugue, on a lively subject, is closely pursued without episode, or solo parts for wind-instruments, from the beginning to the end. But the slow air, in triple time, is one of the most graceful and pleasing movements that has ever been composed. The two violins are in unison; but the harmony between them, the tenor, and base, is purity itself; and the imitation between the treble and base, at the ninth bar of the second part, is happy and pleasing to an uncommon degree. Of the final jig, I shall say nothing, but that I am sorry it was ever composed and printed, as it is totally unnecessary, and unworthy of the rest of the overture.

The first air: Nò, che servire, sung by Strada, is in a very un-

(b) According to memorandums made by Handel himself in his original score, this opera was composed in a month, being begun December 18th, 1736, and finished the 18th of January, 1737.

common style, and supported and accompanied with spirit and ingenuity. In the second air: Vedi l' ape, which is very gay and pleasing, he has endeavoured to express in the accompaniment the restless state of the bee, who flies from flower to flower in search of fresh sweets. The next air: Che sarà, which was composed for Conti, has many pretty passages in it of a modern cast, and an accompaniment that is extremely gay and pleasing:

This passage was afterwards transplanted into the symphony of Sweet bird. There is a leap of a 9th in the voice-part of this song of which the design or beauty is not easy to discover:

 Musical notation showing a large interval leap in the voice part. It is a single staff in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 2/4 time signature. The melody starts on a low note and leaps to a high note, illustrating the 'leap of a 9th' mentioned in the text.

After this, An-

Se mentre disprezza al - let - ta così

nibali had an air: Nò, soffrir non può, in a fine style of cantabile; which is followed by a dramatic air for Bertolli, in a very different style: Gelo, avampo. The next: Con gli strali d' amor, is of no great importance (c); but it is followed by an air for Strada: Dice amor, full of grace and gaiety. The next air: Senza nudrice, for the Negri, has pleasing passages in it; but Handel, who was seldom licentious, sometimes tries experiments. In the third bar of the symphony to this song, for instance, there is a passage which is awkward to the hand, and unpleasant to the ear. Conti, after this, has an air: Quell' ogetto, of a pleasing cast; in the second part of which an ingenious use is made of the moto contrario, which, in modern times, has been often practised as a new contrivance. The next movement, which terminates the first act, is a very fine duet, for a soprano and contralto: Se il mio amor, in which there is an agreeable mixture of ancient and modern styles (d).

(c) The most remarkable thing belonging to this air is, that it begins on the sixth of the key:

(d) Fine dell' atto primo, December 27th, 1736.

The

The second act begins with a very beautiful cavatina, for Annibali: Se non ho l' idol mio, calculated to display a fine counter-tenor voice. Mr. Beard after this had a spirited air: Guerra e pace, in a style which now appears somewhat antique, but with Handel's science and force, it will always have its merit. The subsequent air for Strada; Sempre dolce, has a mixture of tenderness and spirit that is extremely agreeable. The next whole scene is rendered interesting by an accompanied recitative, and an air: Su megera, which, though it abounds with divisions and passages that now seem old-fashioned, has others which will always appear new, and mark the great master, particularly the use that is made in the symphony and accompaniment of a single semiquaver. This is followed by an aria di cantabile, for Conti, without a second part, in an exquisite style of pathetic: Mio bel sol; in which there is not a passage that has suffered by time or fluctuations in taste. The next air: La bella mano, for the same singer, though of an inferior kind, is not without its beauties. But the spirited air which was given to Annibali, in the next scene: Amore contro amor, has perhaps the most elegant and new symphony and accompaniment, that can be found in any opera song of that period. The next: Senza te, is a slight base song; and the subsequent air: Traditore, is not very striking as a single air, though set with great propriety for the drama. After this, there is an air: Sì, tra i ceppi, of which the composition is excellent, in point of harmony and contrivance; but it is in a dry and laboured style, which has been long since banished from the opera, as undramatic. The next air, however: Si poco è forte, which is the last in the act, has so much originality, that I can scarce recollect any thing like it, elsewhere, except in Eman. Bach's second set of sonatas printed by Walsh. But the measure, $\frac{9}{8}$ which renders the melody and accents so singular, has not precluded grace, and pleasing effects. The second part of this air is impassioned, and of a different measure and character from the first, with accompaniments, alla moderna (c).

The third act opens with a bold and spirited symphony for three violins, tenor, and base, in which the five parts are very busy and the harmony very full. The first air: Per fi bella cagion, for Annibali, in which the parts begin in unisons and octaves, is admirably written in Handel's early and masterly manner. The second air: Cbi t' intende, for Strada, is a very elaborate and fine composition, with a solo part for the hautbois. This air is of two characters: it begins slow, ad libitum, then changes to an allegro, and has frequent changes of measure throughout. This seems the principal aria d' abilità of the heroine of the drama. It is followed by a very pathetic air, for Bertolli: Tortorella, che rimira, in which Handel has an ingenious imitation, in the symphony and accompaniment, of the cooing of the dove. The next air: Questa qual sia, for the same counter-tenor voice, is graceful and pleasing. After this, there is a kind of duet, in dialogue: Le dirai, to a natural air in gavot time; which is followed by a very beautiful and pathetic Siciliana, for Conti: In quella sola. After this, there is an animated processional symphony; which is followed by a very graceful and pleasing duet: Quel bel labbro, for the two principal singers. Then there is a very gay and pleasing air: Le vicende della sorte, for Annibali, which, with the final chorus, terminates the opera (f). A production, which, with all its excellence, was represented but four times. After which, with the performance of Dido, Alcina, Justin, and, by command of the Prince and Princess of Wales, Alexander's Feast, Handel concluded his season, June 25th.

(c) Handel's date of the second act is, London, fine dell' atto secondo, Jan. 7th, 1736, but he must mean O. S.

His antagonists at the Opera-house were not able to keep the field so long. After thirteen representations of Demetrio, with in-

(A) In the original score is the following memorandum, by the composer:

Fine dell' Opera Berenice
G. F. Handel January 18. 1737.
ausp. fillm grunzig & Co. 27 January 1737.

termezzos,

termezzoes, TITO, a new opera, was brought out, which lived but four nights. Then, as the last effort, April 26th, another new opera was announced by the following pompous paragraph in the newspapers: "Signor Rolli's new opera called SABRINA, was rehearsed yesterday in Mr. Heidegger's apartments. The Signora Marchesini, lately arrived from Italy, performed in it with universal approbation; and we hear that their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princesses of Wales, to whom she sung on last Friday night at court, intend to honour the entertainment with their presence this evening at the theatre-royal in the Hay-market. The Signora Marchesini's songs are distributed after such a judicious manner, by the ingenious author, so as to rise gradually upon the audience in each act."

Notwithstanding all these advantages, the town was so blind and deaf to its own interest, that after the third night, it was found necessary to tack an intermezzo constantly to the performance of this opera; and even with that additional lure, according to Colly Cibber, it was at this that Farinelli sometimes sung to an audience of five and thirty pounds (g).

May 24th, another opera, DEMOFOONTE, was performed, and advertised for the 28th, but put off, on account of Farinelli's indisposition. He sung, however, in Sabrina on the 31st; and on the 6th of June he was said, in the papers, to be "perfectly well, and able to sing in the same opera on the 7th, when their Majesties and the rest of the royal family would be present." It appears that Sabrina was performed that night, but none of the royal family seem to have been there. On the 11th, Farinelli sung in this opera for the last time, though it was advertised for the 14th, but the performance was put off on account of Farinelli being indisposed with a cold, and never again advertised. With so little eclat did this great singer quit the English stage, that the town seems rather to have left him, than he the town! Indeed, May 21st, before he had done singing here, the following paragraph appeared in the newspapers: "We hear that the directors of his Majesty's (g) See Apology, published 1739, where, chapter twelfth, p. 342, he says, "there is always such a rage for novelty at the opera, that, within these two years, we have seen even Farinelli sing to an audience of five and thirty pounds."

Opera-house in the Hay-market, have engaged for the ensuing season, the famous Caffariello, reputed to be the best singer in Italy." This was probably inserted merely to accelerate the contract with Farinelli, for the ensuing season; for though Caffarelli did come to England the next year, it was to sing for Handel, not the nobility; and Farinelli himself assured me, in 1770, that before his quitting England in 1737, he had entered into articles with the nobility to perform in England the next season.

It seems to be with musical effects as with medicinal, which are enfeebled and diminished by frequent use. Indeed, such execution as many of Farinelli's songs contain, and which excited such astonishment in 1734, would be hardly thought sufficiently brilliant in 1788 for a third-rate singer at the opera. The dose of difficulties to produce the same effects as fifty years ago, must be more than doubled. But every excellence in Music when it has been pursued to excess, is thrown aside to lie fallow till forgotten; and after a series of years, like a fashion in apparel, it is started again, as a new invention. Great powers of execution depend on the natural voice and peculiar talents of a singer; the exertion and use of those powers, on the state of composition at the time. If sobriety and simplicity reign, no great exertions will be allowed, however capable the singer may be of performing extraordinary feats; but if refinement, subtilty, high notes, or rapid divisions are the mode, the singer must not then submit to the limits of nature and facility, but must torment himself day and night in attempting impossibilities, or he will be heard with as much indifference as a ballad-singer in the streets.

At this time, however, the rage for operas seems to have been very much diminished in our country, in spite of good composition and exquisite performance. But man tires of dainties sooner than of common food, to which he returns with pleasure after surfeits. The English appetite for Italian friandises was certainly palled by plenitude. It is in vain to ascribe the ruin of operas to faction, opposition, and enmity to Handel; the fact was, that public curiosity being satisfied, as to new compositions and singers, the English returned to their homely food, the Beggar's Opera, and ballad farces on the same plan, with eagerness and comfort (b).

Farinelli seems to have quitted London this summer à la four-dine; for after the opera of Sabrina was said to be put off on account of his indisposition, (which was construed into doubts whether his reputation would not have been injured by the thinness of the house), without any reason or apology appearing for a future day not having been named for the performance of this opera, the public was told, July the 7th, that "Sig. Farinelli, the famous Italian singer, who had been at Paris for a considerable time, was setting out for Spain, where he designed to continue till the close of the year, and then return to England." However, September 26th, the following paragraph in the London Daily Post, must have bereaved his English admirers of all hope of his return. "Advices from Madrid," says the editor, "inform us, that his Catholic Majesty has settled a pension of 14,000 pieces of eight on Signor Farinelli, to engage him to stay at that court, besides a coach, which the King will keep for him at his own charge. This," adds the news-writer, "is important intelligence for the Hay-market."

Though English fortitude and philosophy were proof against his enchantments, the inhabitants of every other part of Europe heard him with extasy: he had excited rapture in all the great cities of Italy, before he quitted that country; in the three several times he had been at Vienna, his favour with the emperor and the whole court was greater the last time than the first; and, according to Riccoboni, even at Paris, where Italian Music was detested, his voice, at least, had occasioned the highest pleasure and astonishment; but in Spain, his performance was thought too exquisite for

(b) The same neglect of musical merit and talents is now on the point of happening again in this country; where the public is so much familiarised to excellence of composition and performance, that in a short time nothing will be good enough for their depraved appetites, which already occasion yawning and apathy during the most exquisite musical feasts that the art of man has ever been able to furnish. Nothing but the miraculous powers of an unheard-of band, and the uncommon expence and difficulty of admission has awakened attention to Handel's Music, which was neglected during his life-time, and laid aside as lumber after his death, till taken up by a zealous and persevering party, and honoured in a singular manner with royal patronage.

subjects;

subjects; it was instantly appropriated to royalty; and the proofs of admiration which his talents acquired in that court were too solid not to be sincere. A pension of more than £. 3000 sterling a year was settled upon him for life. He was honoured with the order of St. Iago by his first royal master, Philip V. and with that of Calatrava by his successor, Ferdinand VI. Of the manner in which he spent his time in Spain, some account has been given, from his own mouth, in a former work (i). The lovers of anecdotes might, indeed, be gratified with innumerable particulars concerning the effects of his amazing talents, if anecdotes were not below the dignity of history. One or two, however, that do honour to his heart and natural disposition as well as vocal powers, my graver and more critical readers will, perhaps, excuse.

It has been often related, and generally believed, that Philip V. King of Spain, being seized with a total dejection of spirits, which made him refuse to be shaved, and rendered him incapable of attending council or transacting affairs of state, the Queen, who had in vain tried every common expedient that was likely to contribute to his recovery, determined that an experiment should be made of the effects of Music upon the King her husband, who was extremely sensible to its charms. Upon the arrival of Farinelli, of whose extraordinary performance an account had been transmitted to Madrid from several parts of Europe, but particularly from Paris, her Majesty contrived that there should be a concert in a room adjoining to the King's apartment, in which this singer performed one of his most captivating songs. Philip appeared at first surprised, then moved; and at the end of the second air, made the virtuoso enter the royal apartment, loading him with compliments and caresses; asked him how he could sufficiently reward such talents; assuring him that he could refuse him nothing. Farinelli, previously instructed, only begged that his Majesty would permit his attendants to shave and dress him, and that he would endeavour to appear in council as usual. From this time the King's disease gave way to medicine: and the singer had all the honour of the cure.

(i) Present State of Music in France and Italy, p. 213 et seq.

By singing to his Majesty every evening, his favour increased to such a degree that he was regarded as first minister; but what is still more extraordinary, instead of being intoxicated or giddy with his elevation, Farinelli never forgetting that he was a musician, behaved to the Spanish nobles about the court with such humility and propriety, that instead of envying his favour, they honoured him with their esteem and confidence.

One day in going to the King's closet, to which he had at all times access, he heard an officer of the guard curse him, and say to another that was in waiting "honours can be heaped on such scoundrels as these, while a poor soldier, like myself, after thirty years service, is unnoticed." Farinelli, without seeming to hear this reproach, complained to the King that he had neglected an old servant, and procured a regiment for the person who had spoken so harshly of him in the anti-chamber; and in quitting his Majesty he gave the commission to the officer, telling him that he had heard him complain of having served thirty years, but added, "you did wrong to accuse the King of neglecting to reward your zeal."

The following story, which is less serious, was frequently told and believed at Madrid, during the first year of Farinelli's residence in Spain. This singer having ordered a superb suit of cloaths for a Gala at court, when the taylor brought it home, he asked him for his bill. "I have made no bill, Sir, says the taylor, nor ever shall make one. Instead of money," continues he, "I have a favour to beg. I know that what I want is inestimable, and only fit for monarchs; but since I have had the honour to work for a person of whom every one speaks with rapture, all the payment I shall ever require will be a song." Farinelli tried in vain to prevail on the taylor to take his money. At length, after a long debate, giving way to the humble entreaties of the trembling tradesman, and flattered perhaps more by the singularity of the adventure than by all the applause he had hitherto received, he took him into his music-room, and sung to him some of his most brilliant airs, taking pleasure in the astonishment of his ravished hearer; and the more he seemed surprised and affected, the more Farinelli exerted himself:

in

in every species of excellence. When he had done, the taylor overcome with extacy thanked him in the most rapturous and grateful manner, and prepared to retire.—“No,” says Farinelli, “I am a little proud; and it is perhaps from that circumstance that I have acquired some small degree of superiority over other fingers; I have given way to your weakness, it is but fair, that, in your turn, you should indulge me in mine.” And taking out his purse, he insisted on his receiving a sum amounting to nearly double the worth of the suit of cloaths.

Farinelli, during two reigns, lived upwards of twenty years at the Spanish court, with a constant increase of royal favour, and the esteem of the principal nobility of the kingdom. And Sir Benjamin Keene, when last in England, spoke highly of the prudent conduct and amiable character of Farinelli, during his greatest favour at the court of Madrid, with which he seemed no more elated than with the acclamation which his extraordinary talents acquired him, when he sung in public.

On the present King of Spain's accession to the throne, in 1759, the new monarch and new politics not being favourable to Music or to any transactions of the former reign, Farinelli had orders to return to Italy; his pension, however, was continued, and he was allowed to remove his effects. After visiting Naples, the place of his nativity, he settled at Bologna in 1761, in the environs of which city he built himself a splendid mansion, which in Italy is called a palazzo. Here he resided the rest of his life, in the true enjoyment of affluent leisure; respected by the inhabitants of Bologna; visited by illustrious travellers; and still enjoying the smiles of fortune, though denied the blandishments of a court (k). This extraordinary musician, and worthy man, died in 1782, after arriving at the eightieth year of his age.

(k) He was remarkably civil and attentive to the English nobility and gentry who visited him in his retreat, and seemed to remember the protection and favour of individuals, more than the neglect of the public, during the last year of his residence in London. When the Marquis of Carmarthen honoured him with a visit at Bologna, upon being told it was the son of his patron and friend the Duke of Leeds, he threw his arms round his neck, and shed tears of joy in embracing him.

During the summer of 1737, Handel, whose season had not been prosperous, had been too ill in health and humour to form any plan for carrying on operas, at his own risk, the ensuing winter. The newspapers say that his disorder was the rheumatism; but his biographer tells us, in the Memoirs of his Life, published 1760, that he at once laboured under the double misfortune of insanity, and a stroke of the palsy; for which, with great difficulty, he was prevailed upon to go to Aix-la-Chapelle. October 28th a paragraph in the London Daily Post informed the public, that "Mr. Handel, the composer of the Italian Music, was hourly expected from Aix-la-Chapelle;" and November 7th, that he was returned, "greatly recovered in his health."

Heidegger had now undertaken the management of the opera at the Hay-market, which the nobility had abandoned, in consequence of Farinelli's detention at Madrid (1). Arſace, a pasticcio, was advertised and performed October 29th; and November 1st, Caffarelli was come over as first singer; and Pescetti was the nominal composer. But though Sabrina, an opera of the preceding season, had been often advertised in November, it was deferred from time to time, till all the theatres were ordered to be shut, on account of the death of her Majesty Queen Caroline, which happened November 20th. After this event, no public amusements were announced in the newspapers till the end of December, when FARAMOND, a new opera composed by Handel, was promised on the 2d of January.

1738. There was, however, no opera on Tuesday the 2d of January, as had been promised, nor apology for its being deferred. But the following paragraph was inserted in the London Daily Post on the 3d, "We hear that on Tuesday se'night the King's theatre will be opened with a new ORATORIO, composed by Mr. Handel called SAUL." But this oratorio was not performed till the next

(1) It has been said that Lord Middlesex, had now undertaken the direction; but it does not appear that his lordship became the manager of the Hay-market theatre till the autumn of 1741; when Monticelli first appeared on our stage. Caffarelli assured me in 1770, that his own performance in England was during the latter end of Heidegger's reign; and his advertisements the year after, are confirmations of this fact.

year, though this proves it to have been now in meditation. But on the 7th of January, the Opera-house was opened with Handel's new opera of FARAMOND (m). The performers in this drama, which was originally written by Apost. Zeno for Venice, were Gaetano Majorano, detto CAFFARELLI, Montagnana, Ant. Lottini, Mr. Savage; and Elizabetta du Parc, detta la FRANCESINA, Margarita Chimenti, Maria Antonia MARCHESINI, detta la Lucchesini, and the Merighi. Most of them singers for whom Handel had never written before.

Caffarelli, who, after he quitted this country became a singer of great renown, arrived here at an unfortunate period; besides the recent remembrance of Farinelli's wonderful powers, it is said that he was never well, or in voice, all the time he remained here. His first appearance in public was at Rome, in the opera of Valdemaro, 1726, and he had gained considerable reputation in several theatres of Italy, before his arrival in England; but it was not till a later period that he was classed among the most exquisite singers on the Italian stage (n).

(m) It is worthy of remark, that this opera, according to Handel's own record in the score, was begun November 15th. Though he was just recovered from a long fit of sickness and insanity, and it was but five days before the Queen's death, an event that produced a funeral anthem, which in expression, harmony, and pleasing effects, appears to me at the head of all his works. Faramond was finished on Christmas eve December 29th, 1737.

(n) At his best time, Caffarelli was thought by many a superior singer in some respects, to Farinelli: among these, Porpora, who hated him for his insolence, used to say, that he was the greatest singer Italy had ever produced. At the marriage of the present King of Sardinia, then prince of Savoy, with the infanta of Spain, who had long been a scholar of Farinelli, it was with great difficulty that Caffarelli was prevailed on to go to Turin with the Astrua, to perform at the royal nuptials, in an opera which the King of Sardinia wished to have as perfect as possible. But Caffarelli, who came with an ill-will, by order of the King of Naples, seemed but little disposed to exert himself; declaring before-hand that he had lost a book of clothes on the road, and should be able to do nothing. This was told to his Sardinian Majesty, who was much perplexed how to treat such impertinence. Caffarelli was not his subject, and had been sent by the King of Naples out of compliment, on occasion of the wedding. But the first night of performance the prince of Savoy, in his nuptial dress, went behind the scenes, just before the opera begun, when, entering into conversation with Caffarelli, he told him that he was glad to see him there, though the princess of Savoy thought it hardly possible that any one should sing in such a manner as would give her pleasure, after Farinelli. "Now, Caffarelli," says the prince, "clapping him on the shoulder, exert yourself a little, and cure the princess of this prejudice in favour of her master." Caffarelli was penetrated by this condescension in the prince, and cried out, "Sir, her highness shall hear two Farinelli's in one, to-night." And he is said to have sung, on this occasion, better than any one ever sung before. The Astrua was piqued by his great exertions to display all her talents, which, like the collision of flint and steel, only fired them the more. Mr. Joseph Barretti's brother, who was at Turin during this conflict, furnished me with the anecdote.

In

In a letter I received from my friend Mr. Garrick, during his tour through Italy, dated Naples, February 5th, 1764, is the following passage concerning this singer, who was then turned of sixty: "Yesterday we attended the ceremony of making a nun, she was the daughter of a duke, and the whole was conducted with great splendor and magnificence. The church was richly ornamented, and there were two large bands of Music of all kinds. The consecration was performed with great solemnity, and I was very much affected; and to crown the whole the principal part was sung by the famous Caffarelli, who, though old, has pleased me more than all the singers I have heard. He touched me; and it was the first time I have been touched since I came into Italy."

In 1770, I heard Caffarelli, myself, sing in a room at Naples. He was then sixty-seven; yet, though his voice was thin, it was easy to imagine, from what he was still able to do, that his voice and talents had been of the very first class. He had been so prudent as to provide for old age during youth; and he was now not only living in ease and affluence, in a sumptuous house of his own building, upon which was this inscription: Amphion Thebas, Ego domum; but had purchased a dukedom for his nephew after his decease (o).

The overture to Faramond is one of the most pleasing of all Handel's opera overtures; and as there are no solo parts for wind-instruments, it is more frequently played at small concerts than most of his other compositions of this kind. Nothing can be more grand than the opening, or more free and spirited than the fugue; and as to the air, it speaks intelligibly to all ears.

The first scene ends with a short, light chorus; and the second, with a fine air for Montagnana's base voice: Viva sì. It is a happy circumstance, when Handel has a fine voice of this kind to write for, as he is never more majestic and superior to other composers than in his best songs for a base voice. The next air: Conoscierò, se brami, for FRANCESINA, is airy and pleasing, and afforded the

(o) Caffarelli died in 1783, at eighty years of age; and the nephew, to whom he bequeathed his fortune, is now Duca di Santi Dorato.

audience a specimen of that natural warble, and agility of voice, which Handel afterwards seems to have had great pleasure in displaying. After this, Chimenti, who seems to have performed the second man's part, had a pleasing graceful air, in a modern style: Chi ben ama. Then the Marchesini, detta la Lucchesina, has an air: Vanne che più ti miro, which is curious in its modulation and accompaniment (p). To this performer, who seems to have had the principal female part, Handel has generally given airs of a modern cast. Caffarelli, who performed the part of Faramond, the hero of the drama, has now an air: Rival ti sono, which gives an idea of dignity and abilities. In the course of the song, he is left ad libitum several times, a compliment which Handel never paid to an ordinary singer. After this, the Merighi, who performed a man's part, had an air of great spirit: Voglio che mora, still of a modern cast and accompaniment. Then Caffarelli had a slow air, thinly accompanied: Sì tornerò, which is a fine out-line for a great singer. The Lucchesina has the next air: Sento ch' un giusto sdegno, which contains many fine passages, but still in Handel's new manner. After this, Lottini had a base song: Vado a recar, but not clothed in Handel's usual thunder. Then Francesina had an air of considerable spirit and execution: Mi parto lieta; and Caffarelli another: Se ben mi lusinga, which terminates the first act.

The second act is introduced with a symphony, in Handel's early style. The first air: Sì l' intendesti, was sung by Lucchesina. It is an air of great spirit and energy, and was in great favour in my own memory. Palma used frequently to sing it at concerts, more than ten years after it was composed; and the dignity and passion with which the words  were express-barbaro tradi - tor

(p) At the word cresce, in this air, Handel makes the flat seventh rise to the sharp seventh, in a very uncommon manner:

ed never failed to strike every hearer. The next air: Non ingannarmi, is spirited in an old style; as that which follows it: Poi che pria, for Caffarelli, is pathetic, in a style which will never be old. Francesina's spirited manner was well displayed in the air: Combat-tutta da due venti, of which the composition is very original. The subsequent air: Si a piedi tuo, is beautiful in Handel's juvenile manner. After this, Montagnana had an air: Sol la brama, which neither in melody nor accompaniment is worthy of the composer or singer. The next air: Nella terra, though for Merighi, a singer of the second or third class, is full of beauties, peculiar to Handel. The following duet: Vado e vivo, is light and playful, but seems to want dramatic dignity, particularly as it was sung by the two principal singers, and terminated an act.

The third act begins with a symphony, in composing which, Handel gave himself no trouble to seek for new materials, any more than in the subsequent duet: Caro, tu m' accendi. Nor is much praise due to the air: Così suole, which is a minuet of no uncommon cast. But the fire and spirit of the next air: Voglio che sia, for Caffarelli, make ample amends for preceding trivial movements. This air is finely planned for the stage, and for a voice of great volume. The passages are contrasted, and accompaniments picturesque and impassioned. The next air: Se ria procella, is agreeable trifling, which requires no great abilities in the singer. And the subsequent air: Sappi crudel, though for the first woman, might have been sung by the last, without suffering for want of voice or execution. The composition is clear and masterly; but there is no passion in the melody, or interesting effect in the harmony or modulation. Francesina has, however, an air after these, which is admirably calculated to display her lark-like execution: Un' aura placida. The next air: Virtù, che rende, which is the last in the opera, and terminated in a coro finale, is one of the most agreeable movements in a hunting style that has ever been composed; the score is of nine parts, and those for the French-horns remarkably gay and pleasing (q).

This

(q) The minuteness and exactitude with which Handel continued through life to date his manuscripts, is wonderful! that love of regularity and order which enabled him

This opera was performed but fix times, which reflects more disgrace on the public than composer. Handel, in conformity to the taste of the times, had introduced a variety of style, to suit the education and talents of his new singers; and if we compare his Music with that of the two other composers that were employed this season, Pescetti and Veracini, we shall not only find it greatly superior in strength and solidity, but in grace and invention (r).

January 28th, a new opera was performed by the same singers, called LA CONQUISTA DEL VELLO D'ORO. No composer is mentioned; but it was composed by Pescetti, and had a run of eight nights; though the Music was never printed, except the overture and two or three airs in his book of harpsichord lessons.

February 25th, an opera called ALESSANDRO SEVERO, was first performed. It was a pasticcio by Handel, with an excellent new overture, and had seven representations (s).

March 14th, a new opera called PARTENIO, was first brought out. It was composed by Veracini, and performed nine times. The favourite songs were published by Walsh.

April 15th, Handel produced another new opera, entitled XERXES (t). The first movement and fugue in the overture to this opera are bold, natural, and pleasing; but the last air, which is a jig, has now lost its charms.

The first act opens with a short recitative, and a charming slow cavatina, for Caffarelli: Ombra mai fù, in a clear and majestic style, out of the reach of time and fashion. In the second air: O voi che penate, Handel has made the flutes play the symphony and accompaniments an octave higher than the violins, an expedient which he him to give to the world so many astonishing proofs of genius and diligence, never quitted him in hurry, sickness, or perturbation. At the bottom of the first page of the score of Faramond, he has written in German: Angefangen der, 15 November 1737. Dienstag. And at the end of it: Fine dell' atto 1. Montag der 28 November, 1737. Fine dell' atto 2do. Der 4 December 1737. Sonntagabend um 10 uhr. And at the end, Fine dell' opera, G. F. Handel. London.

don, December 24th, 1737.

(r) This opera was printed in score, and published by subscription in February.

(s) The favourite songs, only, of this opera were printed by Walsh during its run, and published in March, price 2s. 6d.

(t) This composition, Handel has recorded with his usual exactness, was begun December 26th, 1737. Angefangen der 26 December, Montag, der 2 X dag.

tried many years before; but after being discontinued from the time of Handel till about twenty years ago, treble instruments playing all' ottavo then became in fashion, and very agreeable effects are now frequently produced by this easy expedient. The third song: Va godendo, is a gay air that was sung into favour by Francesina. The next air: Io le dirò, which was alternately sung by Caffarelli and the Lucchesina, is graceful and pleasing. The subsequent air: Sì sì mio ben, is of an agreeable comic cast. Meglio in voi, is not marked with any peculiar beauties; nor is the next: Di tacere, very striking, though the accompaniment and modulation are masterly. The air, however, which follows it: Ne men con l' ombre, is extremely agreeable. After this, there is an air for a counter-tenor: Se cangio, which would well suit a base voice, if sung an octave lower; it is in Handel's bold and nervous style, though some of the passages are now a little antiquated. After a short chorus, Montagnana had an agreeable base song: Soggetti al mio volere. But the capital air, of the first act, is Più che penso, which is in a very grand style. The passages are contrasted, and frequent opportunities given for the singer to display his taste and fancy. I have not been able to discover the author of the words of this drama; but it is one of the worst that Handel ever set to Music: for besides feeble writing, there is a mixture of tragi-comedy and buffoonery in it, which Apostolo Zeno and Metastasio had banished from the serious opera. However, it gave Handel an opportunity of indulging his native love and genius for humour; and the airs for Elviro, a facetious servant in this opera, are of a very comic cast. Of these, Signor, Signor, in the first act is one. The air which follows it: Non so se sia, seems by the style to have been composed at the beginning of the century; and there is but little fancy or science in the two subsequent airs: Saprà delle mie offese, and Se l' idol mio. The last air of the act: Un cenno, is, however, gay and pleasing, but in a comic style (n).

The whole first scene, and the chief part of the next, in the (n) "Fine dell'atto 1mo. Jan. 9. 1738." Handel's memorandum, shews this opera to have been composing while Faramond was in run.

second act, is comic. The tenor accompaniment to the air: Or che fiete, is masterly and curious. The third scene consists only of pretty fragments, except the air: Dirà che amor, which can only be styled an agreeable ballad. The fourth scene is terminated with a lively air for Caffarelli: Se bramate, with a base in iterated quavers, very much in the style of Haffé and Vinci; indeed, no Music fifty years old can have a younger appearance. E gelosia, for Francesina, has Handel's broad seal upon it; the writing is good, but the passages are too frequently repeated. The next air: Anima infida, is a fine mixture of old and new passages and effects, with a Corelli base, and a modern accompaniment. Quella che tutta fe, is a fine and pathetic Siciliana. Per dar fine, is very much in the style of a French air tendre of the last age. Sì la voglio, is an old melody, with a very modern accompaniment (x). Voi mi dite, is natural and pleasing; and Il core spera, charming, in a serious style. Del mio caro Baco, is wholly comic. The rest of the act contains nothing remarkable (y).

The third act begins with a symphony, which, though it is only in three parts, from their activity, produce all the effects of full harmony. The first air: No, no, se tu mi sprezzi, is admirable, in the buffo style. Handel's Muse does not seem to have been in good humour again till the end of the seventh scene, where there is a very pleasing duet: Troppo oltraggi, of which the base is remarkably beautiful and masterly. The ninth scene is terminated by an air: Crude furie, which is curious, spirited, and original; and the last air: Caro voi fiete, which is made the subject of the final chorus, is beautifully simple. The chorus is, however, filled up with iterated semiquavers in such a manner, that it has all the appearance and effect of common Italian Music of the present day.

This opera was finished February 6th, but not performed till the 15th of April. It was represented but five times. And, indeed, though it contains many pleasing and excellent compositions, it is by no means to be ranked with Handel's best dramatic produc-

(x) Here Handel seems the first to have invented a short-band for semiquavers, placing only a dot upon a line or space for every four of the same kind.

(y) Fine dell' atto 2do. Jan. 25. 1738.

tions. He was neither in health, prosperity, or spirits, when it was composed; appearances remain in his foul score of a mind disturbed, if not diseased. There are more passages, and even whole pages, cancelled in this score, than in any one of all his former operas. There are more old-fashioned and worn-out passages in some of the songs, than in any other of his works of this period; and this half-close occurs in almost every song:

Handel had been so great a loser by striving against the stream of fashion and opposition the preceding season, that he was obliged to sell out of the funds the savings of many former years, to pay his performers, and was still in some danger of being arrested by the husband of Strada, for the arrears of her salary. It was at this time that his friends with great difficulty persuaded him to try public gratitude in a benefit, which was not disgraced by the event; for on Tuesday, in Passion-week, March 28th, was advertised at the Opera-house in the Hay-market, an ORATORIO, with a CONCERT on the organ, for the benefit of Mr. Handel; pit and boxes put together at half a guinea each ticket, and "for the better conveniency, there will be benches on the stage." The theatre, for the honour of the nation, was so crowded on this occasion, that he is said to have cleared £.800.

After the short run of Xerxes was over, nothing new was brought out, the season being finished with repetitions of the former operas of Arfage, Faramondo, Il Vello d' Oro, and Partenio; after which, the house was shut up, June 6th. At the bottom of the bills, the last five or six nights, notice was given, that "as it had been impossible to perform the whole number of operas this season, each subscriber might have a ticket extraordinary delivered to him each night the opera was performed, upon sending his silver ticket to the office." This implied, that the manager's engagement with the subscribers had not been fulfilled, on account of the time the theatre had been shut up, in consequence of the Queen's death.

This had certainly been a very calamitous season at the Opera-house, house, where nothing seems to have been crowned with success, but Handel's single benefit.

Heidegger, however, previous to the shutting up the theatre, inserted the following advertisement in the newspapers: "Opera-house, May 24th (x). All persons that have subscribed, or are willing to subscribe, twenty guineas, for an Italian opera to be performed next season under my direction, are desired to send ten guineas to Mr. Drummond, the banker, who will give them a receipt, and return the money in case the opera should not go on." Signed J. J. Heidegger.

Two hundred subscribers were required to enable him to be answerable to the fingers.

June 21st, a fortnight after the last opera, the following paragraph appeared in the London Daily Post: "On Saturday last, set out for Breda, Signora Strada del Pò, to which place she goes in obedience to the commands of her royal highness the princess of Orange, from whence she intends to go to Italy; but before her departure desires the English nobility and gentry, from whom she has received so many signal marks of favour, might be acquainted that it is no way owing to her, that the present scheme for performing operas next winter, in the Hay-market, under the direction of Mr. Heidegger, has miscarried, as has been maliciously reported; she having agreed with Mr. Heidegger above a month ago, as the said gentleman can testify."

July 26th, the following advertisement appeared at the head of the first column of the same newspaper: "Hay-market, July 25th, 1738. Whereas the operas for the ensuing season, at the King's theatre in the Hay-market, cannot be carried on as was intended, by reason of the subscription not being full, and that I could not agree with the fingers, though I offered ONE THOUSAND GUINEAS to one of them. I therefore think myself obliged to declare, that I give up the undertaking for next year, and that Mr. Drum-

(x) The day on which his present Majesty was born. It is remarkable, that the play of Volpone was advertised on this day, by command of the prince and princess of Wales. Her royal highness had been well enough to walk in St. James's park the night before; but, luckily, had not quitted Norfolk-house in St. James's-square, at that time the residence of the prince and princess of Wales, before alarming symptoms had come on.

mond will be ready to repay the money paid in, upon the delivery of his receipt. I also take this opportunity to return my humble thanks to all persons, who were pleased to contribute towards my endeavours at carrying on that entertainment." J. J. Heidegger.

From this time to the end of the year, nothing was said in the newspapers of Italian operas, Italian singers, or of Handel's future schemes, who seems to have been rendered silent and inactive, by illness.

During this time of privacy, and the pressure of adverse fortune and infirmities, Handel was not forgotten by his friends or the public. His statue was now erected at Vauxhall, by the late Jonathan Tyers, the spirited proprietor of those gardens. An honour which has seldom been conferred on a subject and a professional man in any country, during his life-time. And as this transaction does honour, not only to the genius of Handel, but to the public spirit of his votary, whose taste and intelligence, kept pace with his liberality, I shall relate it as recorded in the registers of the times.

April 15th, in the London Daily Post, a paragraph says: "The effigies of Mr. Handel, the famous composer of Music, is going to be erected at Vauxhall Gardens, at the expence of Mr. Jonathan Tyers." And on the 18th of the same month: "We are informed, from very good authority, that there is now near finished a statue of the justly celebrated Mr. Handel, exquisitely done by the ingenious Mr. Roubillac, of St. Martin's-lane, statuary, out of one entire block of marble, which is to be placed in a grand niche, erected on purpose in the great grove at Vauxhall Gardens (a), at the sole expence of Mr. Tyers, conductor of the entertainments there; who, in consideration of the real merit of that inimitable master, thought it justice and propriety that his effigies should preside in that place, where his harmony has so often charmed even the greatest crowds into the most profound silence and attention. It is believed, that the expence of the statue and niche cannot cost less than £.300; the said gentleman, likewise, very generously took at Mr. Handel's benefit, fifty of his tickets."

(a) A small temple has since been erected for the reception of this statue in the centre of the gardens.

May 2d, we have a farther account of this species of apotheosis, or laudable idolatry, in the following words ; “ Last night at the opening of the Spring gardens Vauxhall, the company expressed great satisfaction at the marble statue of Mr. Handel, who is represented in a loose robe, sweeping the lyre, and listening to its sounds ; which a little boy sculptured at his feet seems to be writing down on the back of a violoncello. The whole composition is in an elegant taste.”

Soon after, the following verses appeared :

“ That Orpheus moved a grove, a rock, or stream,

“ By Music’s power, will not a fiction seem ;

“ For here as great a miracle is shewn —

“ A HANDEL breathing, though transform’d to stone (b).”

1739. No preparations having been made for the performance of operas this year, at the King’s theatre in the Hay-market, Handel hired that theatre of Heidegger, the patentee, in order to carry on Oratorios. And January 9th, advertised for the 16th, a new ORATORIO called SAUL, which was then first performed. In February Alexander’s Feast was revived ; in March Il Trionfo del Tempo e della Verità ; and in April a new oratorio called ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

The composer Pescetti, and some of the Italian singers who had been employed in the late operas at the Hay-market, being still in England, an attempt was made at carrying on the musical drama at Covent-garden. And February 26th, the following paragraph was inserted in the London Daily Post, at that time the only public paper in which theatrical representations were advertised : “ We hear that a new serenade, composed by Sig. Pescetti, will in a few days be acted, in the same manner as an opera, at the theatre royal in Covent-garden ; part whereof will be performed by Signor a Mofcovita, just arrived from Italy, and by Signora Marchesina, and others.” And March 10th, by his Majesty’s command, was per-

(b) We hear no more of Handel this year, except that his first six celebrated organ concertos were now first collected and published by Walsh, “ corrected by the author, price three shillings !” Public players on keyed-instruments, as well as private, totally subsisted on these concertos for near thirty years.

formed a pastoral opera, called ANGELICA AND MEDORO; at opera prices. It was repeated the 17th and the 24th, and April 11th, which being on a Wednesday in Lent, the piece was called a serenata, and probably performed as an oratorio, without action. To this serenata was now added a new interlude, called L'ASILO D'AMORE.

After this, no further mention is made of these productions, or of Italian operas, at Covent-garden, or elsewhere, till the next winter; when, Dec. 1st, an Italian serenata, called DIANA AND ENDYMION, was performed at the little theatre in the Hay-market. The composer was not named; but it appears from four of the airs which were printed by Walsh, that it was composed by Pescetti, and that Carestini and the Moscovita performed the principal parts.

After three performances, it was laid aside; and on December 15th and 18th, at the same theatre, and at opera prices, was advertised an entertainment, consisting of "SEVERAL CONCERTOS on different instruments, intermixed with a variety of CHOSEN AIRS by the best masters in Italy. The whole divided into three parts. To which, by desire, will be added, the famous SALVE REGINA, composed by the Signor Haffe, and sung by Signor Carestini."

As Handel had not yet wholly abandoned the opera, we must still keep him within its vortex. On the four last days of April 1739, the following advertisement appeared: "At the King's theatre in the Hay-market, Tuesday, May 1st, will be represented a dramatic composition called JUPITER IN ARGOS; intermixed with choruses, and two concertos on the organ." At opera prices. This production, whatever it was, seems to have died in its birth, for I can find no other memorial of it.

In November this year, Handel tried his fortune at Lincoln's-Inn Fields; and on the 22d, being St. Cecilia's day, first performed DRYDEN'S SECOND ODE, with two concertos for several instruments, preceded by Alexander's Feast, and a concerto on the organ, at opera prices. The same performance was repeated on the 27th; and December 13th, were performed Acis and Galatea, with two new concertos, concertos, never performed but once (c), to which was added, Alexander's Feast, and a concerto on the organ. December 20th, these were repeated, for the last time of performing before the holydays.

Handel's activity and spirit of enterprize at this time, in his fifty-sixth year, were truly wonderful! opposed and oppressed by the most powerful nobles and gentry of the kingdom! suffering with bodily and mental disease! with rivals innumerable; when a Spanish war was just broke out, which occupied the minds, and absorbed the thoughts of the whole nation! Amidst all these accumulated misfortunes and impediments, he composed his twelve grand concertos, and Dryden's second ode; brought out Saul; Israel in Egypt; Jupiter in Argos; published seven sonatas; and revived Il Trionfo del Tempo; Acis and Galatea; and Alexander's Feast! And yet this seems to have been one of the most idle years of his public life.

1740. The opera, a tawdry, expensive, and meretricious lady, who had been accustomed to high keeping, was now reduced to a very humble state, and unable to support her former extravagance. Instead of the sumptuous palace which she used to inhabit, she was driven to a small house (d), in the neighbourhood of her former splendid mansion, where her establishment was not only diminished, but her servants reduced to half-pay. Pescetti seems to have been her prime minister, Carestini her head man, the Muscovita her favourite woman, and Andreoni a servant for all work.

The allurements she offered to the public were, at first, not very attractive, consisting, instead of a regular entertainment, only of concertos, chosen airs, and Salve Regina, which, however, were twice postponed: first, on account of the indisposition of Carestini; and secondly, of the Muscovita, ill of a pleurisy.

At length, January 22d, a pasticcio was brought out, called MERIDE E SELINUNTE (e); which though not of sufficient im-

(c) These were two of his GRAND CONCERTOS, now publishing by subscription.

(d) New theatre in the Hay-market.

(e) This opera, founded on the friendship of Damon and Pythias, was written by Apostolo Zeno. Walsh printed four of the airs by the unclassical name of Merode. The plates are now well lost, for they contained nothing of great value to the musical world.

portance to support the state and magnificence of a larger theatre had a run of fourteen nights in this snug retreat ; which, probably, on account of the severity of the weather at this time, was preferred to more spacious places of public exhibition, by the few who had the courage to quit their fire-side (f).

March 15th, another opera, entitled OLIMPIA IN EBUDA, was brought on this little stage ; at the first performance of which his Majesty was present. The Music was chiefly composed by Haffé (g). This opera was represented fifteen times. After which, a third drama, called BUSIRI, overo il Trionfo d' Amore, set by Pescetti, was brought out, and performed by his Majesty's command May 10th. This production lived but four nights. The season was closed, May the 31st, with Olimpia, which had been alternately performed with Busiri (h).

Handel, who had nothing to do with the opera this winter, confined himself wholly to the performance of oratorios, for which he rented the theatre in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, of Rich the patentee.

November the 8th of the subsequent winter, still continuing at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, he began the new season with his serenata, Parnasso in Festa, performed in its original oratorio manner, with the addition of scenes, dresses, and concertos on the organ, and several other instruments. It is to be feared that the success of this performance was inferior to its merit, as it was not repeated. After this single performance, his theatre was not opened again till the 22d, when, having mustered the best singers that were now in this country, he put his stage in action, and had a new operetta performed, called IMENEO, or HYMEN. This was advertised again for the 29th, but deferred for near a fortnight, on account of the indisposition of Francesina. On the 13th of December, it was however performed, for the second, and last time.

(f) This was the memorable winter of the great frost.

(g) Four of the airs of this opera were published with those of Meride, by Walsh, in a half-crown collection. There is a plaintive cast, and elegant melody, in Non pensar, which was sung by Andreoni ; and grandeur and pathos in Vedo l'ombra del mio bene, sung by Carestini.

(h) The songs of this short-lived opera were never printed.

It is not in my power to give the reader a regular review of this little opera, as Handel's original foul score is very incomplete: there being no overture; and in the recitatives, sometimes the words are written without the notes, and sometimes the notes without the words; nor are the instrumental parts to the airs always filled up.

Act I. The first air: La mia bella, for a soprano, with only the accompaniment of a violoncello, is elegantly simple and beautiful. At the end of a long scene of recitative, we have a very gay and pleasing chorus: Vien Imeneo, superior in style and contrivance to most opera choruses that I have seen, even in the dramas of Handel. Scene the fifth, the subject of the air: V' è un infelice, is graceful and pleasing.

There are, however, but few airs, in which much vigour of invention is discoverable, before the second act, when there is a bravura air: Sorge nell' alma mia, of great spirit, in a style that was then new, and which was long after continued on the stage. E s'è vaga, is set to an air which is printed in his grand concertos. Pieno il core, is grand and original; and Al voler, gracefully simple. These are the principal airs that I have been able to decipher in the hasty sketch which Handel has left of this operetta, which consisted of only two acts.

Not discouraged by the failure of the opera of Imeneo, Handel brought out another new drama, January 10th, called DEIDAMIA, which was the last he ever composed for the stage.

The first movement of the overture to this opera, is excellent, alla Lulli; but the fugue is written on a subject less fertile and of less dignity than he usually chose for such purposes. The march, however, is admirable, and one of the best upon the old military model, to be found in all his works.

Act I. The first air in the part of Ulysses, which was performed by Andreoni: Grecia tu offendi, is in a very grand and dramatic style; full of fine passages, some of which, indeed, have been too frequently used by subsequent composers, to seem new, at present; but but whoever is acquainted with the state of melody in the year 1741, and its revolutions since, must see the merit of this air (i). The next air: Al tardar della vendetta, for a base voice, is admirable! rich and ingenious in the accompaniments; and the principal melody pleasing, in a style less robust than is usual in songs for that species of voice. Another air for a base voice: Nelle nubi intorno al Fato, succeeds this, and, in a different style, it is equally excellent; it is fugata in the accompaniments, in a most agreeable manner, without impoverishing the voice-part, or distracting the attention. Then follows an air: Due bell' alme, with no violin part; and the violoncello is only accompanied by the harpsichord and lute, in chords, without treble-melody (k); this is a very pleasing cavatina, in Handel's own early manner. Da lusinghe, is an elegant and pleasing cantabile, full of taste and fancy. Handel either found that his finger was unequal to this air, or disliked it himself, for he has set the same words to a different melody, reserving, however, some of the passages of the first air, to which he gave the preference when the opera was printed. Seguir di selva, for Achilles, personated by a lady, Miss Edwards, is on a gay and pleasing subject; but it has not been dilated much in the score, nor is it enriched with any accompaniment. Quando accendran, is somewhat languid and antique. Se pensi amor, is a pleasant aria buffa; and Sì che desio, an excellent composition in the style of Handel's youth (l). Perdere il bene, is an air of two characters: in the first part, pathetic, elegant, and worthy of a great singer; in the second, rapid, impassioned, and such as makes a return to the first part welcome. Nascondi l' usignol, which finishes the first act, is a light, airy, pleasing movement, suited to the active throat of the Francesina. This act, which was fi-

(i) It is singular, that this air, composed and sung before the arrival of Monticelli in this country, contains passages similar to those in an air by Pergolesi: Tremende oscuri atroci, which that performer brought over and sung in Olimpiade, the next year. Pergolesi died in 1737; and Handel dates the coro finale of Deidamia, November 20th, 1740.

(k) This is the last use that seems to have been made of the lute in our opera orchestra.

(l) He has set these words twice over: the second time to a minuet, in which the subject passage is too often repeated for the present age.

nished November 1st, 1740, seems equally excellent with that of any of his early operas.

Act II. Un guardo solo, is elegantly simple, and pathetic. Lasciami, is spirited and dramatic. D' amor ne' primi istante, is a natural and pleasing air, for a second singer. Se il timore, truly pathetic and touching. Nel riposo is admirable in harmony and design; and Della guerra, an excellent chorus, alla caccia. Non ti credo, is innocent and simple. Presso ad occhj, is, however, a base song of no uncommon merit; and Nò, nò, quella beltà, is an air which has suffered by time, both in the subject and divisions. But Và perfido, is extremely animated; and though this air is printed, it is not in Handel's manuscript score. Sì m' appaga, which terminates the act, is a very gay and pleasing ballad (m).

Act III. Degno più di tua beltà, is an agreeable and original short air for a base voice in $\frac{3}{2}$. Quanto inganno, is one of those subordinate airs of an opera for the under singers, which afford attentive hearers time to breathe, and discuss the merit of superior compositions and performance. Ai Greci questa spada, for Achilles, is spirited, military, and characteristic of that hero's intrepidity. M' ai resa infelice, is an air of two characters, well calculated for the stage. Come all' urto, is an admirable composition, with a fine solo part, originally designed for Caporale's violoncello. Or pensate, is lively; but it would have been heard with more pleasure fifty years ago than at present. Consolami se brami, is gay and agreeable, but has few new passages; and though the air Non vuol perdere, is extremely lively and pleasing, Handel set the same words again to a very graceful melody, in minuet time, which, however, has not been printed. The duet: Ama—nell' armi & nell' amar, is in jig time, and composed of passages that are now common and not free from vulgarity. This, however, is followed by a coro finale, which would rank high among opera choruses. Indeed, the sum total of fine airs in this opera is so considerable,

(m) Fine dell' atto 2do. G. F. Handel,
November 7th, 1740. Handel marks the days of the week with astronomical figs.

that

that though the first act is superior to the second, and the second to the third, it may be numbered among the happiest of Handel's dramatic productions. And when it is recollected that, exclusive of the operas which he had set in Germany and Italy, before his arrival here, this was the thirty-ninth Italian drama which he had composed for the English stage, the fertility and vigour of his invention must appear astonishing! The airs in this last opera of Deidamia are as much contrasted in style, design, and passages, as those he composed thirty years before; and in this particular, Handel's resources seem superior to those of any voluminous opera-composer within my knowledge. In examining the scores of Haffé, Graun, Galuppi, Perez, Piccini, and Sacchini, we find innumerable fine airs; but not that diversity of plan and subject, as in Handel.

Deidamia, with all its intrinsic merit, was performed but three times: January 10th, 17th, and February 10th; after which, it was laid aside for ever! And yet the public injustice, though Handel often felt it, must not be too heavily arraigned on this occasion; for the singers were such as had but little power of exciting rapture, after the exquisite performers to which frequenters of operas had been accustomed. Andreoni and Francesina, the first man and woman, were only singers of the second class, in which they were placed the next season, and the rest were below criticism.

After the third performance of Deidamia, Handel, with the same singers, returned to oratorios; but as the chief effects of these depend on the mass of harmony produced by the choruses, the solo singers were not required to be equal in abilities to those of the opera.

As this was the last opera which Handel composed, we must now take a melancholy leave of his regency; for after this period, having no concern in the composition or conduct of Italian operas, he never set any other words than English, and those wholly confined to sacred subjects.

* * * * *

DIVISIONS

DIVISIONS in the Songs which FARINELLI performed during his residence in England.

437

In Artaserse 1734.

In D^o

In Polife-

-mo 1735.

In D^o

In D^o

438

FARINELLI'S Divisions.

In Orfeo 1736

In D^o.

In Siroe 1737

by HASSE.

In D^o.

Allegro.

Sung by Sig^r Farinello in Artaxerxes.

Riccardo Broschi. 439

Violini.
Unifsoni.

Viola.

Basso.

Allegro affai

Pia For Pia

Segue

Pia For Pia For Pia For

col Basso

Son qual na ve

Son qual na - ve ch'a - gi - ta - ta da più sco - gli in mez - zo all on - de fi con - fon - de fi con - fon - de e spaventa ta va fol - can - do in al - to mar va fol - can - do in al - to

Cor Basso

For
in al to mar
For
in al to mar
fi con - fonde e spaven - ta ta va fo l can do in al to

The musical score is written on six systems of three staves each. The first system includes the lyrics 'For' and 'in al to mar'. The second system includes 'in al to mar'. The third system includes 'fi con - fonde e spaven - ta ta va fo l can do in al to'. The notation includes treble and bass clefs, a key signature of one sharp (F#), and various musical symbols such as notes, rests, and accidentals. The paper is aged and shows some staining.

mar

Largo

in al-to mar in al-to mar

Segue

Pia

ma in ve - der l'a - ma - to li - do las - cia l'ondee ven - to in fi - do

Pia

e va in por - to a ri - po - far a ri - po - far e va in porto a ri - po - far a ri - po - far.

After this period, Handel having been ruined by carrying on operas at his own expence in opposition to the nobility, and unable to indemnify himself by the profits of his oratorios, went to Ireland: a measure which was probably precipitated by the certain information he had received of the Earl of Middlesex having taken upon himself the perilous and troublesome office of impresario of Italian operas; for the performance of which, he had engaged the King's theatre in the Hay-market, and an almost entire new band of fingers from the Continent, with Galuppi to compose.

At the opening of the Opera-house, October 31st, the new fingers, as usual, were allowed to display their abilities in songs of their own chusing, which were interwoven by the new composer, Galuppi, in a pasticcio, called ALESSANDRO IN PERSIA. The Music in this drama was so judiciously selected, that few operas afford a greater variety of beautiful airs in different styles (n). The composers of the songs that have been printed, were Leo, Hasse, Arena, Pescetti, Lampugnani, and Domenico Scarlatti. The air: Sparge al mare, by the composer last mentioned, is one of the finest songs of the kind, that I know. The rolling of the billows, and distraction of the crew, during a storm and ship-wreck, are admirably painted by the orchestra; and the voice-part is full of fine passages for a great singer. The celebrated air: Vo solcando, composed by Vinci, in his Artaserse, 1730, seems built on the same idea in melody and accompaniment. In the voice-part the divisions are reversed, and when Scarlatti descends in the wreck, Vinci mounts, in following the will of fortune, at the word seguitar. There is more variety, passion, and genius in the composition of Scarlatti, though the other is a very fine song. If this air was only set for Scarlatti's Merope, which was first performed at Rome 1740, Vinci has the merit of primogeniture; and, as I cannot find the words in any of his other operas, I suspect this to be the case. The style, likewise, is too modern for any other opera that I can find, by Domenico Scarlatti. Passaggier che fa ritorno, the second air in this collection, is likewise by Momo Scarlatti, and very new and fanciful for the time. The third air is anonymous, but more in the style of Lampugnani than of any other composer. This is followed by an agreeable air in minuet time, from Galuppi's Penelope; a fine air from Haffé's Olimpia, sung by Carestini: Vedo l'ombra del mio bene; and Miro del tebro l'onda, from Galuppi's Scipione in Cartagine, a pleasing air of which the modulation of the first four bars is the same as Pergolesi's Tremende oscuri atroci. There are, however, some new divisions in this song, not very easy to execute with the voice. The opera of Alessandro in Persia was written originally for Lucca, in 1738, by the Abate Francesco Vaneschi, when it was set by Paradies, before the arrival of these personages in England. Vaneschi being, however, in London at the time that Lord Middlesex's opera regency began, was employed by his lordship, first as poet, and then as assistant manager. In process of time, from prime minister, upon his lordship's abdication, he assumed the sovereignty of the opera state.

(n) Walsh published two collections.

The singers in Alessandro in Persia, which sustained twelve representations, were Monticelli, soprano, first man; Andreoni, soprano, second man; Amorevoli, tenor; Signora Visconti, first woman; Signora Panichi, second woman; and Signora Tedeschi, third woman. Of these performers, it will be necessary here to give some account previous to the mention that will be made of the songs in which they chiefly distinguished themselves.

ANGELO MARIA MONTICELLI first appeared on the stage at Rome in the year 1730; and, having a beautiful face and figure, began in that city, where no women are allowed to mount the stage, by representing female characters. His voice was clear, sweet, and free from defects of every kind. He was a chaste performer, and never hazarded any difficulty which he was not certain of executing with the utmost precision. To his vocal excellence may be added the praise of a good actor; so that nothing but the recent remembrance of the gigantic talents of Farinelli, and the grand and majestic style of Senesino, could have left an English audience any thing to wish. Andreoni was a good singer of the second class, though his powers were not sufficiently attractive for the principal man's parts of an opera. Amorevoli was an admirable tenor;

I have heard better voices of his pitch, but never, on the stage, more taste and expression. The Visconti had a shrill flexible voice, and pleased more in rapid songs than in those that required high colouring and pathos. She was so fat, that her age being the subject of conversation in a company where Lord Chesterfield was present; when a gentleman, who supposed her to be much younger than the rest, said she was but two and twenty; his lordship, interrupting him, said "you mean stone, Sir, not years." The Panichi and Tedeschi, being "without mark or likelihood," shall remain non-descripts.

The first specimen which Galuppi gave of his abilities as a composer, was the opera of PENELOPE, written expressly for our stage by Paoli Rolli, and dedicated to the noble impresario, Lord Middlesex. The genius of Galuppi was not as yet matured; he now copied the hasty, light, and flimsy style which reigned in Italy at this time, and which Handel's solidity and science had taught the English to despise. Galuppi's first opera here was performed but five times; and in examining the songs that were printed by Walsh, it seems not to have been unjustly treated. The air, however: A questa bianca mana, is truly dramatic and impassioned (o).

1742. At the beginning of this year the performance of Penelope was discontinued, and that of Alessandro in Persia resumed, during six nights. After which, January 19th, a new pasticcio, called POLIDORO, was performed, and had seven representations; but of its merit I am unable to speak, having never seen any of the songs. February 19th, 23d, and 27th, Penelope was again exhibited; and March 2d, another new opera, by Buranello, was brought out, called SCIPIONE IN CARTAGINE. In this opera: Di madre ai cari amplessi, is a fine cantabile air, in the gran gusto; the accompaniment, in terzini, was his own, or, at least, new to us. Rinaldo di Capua & Terradellas, had accompaniments of the same kind, about this time. Many of Galuppi's passages, indeed, have been made common by plagiarists; but at this time they were

(o) During the run of these two operas, Garrick was acting at Goodman's-Fields, Beard and Lowe contending at Drury-lane, and acting the same parts alternately, where the Fausans and Michels danced; while Barberini and Domitilla, at Covent-garden, were joined by Monsieur Picq, and Mademoiselle Auguste, just arrived from the opera at Paris.

new. Insultami superba, is spirited, and in a grand dramatic style. After nine representations of this opera, an excellent pasticcio was brought out, April 20th, called MERASPE, o L'OLIMPIADE, written by the admirable Metastasio. The Music was chiefly selected from PERGOLESI, and this seems to have been the first time his serious compositions were publicly heard in England. The first air: Tremende oscuri atroci, in Monticelli's part, was sung at concerts by Frasi for ten years, at least, after the run of the opera was over; and the whole exquisite scene where Se cerca se dice occurs, was rendered so interesting by the manner in which it was acted as well as sung by Monticelli, that I have been assured by attentive hearers and good judges, that the union of poetry and Music, expression and gesture, seldom have had a more powerful effect on an English audience. Besides this Music by Pergolesi, there was a fine cantabile air by Domenico Scarlatti; Immagini dolente, which was sung with exquisite taste by Amorevole (p); Per novo amor delira, composed by Leo; and two agreeable airs by Lampugnani and Leo. After the run of Olimpiade was over, an opera called CEFALO E PROCRI was performed three times; but of which, as the Music was never printed, I am unable to speak. The season was ended, June the 1st, after two representations more of Scipione in Cartagine.

The lyric theatre was opened again, the following winter, November 2d, with a new opera written by Apostolo Zeno, called GIANGUIR, of which the Music is said, in Walsh's catalogue, to have been composed by Haffé; there are, however, but two of his songs printed; the first, Se poi senti, in F minor, a very fine one, with new chromatic in the accompaniment; the last, Parti se vuoi così, a very pleasing air, sung by Amorevoli. The rest by Lampugnani, Brivio, and Rinaldo di Capua. In Lampugnani's airs there are new and difficult divisions. Rinaldo di Capua's is a fine air, in a grand style, with an accompaniment in triplets.

After three performances only of this opera, Alessandro in Persia, was revived and represented five times. And then a pasticcio call-

(p) This opinion is traditional, as I was not in London during the performance of the opera, but being in possession of the Music, and having heard Amorevoli sing in 1744, I have little doubt of its being well founded.

ed MANDANE, another name for Metastasio's drama of Artaserse, was brought on the stage and performed, likewise, five times: that is, to the end of the year.

1743. On the first day of this year a new opera was brought out, called ENRICO, composed by Galuppi, more frequently called by the Italians Buranello, from the little Venetian island which gave him birth; this drama was originally written for the theatre at Florence, in 1732, by Vaneschi, afterwards manager; and now new set and performed on the English stage under his own direction. The London edition is dedicated to Earl Fitzwilliam. In this opera, the principal singers, Monticelli, Visconti, and Amorevoli, were the same as in the preceding year; but the inferior characters were represented by three new female performers, who now first appeared on the English stage: these were FRASI, GALLI, and CONTINI. The two first, after transplantation from Italy, took root in this country, and remained here in great public favour, for many years; the third seems to have remained in England but one season. Giulia Frasi was at this time young, and interesting in person, with a sweet and clear voice, and a smooth and chaste style of singing, which, though cold and unimpassioned, pleased natural ears, and escaped the censure of critics. Galli having a voice of a lower pitch, which the Italians call mezzo soprano, and her appearance being less feminine than Frasi's, began in this opera with a man's part, and was afterwards frequently employed in male parts on the opera stage. There was something spirited and interesting in her manner; however, she was little noticed by the public till she sung in Handel's oratorio of Judas Maccabæus, 1746, when she acquired such favour in the air "'Tis liberty alone," that she was not only encored in it every night, but became an important personage, among singers, for a considerable time afterwards.

There are many pleasing and elegant movements in Enrico; and a gay air sung by Monticelli, beginning: Son troppo vezzosa, was constantly encored at the Opera-house, and long remained in general favour. Indeed, many of the refinements in modern melody, and effects in dramatic Music, seem to originate from the genius of Galuppi at this period, at least in England.

February 22d, TEMISTOCLE, an opera written by Apostolo Zeno, and set by Porpora, was first performed at the King's theatre in the Hay-market, by the same singers, and had a run of eight nights. The air in this opera beginning : Di che a sua voglia eleggere, is in a grand and original style ; the shakes, however, on the first note of a phrase or passage, seem strange, from so great a singing master. L' ire tue, has some new effects and embellishments, and was pillaged by Wiedeman in his best minuet. I never saw Music in which shakes were so lavished ; Porpora seems to have composed the air : Contrasto assai, in a shivering fit. After the run of this opera, and two more performances of Enrico, SIRBACE, another drama set to Music by Galuppi, was brought out, which likewise ran eight nights, from April 9th to May 17th, when an end was put to the season (q).

How much the ballance turned out in favour of the noble impresario, I am unable to say ; if considerable, the honour must be totally ascribed to the composer and performers, as dancing appears to have had no share in attracting the public attention.

In the autumn of this year, the same singers were retained ; but Lampugnani, a new composer, was engaged to supply the place of Galuppi, who was returned to Italy. ROXANA, the first opera by this new master, was brought out, November 15th, and ran till the end of the year, having twelve uninterrupted representations. As this opera seems not to have been printed under the name of Roxana, but on its revival in 1746, when I heard it performed by the title of Alessandro nell' Indie, I shall then speak of its merit.

1744. January 3d, a new opera called ALFONSO, set by Lampugnani, was first performed. Upon a cool and fair examination of the works of this composer, I now find more genius and merit of various kinds, than I used to allow. He was thought slight and flimsy when he was here ; as all musical people were then im-

(q) In the first air of this opera that was printed by Walsh : Se belle tanto siete. new effects are produced from rinforzando ; B flat, as a passing-note, is first used against B natural ; and a quiet accompaniment, in quavers, to a vocal division had not been often used before. Indeed, all the airs of this opera, the last which Galuppi directed himself, in England, are pleasing, and in good taste. He seems the first, in this opera and Enrico, who used the sharp fifth in melody next to Porpora, who started this intermediate note of taste. See the next plates.

bued with the solidity of Corelli, Geminiani, and Handel, and were unwilling that any composer should turn over a new leaf, or advance one step farther. Lampugnani's is not a grand style; but there is a graceful gaiety in the melody of his quick songs, and an elegant tenderness in the slow, that resemble no other composer's works of that time. If any defect is more prominent than another in his productions, it is want of dignity and richness of harmony. This composer, who was very young at this time, and is still living at Milan, rioted too much with comedy, for a serious drama. There is more bravura for Monticelli in the songs of Alfonso, than I ever remember that singer to attempt in any other.

After eight representations of this opera, it gave way, January 31st, to another, called ROSELINDA, set by Veracini, at that time the leader of the opera band. The first air that presents itself in the printed copy of the favourite songs is "The lass of Patie's mill," which Monticelli condescended to sing, and Veracini to set parts and ritornels to, in order, as they imagined, to flatter the English. But as few of the North Britons, or admirers of this national and natural Music, frequent the opera, or mean to give half a guinea to hear a Scots tune, which perhaps their cook-maid Peggy can sing better than any foreigner, this expedient failed of its intended effect (r). Veracini's own Music in this opera is wild, awkward, and unpleasant; manifestly produced by a man unaccustomed to write for the voice, and one possessed of a capo pazzo. This opera, to my great astonishment when I examined the Music, ran twelve nights.

After this, L' ERRORE DI SOLOMONE, another opera composed by Veracini, had two representations, and ARISTODEMO, a pasticcio, seven, before the 28th of April, when ALCESTE, a new opera by Lampugnani, was first performed. To the Music of this drama the same praise is due, as to that of Alfonso. Questo baccio, is pathetic, elegant, and dramatic. Placata è già l' onda, has the merit of tenderness and passion. This opera which was in great favour with the votaries of the new lyric style of Italy, ran ten nights, and ter-

(r) Palma, who embellished this air with great taste, seems to have been more admired in singing it without a voice than Monticelli with one that was exquisite; a singer in a room may hazard refinements, which on a stage, accompanied by a powerful orchestra, would have no effect.

minated the season, June 16th. There were no operas at the King's theatre in the Hay-market from this time till January 1746. In November 1744, Handel finding the house unoccupied, engaged it for the performance of oratorios, which he began November 3d, and continued to his great loss, and the nation's disgrace, till the 23d of April.

1745. From this period, there will be little occasion for my having recourse to tradition or books for information concerning the musical transactions of our own capital, as it has been the chief place of my residence ever since; except from 1751 to 1760. But during those nine years, though Norfolk was my home, I visited London every winter, in order to rub off rust and revive friendships; so that I shall seldom depend on hear-say evidence, or doubtful information for facts, but speak of persons and things from my own memory, acquaintance, and professional intercourse.

The great Opera-house being shut up this year on account of the rebellion, and popular prejudice against the performers, who being foreigners, were chiefly Roman Catholics; an opera was attempted April 7th, at the little theatre in the Hay-market, under the direction of Geminiani. Prince Lobkowitz, who was at this time in London, and fond of Music, with the celebrated and mysterious Count Saint Germain, attended all the rehearsals. Pasquali led; and I remember, at a rehearsal, Geminiani taking the violin out of his hands, to give him the style and expression of the symphony to a song, which had been mistaken, when first led off. And this was the first time I ever saw or heard Geminiani. The opera was a pasticcio, and called L' INCOSTANZA DELUSA. But Count St. Germain composed several new songs, particularly Per pietà bell' idol mio, which was sung by Frasi, first woman, and encored every night. The rest of his airs, and two by Brivio, Frasi's master, which Walsh printed, were only remarkable for insipidity. The first man's part was performed by Galli. The success of this enterprize was inconsiderable, and the performances did not continue more than nine or ten nights.

1746. There was no opera attempted at the great theatre in the Hay-market, till January 7th, when LA CADUTA DE' GIGANTI, set

set by Gluck, was performed before the Duke of Cumberland, in compliment to whom the whole was written and composed. The singers were Monticelli, Jozzi, and Ciacchi; with Signora Imer, Pompeati, afterwards better known by the name of Madame Cornelie, and Frasi. The first woman, Imer, never surpassed mediocrity in voice, taste, or action; and the Pompeati, though nominally second woman, had such a masculine and violent manner of singing, that few female symptoms were perceptible. The new dances by Auretti, and the charming Violetta, afterwards Mrs. Garrick, were much more applauded than the songs, which, however, for the time, had considerable merit. The first air in G minor is of an original cast, but monotonous. The second air has genius and design in it. Then a duet, in which he hazarded many new passages and effects. The following air, for Monticelli, is very original in symphony and accompaniments, which a little disturbed the voice-part in performance, I well remember, and Monticelli called it aria tedesca. His contemporaries in Italy, at this time, seemed too much filed down; and he wanted the file, which when used afterwards in that country, made him one of the greatest composers of his time. The next air printed, is in a very peculiar measure, and like no other that I remember: it has great merit of novelty and accompaniment; the voice-part wants only a little more grace and quiet. The following song, set for Jozzi, a good musician with little voice, is full of new and ingenious passages and effects; I should like much to hear this air well performed at the opera; it is kept alive from beginning to end. Something might be expected from a young man able to produce this opera, imperfect as it was. It had, however, but five representations.

January 28th, IL TRIONFO DELLA CONTINENZA, a pasticcio, but chiefly by Buranello, came out, and ran ten nights. The airs in this opera are admirable, and still in good taste. Tu mia sposa, page fourteen, of the songs printed by Walsh, is a model for aria parlante. La sorte mia tiranna, is likewise excellent, though it was afterwards surpassed by Piccini (s).

March

(s) We see the model of all the best songs of our own composers, in looking back to Vol. IV.

Handel and his successors. Page 25 of the songs printed by Walsh, we find in Cedo

March 4th, was first performed, ARTAMENE, set by Gluck, in which Monticelli was every night encored in Rasserena il mesto ciglio. The motivo of this air is grateful to every ear; but it is too often repeated, being introduced seven times, which, there being a Da Capo, is multiplied to fourteen. The second part is good for nothing. Indeed, no other air in this opera, that has been printed, furnished a single portent of the great genius this composer afterwards manifested. This opera ran, however, ten nights. Then, April 15th, Alessandro nell' Indie, by Lampugnani, was revived, and had eight representations. There is much fire and imagination in the cantilena of these airs, which are natural and of easy execution for the voice. The composer, however, though toujours gai and agreeable, was likely, after two or three operas, to be pronounced a riotous trifler.

May 13th, ANTIGONO, set by Galuppi, was first exhibited, and continued in run to the end of the season, which was the last in which Monticelli appeared on our stage. In the charming air: A torto spergiuro, of this opera, we see the first time, perhaps, when the base was struck after the treble, of which Emanuel Bach and Haydn have often made a happy use. The accompaniment of Già che morir deggio, in flow triplets, has been the model of many subsequent songs, particularly Piccini's invocation to sleep; Vieni al mio seno, in La buona Figliuola (t).

In the autumn of this year, REGINELLI, an old but great singer, whose voice, as well as person, was in ruin, first appeared on our stage, in a pasticcio, called ANNIBALE IN CAPUA (u). This performer was now turned of fifty; his voice a soprano, but cracked, and in total decay; his figure tall, raw-boned, and gawky; but alla forte, the idea, and almost all the passages, of Arne's "When Britons first, &c."

(t) The speaking of songs that are now many of them out of print, may be thought useless and absurd; but as numerous copies of all the operas of the times of which I am at present treating were circulated, and are still in the hands of general purchasers, and collectors, among whom, if I may hope for readers, my remarks and references to the printed copies of these airs, will not perhaps be wholly nugatory.

(u) Though there are airs, among those of this opera that were printed, with the names of Haffé, Lampugnani, Paradies, the Cavalier Malegiac, and Terradellas, prefixed to them, the little original merit they could ever boast, has been long since diminished by plagiarism, and the vicissitudes of fashion.

there

there were fine remains of an excellent school in his taste and manner of singing; indeed, he had some refinements in his embellishments and expression, that cannot be described, and which I have not since heard in any other singer. In a cantabile, his taste, to those who had places near enough to hear his riffioramenti, was exquisite; but the imperfections of his voice and figure disgusted those at a distance, to whose ears only the worst part of his performance arrived.

The rest of the singers of this season were not captivating: Borosini, Triulzi, and Ciacchi, among the men, having never been possessed of the powers of pleasing; and the Pirker, a German woman of small abilities, with Casarini, and Frasi, then in an inferior class, did not supply Reginelli's deficiencies, in the power of attracting company to the Opera-house.

After six representations of Annibale, MITRIDATE, an opera entirely by the new composer Terradellas, was brought out, December 2d, and had a run of ten nights. In the two collections of favourite songs in this opera, printed by Walsh, those that were sung by Reginelli are admirable, and the others very agreeable: particularly, Chi fingere non sa, which, from its easy and natural melody, was a great favourite; Se spuntan vezzose, sung by Pirker, with a hautbois obligato, for T. Vincent, pleased much; as did some of Casarini's songs.

1747. The Earl of Middlesex, who, till this winter, was patentee and sole director at the opera, had been joined by a number of noblemen, at the beginning of the season, by whom four general subscriptions were opened: the first, in November, for six nights only; the second, in December, for ten; the third, in January, for seventeen; and the fourth, in March, for fourteen nights.

January 17th, which was the first of the second subscription, PHAETON, a new opera set by PARADIES, just arrived in this country, was first performed. In examining the airs of this opera that were printed, the first seems very common and ill-phrased, nor is there much estro, or grace, in any of his songs that I have seen (x).

Indeed

(x) An air in the style of a common minuet, by Haffé; another by Paradies; and an ordinary song in common time, for Triulzi, an ordinary singer, forms the whole collection.

Indeed he seems to have had no great experience as an opera-composer. And during his residence in England he acquired more reputation by the lessons he published for the harpsichord, and the scholars he made on that instrument, for which he was an admirable master, than by his vocal compositions.

The drama of Fetonte, or Phaeton, was written by Vaneschi, afterwards manager; to which is prefixed A Discourse on Operas, inscribed to the Earl of Middlesex. The author, whoever he was, makes no contemptible defence of the musical drama, against the common objections of critics insensible to the power of musical sound; but the best apologies for the absurdities of an Italian opera in a country where the language is little understood, are good Music and exquisite singing. Unluckily, neither the composition, nor performance of Phaeton had the Siren power of enchanting men so much, as to stimulate attention at the expence of reason.

After nine representations of Phaeton, and seven of Lampugnani's favourite opera of Roxana, which was a second time revived, the fourth subscription began, March 24th, with a new opera by Terradellas, called BELLEROPHON. The compositions of this master, now just arrived in London, are in general good. Passages are, indeed, still too often repeated, in Rosalia, and symmetry and phraseology are sometimes wanting. But crescendo is used in this opera, seemingly for the first time; and new effects are frequently produced by pianos and fortes. Bellerophon had ten representations, which, with four of Mitbridates, completed the fourth subscription and the season, which had not been very propitious: the expences far exceeding the receipts, so that the noble directors were considerable losers, and obliged to pay the pipers all deficiencies.

In November, the Opera-house was opened with a pasticcio, called LUCIO VERO, chiefly from Handel; and I well remember the richness of the harmony and ingenuity of the contrivance of several songs, were very striking, compared with the light melodies and their accompaniments of what I had heard at the Opera-house before. Ombra cara; Affanni del pensier; and the duet, Io t'abbrac- collection. Many choruses were interwoven in this drama, but how set, or what their effect, as I have neither seen nor heard them, I am unable to say.

cio,

cio, had a very fine effect, and were extremely grateful to the remaining friends of Handel's talents and opera administration. This drama continued in run till Christmas, and was performed fourteen times in November and December; and, 1748. In January eight times more; an uncommon number of representations for any opera, old or new, during this period!

While this opera was in run, at the great theatre, there was an attempt at another: L' INGRATITUDE PUNITA, in the little theatre, by some discontented and unemployed performers, who, however, were only able to support their rebellion during two representations: January 26th and February 2d. At the other theatre Reginelli was still first man, and the rest were chiefly the same as have been already mentioned, except that Galli was engaged, who, by her performance in Handel's Judas Maccabæus, had sung herself so much into favour, as to be thought a considerable acquisition at the Opera-house. The season, however, went on heavily; and the Earl of Middlesex was again a considerable loser by the undertaking. May the 14th, the house was shut up, after trying Enrico by Galuppi, Roxana by Lampugnani, and Dido and SEMIRAMIS by Hasse, in vain; for no Music can support an opera, without great and favourite singers. The Music of these two last operas was not entirely composed by Hasse, though printed under his name. There was at this time too much of the Scots catch, or cutting short the first of two notes in a melody, thus:

Ombra cara, sung by Casarini, is a charming air. Nel duol che prova, by Frasi, is innocent, and beautifully accompanied. It appears from Hasse's operas, where Emanuel Bach acquired his fine vocal taste in composing lessons, so different from the dry and laboured style of his father. Graun and Hasse were almost the only dramatic composers whose works the late King of Prussia would hear. There is a song in C minor, by Pergolesi, in this collection, that is not very striking. Neither he nor Hasse had yet found out the secret of exact phraseology. A subject begun in the symphony upon the first part of a bar, is by both frequently commenced, in the song, at the second. Rosalia and too frequent repetition of passages still subsisted, as did Da Capos. Page 121, there is a pleasant gay air by Lampugnani. Two pretty airs by Pasquali, for Galli; with a light and slight air by Hasse in Semiramide.

In Se vi lascio, the first air of the opera last-mentioned, the enforcing a single note was new, and has been since often adopted. It is almost the sole merit of this song, which is a minuet composed of passages that are now very common. Consola il mio martire, is a fine cantabile, by Lampugnani. We have there a passage which the French introduced on all occasions for a long time after:

In the autumn of this year, serious operas being discontinued, a new company of comic singers was brought hither from Italy, for the first time, by Signor Croza. These performers, consisting of Pertici, Laschi, and Guadagni, then very young, for first man; Frafi, and afterwards Mellini, for serious woman; and the comic female parts by the wives of Pertici and Laschi, the two best buffo actors I ever saw, formed a very good troop; and in the comic operas of La Comedia in Comedia, Orazio, Don Calascione, Gli tre Cicisbei ridicoli, &c. composed by Latilla, Natale Resta, and Ciampi, who came over as maestro to the company, pleased the public, and filled the theatre, very successfully, during the whole season (y).

1749. Besides the operas already mentioned, La Finta Frascatana, Il Giramondo, La Pace in Europa, were brought out in the

(y) Some notice seems due here to this new and ingenious species of dramatic Music; but as it is of the same kind as that of intermezzi, which have a distinct article elsewhere; and as the composers will be duly mentioned as masters of the Neapolitan School, I shall here only observe, that of the three first opere buffe, which have been mentioned, the Music of Don Calascione, by Latilla, was much the best; the whole being truly characteristic and charming. Till the Buona Figliuola, nothing equal to it was produced, except Il Filosofo di Campagna, which is less comic, though more elegant. Gli tre Cicisbei ridicoli had likewise great comic merit; but this species of composition was now so new, and the acting of Pertici and Laschi, so excellent, and so fully engaged the attention, that critics had little leisure left for a severe examination of the Music.

spring,

spring, but as they were pasticcios of little merit, and withdrawn after one or two performances, their names hardly deserve a place in opera records.

At the beginning of the next season, in November 1749, upon a quarrel with the manager, Signor Croza, there was a schism at the great theatre, and the composer, with the principal singers withdrew, and erected their standard at the little theatre in the Hay-market, where they performed a new comic-opera set by Ciampi, called Il Negligente, nine times.

1750. The latter end of January, a burletta, called MADAMA CIANA, composed by Latilla, in 1744, for Venice, where it had an uncommon success, was so coldly received on our stage, that it was withdrawn after the second representation. This disappointment has frequently happened in transplanting favourite operas of the comic kind; for, except the Buona Figlioula, the productions which had obtained the greatest applause and celebrity in their own country, have had the least favour shewn them here. This may be partly ascribed to a difference of taste in things of humour; but more, I believe, to our natural aversion to the being told what we should admire.

On the failure of this burletta, after two performances of Don Calascione, ADRIANO IN SIRIA, a new serious opera set by Ciampi, was attempted; but as no new serious singers were arrived, and Guadagni, then a young and wild performer, and Frasi, performed the principal parts, after six thin houses, it was superseded for the comic-operas of the preceding winter. Indeed, it was performed April 27th, for Laschi's benefit, but by way of farce; after this opera he found it necessary to add to the night's entertainment Pergolesi's charming intermezzo, LA SERVA PADRONA, which was the first time of its being heard in this kingdom. Another opera, set by Ciampi, called Il Trionfo di Camilla, was brought out, but lived only two nights. The airs are full of common-place passages; indeed none are printed but those of Giacomazzi and Frasi. The productions of Ciampi strike me now as they did near forty years ago: they are not without merit; he had fire and abilities, but there seems something wanting, or redundant, in all his compositions;
I never

I never saw one that quite satisfied me, and yet there are good passages in many of them. Adriano in Siria was composed for second-rate fingers, and the Music is of the same kind. There is more spirit and effect in the air: Infelice in van mi lango, than in any other of that opera. The duet and cantabile air, however, have merit. The comic songs of Il negligenti are infinitely better than his serious, and convince me that his genre was buffo, for which he came over. La mia crudel tiranna, sung by Laschi in this burletta, is charming, and had always great applause. The second air: Che bel contento è questo, is comic, and spirited; the subject of the third, is taken from Pergolesi.

The arrival of GIARDINI in London, in the spring of this year, forms a memorable æra in the instrumental Music of this kingdom. His first performance in public was at a benefit concert for Cuzzoni, May the 18th, at the little theatre in the Hay-market; where, as this was her third arrival in this country, and she was grown old, poor, and almost deprived of voice, by age and infirmities, there was but little company; yet, when Giardini played a solo of Martini of Milan's composition, the applause was so long and loud, that I never remember to have heard such hearty and unequivocal marks of approbation at any other musical performance whatever. Further notice will be taken of the effects of his superiority on the violin in pursuing the progress of that instrument in this country. Poor Cuzzoni returned to the Continent after this unprofitable concert, more miserable than she came; and is said to have died in a hospital or workhouse, at Bologna, in the utmost wretchedness.

This spring, Dr. Croza, the manager of the opera, after having a personal benefit, April 7th, ran away, leaving the performers and innumerable tradespeople, and others, his creditors; and May 15th, an advertisement appeared in the Daily Advertiser, signed Henry Gibbs, a tea-merchant, in Covent-garden, offering a reward of £. 30 to any one who would secure his person. This event put an end to operas of all kinds, for some time.

The following plates will shew the divisions and refinements which were brought into favour about the middle of the present century.

DIVISIONS

CARESTINI in Diana and Endymion 1740.

MOSCOVITA in the same Opera.

MONTICELLI in Gianguir. 1742.

GALUPPI in Enrico
1743.

In D?

GALUPPI
in Sirhace.

LAMPUGNANI in Alceste 1744.

LAMPUGNANI

in Alceste

MONTICELLI

in D^o.Bravura for the same Singer in Alfonso 1744.VISCONTI in Nerone 1753.RICCIARELLI in Ipermestra 1754.MINGOTTI in Ezio
by PEREZ, 1755.

In 1753 and 1754, serious operas, after languishing in poverty and disgrace from the departure of Monticelli, in 1746, were again attempted under the management of Signor Vaneschi. And in November, the theatre was opened with pasticcios, and revived operas, performed by a company of singers, to which the public manifested no great partiality. During this year, and the beginning of 1754, NERONE, a pasticcio; Galuppi's Enrico; DIDONE by Ciampi; Artaserse, a pasticcio; Admeto, by Handel; and Attilio, by Jomelli, were all received with great indifference, as performed by Serafini, the first man, with little voice, though a good actor; Visconti, first woman, but now Passeè; with Ranieri, Albuzio, and the Passerini and Frafi; nor could the united powers and sum-total of attraction, of these singers, keep the manager out of debt, or hardly out of jail, till the arrival of MINGOTTI, who, in the autumn of 1754, revived the favour of our lyric theatre, with considerable splendor (z).

The theatre opened with the new troop, and under Vaneschi's government, November 9th, with IPERMESTRA, an opera composed by Hasse and Lampugnani, which had a run of eleven nights before Christmas, and was several times performed between other operas, afterwards. There is a charming plaintive air of this opera, by Hasse, in the printed collection: Tu sai ch' io sono amante, which Mingotti used to sing admirably; there are likewise pleasing bravura airs by both the composers, in the fashion of the times, which

(z) The Music is not always without merit, when operas are unsuccessful; the public in general is more able to judge of extraordinary vocal powers, than of good composition. Only a single air in the opera of Nerone was printed, it was composed by Perez, is extremely rapid, and was sung by Visconti. But the Didone of Ciampi is the most agreeable of all this composer's serious operas that were performed on our stage; here he is more frequently new, as well as graceful, than formerly. In Attilio Regolo, by Jomelli, the first air, sung by Serafini, is a pleasing minuet, but now become common. The next, sung by Visconti, is at present somewhat familiar; as is the third and fourth. The subsequent air is a cantabile, in a grand style of singing, but thinly accompanied: Jomelli had not yet been in Germany, where more harmony and contrivance were expected. It seems, however, worth recording, that a scene of recitative, in the part of Serafini, was encored every night during the run of this opera; the only instance of the kind that I remember. Senesino was extremely admired and applauded in many scenes of recitative, but I never heard of his being encored. It was in the last scene of Jomelli's opera, which ends without an air, that Regulus, determined to return to Carthage, addresses the Roman people who endeavoured to prevent his departure, in the recitative which had so uncommon an effect, beginning: Romani, addio. Siano i congedi estremi degni di noi, &c.

differs but little from the present. Galuppi's Penelope was revived, and performed three or four times at Christmas, but with so many changes, that it was rather a pasticcio, than the uniform production of one master. Only two of the new airs were printed: the first, Se non ti moro allato, is admirable in the pathetic style; and the other lively, natural, and pleasing. These are by Haffé.

1755. In January SIROE, a new opera by Lampugnani, had a run of nine nights. The Music is light, airy, and pleasant. It wants dignity, as is usual with the compositions of this master, but it is never vulgar or tedious; it is the Music of a gay man of the world; no study or labour appear, though fashion or elegance are never wanting. This opera was succeeded, February 4th, by RICCI-MERO, composed by Galuppi, except the first air in the printed collection, which is by Leo, and a good one. The rest of the Music is still new and excellent, though not quite so fresh now as that of EZIO, the next new opera, by Perez, which is in general good Music, that still stands its ground. Sventurata non ho più pace, sung by Mingotti, has passages of bravura not of very easy execution. Ecco se miei catene, sung by Ricciarelli, is a pathetic air, excellently composed; and Ab non son io che parlo, is a fine air of spirit. The rest are admirable. There are two airs by Haffé in the collection, of an inferior style. This opera, which had a run of eleven nights, carried the manager well through the season, which ended June 7th.

At this time Giardini led the band, in which he introduced new discipline, and a new style of playing, much superior in itself, and more congenial with the poetry and Music of Italy, than the languid manner of his predecessor Festing; who, except one or two seasons, when Veracini was at the head of the orchestra, had led the opera band from the time that Castrucci was dismissed, till the arrival of Mingotti. Ricciarelli, the first man, was a neat and pleasing performer, with a clear, flexible, and silver-toned voice, but so much inferior to Mingotti, both in singing and acting, that he was never in very high favour. Ciprandi, the tenor, was possessed of much taste and feeling; and Colomba Mattei, the second woman, was both both a charming singer and a spirited and intelligent actress, who soon after became a great favourite, as first woman. Among these singers, the Curioni, as third woman, and Mondini, with a baritone voice, between a tenor and base, brought up the rear (a).

In November this year, nearly the same company appeared in the ANDROMACA of Jomelli. The first air of this opera: Si soffre un cor trianno, has considerable merit; but the close of the allegro is now old-fashioned. A great part of this opera was composed by Jomelli in his first manner; but originality and the hand of a master always appear. The air: Eccoti il figlio, as sung and acted by Mingotti, was truly dramatic and affecting. The whole is very superior to almost all cotemporary productions.

Upon the success of this drama a damp was thrown by the indisposition of Mingotti, during which, Frasi was called upon to perform her part in that opera, as she had been twice in Ricciandro, the preceding season; when suspicions arising that Mingotti's was a mere dramatic and political cold, the public was much out of humour, till she resumed her function in Metastasio's admirable drama of Demofonte, in which she acquired more applause, and augmented her theatrical consequence beyond any period of her performance in England. The air, in the grand cantabile style, by Hasse, beginning: Se tutti i mali miei, was in the highest degree pathetic, and the audience seemed now to feel her powers of expression, for the first time. Her style of singing was always grand, and such as discovered her to be a perfect mistress of her art; and she was a most judicious and complete actress, extending her intelligence to the poetry, and every part of the drama; yet her greatest admirers allowed that her voice and manner would have been still more irresist-

(a) About this time the GIORDANI family, consisting of five performers, brothers and sisters, exhibited comic-operas at the little theatre in the Hay-market. They performed the burlettas of L'Allegatrice, and La Cameriera Accorta so well, that the whole troop was engaged at Covent-garden, where the eldest sister was so admired, not only as a singer but actress, that in the comic-opera of Gli Amanti Gelosi, she was frequently encored two or three times in the same air, which she was able to vary so much by her singing and acting, that it appeared at every repetition, a new song, and she another performer. The Music of this burletta, by Cocchi, was not of the first class; however the part of Spilletta was so admirably performed, that it became the general name of the company.

ible, if she had had a little more female grace and softness. The performance in men's parts, however, obviated every objection that her greatest enemy could make to her abilities, either as an actress, or singer. In the anonymous Demofoonte that was now performed, the first air is an imitation of Handel's minuet in Ariadne, not very well done: the air itself is much better. These cookeries are generally intended to flatter Handel's admirers; but they never succeed: every note that is added, changed, or omitted, disappoints the ear, and offends reminiscence. Even when the melody of Return, O God of Hosts, was sung to Italian words, at the opera, by Monticelli, and Pacchierotti, in nearly the same notes, the different style of singing from what the public had been used to, dissatisfied, instead of charming, the audience. For the rest of the Music in this Demofoonte that has been printed, except Hasse's Se tutti i mali miei, either Mr. Walsh preferred the shortest songs to better, that would have filled more plates, or it was very ill selected; as there is nothing striking in the subject or treatment of the other airs (b). The opera of Demofoonte came out December the 9th, and in the course of the winter was performed more than twenty times, running constantly, till the month of March, the next year; when, after trying Riccimero, and a pasticcio OLIMPIADE, chiefly by Galuppi, it was performed five times more in April (c).

1756. TITO MANLIO, an opera composed by Abos, a good master of the Neapolitan school, was performed but once; the parts being probably ill cast, and the songs unfit for any but the fingers for whom they were originally composed (d). But Lampugnani's Si-

(b) At this time Mingotti and Giardini not allowing the opera-copyist to dispose of the favourite songs to Walsh upon the usual easy terms, had them printed elsewhere; this was the case with Il Re-Pastore, some of the songs in Demofoonte, and other operas.

(c) Of the favourite songs of this Olimpiade, the first is an agreeable air by Galuppi. The second, by Minati, despicable! The third, a pretty minuet by Galuppi. Then follows Superbo di me stesso, a pleasing air by the same composer. Grandi è ver, by Pergolesi, but not in his best manner, nor without Scotisms. And lastly, an agreeable air in a comic style, that was sung by Frasi.

(d) The favourite airs of this opera were printed by Walsh, though none were favoured by the public. The first air, however, is pleasing: Se che più amor, but has too much repetition and Scots snap of the first of two notes. The second, is languid and monotonous. The third, a larghetto, is good and theatrical. The last air, sung by Frasi, has the Neapolitan comic cast; but none

roe, and Haffé's Ipermestra, which were now revived, had a better fate, and continued in run till the end of the season, June 19th.

Vaneschi had been manager from the time that serious operas were renewed, in 1753, till now; when his difference with Mingotti had occasioned as many private quarrels and public feuds, as the disputed abilities of Handel and Bononcini, or talents of Faustina and Cuzzoni, had done thirty years before. The frequent contentions with Mingotti, which shook his throne, had prejudiced the public against both. On a toujours tort in these disputes; and addressing the town is but making bad worse, for not a word which either party says is believed (e). These squabbles ended in Vaneschi's being a bankrupt, a prisoner in the Fleet, and afterwards a fugitive; and in Mingotti and Giardini acquiring, for a while, the sovereignty in the opera kingdom, by which gratification of ambition they were soon brought to the brink of ruin, as others had been before them.

Vaneschi having withdrawn, à la fourdine, during the summer, in the same manner as his predecessor Dr. Croza, nearly the same company of singers went through the next winter, with great éclat, under the direction of Giardini and Mingotti. The operas then performed were ALESSANDRO NELL' INDIE, a pasticcio, till January 22, 1757. After which IL RE PASTORE, an excellent composition by Haffé, was brought out, and had eleven representations; ANTIGONO, by Nicola Conforto, twelve; ROSMIRA, by Giardini, six; and EURISTEO, by Galuppi, five.

But though great applause was acquired, and appearances were favourable, yet the profits to the managers were so far from solid, none of the fire of that school flashes in these songs, by Abos. There was one air, by Lampugnani, introduced, in which there is spirit, and something folâtre in the symphony and accompaniment, peculiar to that composer.

(e) Mrs. L, afterwards lady B, a zealous friend and protectress of Mingotti, having applied to the Hon. General C* for a decided opinion concerning the disputes between that singer and Va-neschi, stating the case very minutely in a long detail of facts; the general, after listening a long while with seeming attention, a little discomposed the lady, when she finished, by asking, with seeming ignorance, and real indifference, "And pray, ma'am, who is Madam Mingotti?"—"Get out of my house!" cries the lady, "you shall never hear her sing another note at my concerts, as long you live."

that

that they found themselves involved at the end of the season in such difficulties, that they were glad to resign their short-lived honours, and shrink into a private station.

After the resignation of Giardini and Mingotti, the nobility having paid too dear for their experience, to wish again to resume the government of so expensive and froward a family, the state now remained without a chief, till Mattei and her husband Trombetta made interest for the chance of speedy ruin, and obtained the management.

During the whole time that Mingotti performed, no master had been invested with the title of opera composer; but Music already composed for other theatres on the Continent, was procured, and by the professional abilities of Mingotti, and the arrangements and additions of Giardini, it was made to answer the purpose of new productions on our stage. Mattei, however, engaged Signor GIOACCHINO COCCHI of Naples, as composer to the opera, during her administration. The season was began November 8th, with a pasticcio called DEMETRIO, which was arranged and conducted by this master; who supplied it with two or three new airs, and a pleasing finale.

Mattei now assumed the dignity of first woman, and POTENZA, an uncertain singer, and an affected actor, with more taste than voice, supplied the place of Ricciarelli (f). Giardini's successor, as leader of the band, was PINTO (g).

The

(f) This performer found so little to do on his return to the Continent, that he engaged to teach and travel with admiral (afterwards Sir Robert) Harland's family, with whom he returned to England, about the year 1760, continuing to reside in the house and to instruct Miss Harland, whose performance in bravura and high notes, was brought to as high a pitch as Agujari's, and very much admired.

(g) This excellent performer on the violin was born of Italian parents, in England. He was a miraculous player on his instrument, when a boy. And, long before manhood came on, was employed as the leader of large bands in concerts. He was at this time, however, very idle and inclining more to the fine gentleman, than the musical student, kept a horse, was always in boots of a morning, with a switch in his hand, instead of a fiddle-stick; till the arrival of Giardini, whose superiority to all the performers he had ever heard inclined him to think it necessary to practise, which he did for some time with great diligence. With a very powerful hand and a marvellous quick eye, he was in general so careless a player that he performed the most difficult Music that could be set before him, better the first time he saw it, than ever after. He was then obliged to look at the notes with some care and attention; but, afterwards, trusting to his memory, he frequently committed mistakes, and missed the expression of

The opera of Demetrio was performed fourteen times without interruption, and continued to run till January 10th, 1758, when it gave way to ZENOBIA, an opera entirely set by Cocchi. This was performed but six times, before its representation was discontinued for SOLIMANO, a pasticcio, which was performed alternately with Zenobia and Demetrio, till March 14th, at which time another new opera, by Cocchi, was brought out, called ISSIPILE; and, April 1st, still another, entitled CRESO, which, with those already mentioned, completed the subscription; and June 5th, the theatre closed with Demetrio, the Alpha and Omega of the season.

To enable the musical reader to keep pace with the times, I shall describe the effect which the composition of these operas had on myself and others at the time of performance; indeed, my own memory has been assisted, and opinion confirmed by a recent perusal of the airs that were printed.

The songs of Demetrio are chiefly anonymous, but several of them were in very great favour, particularly: Voi leggete in ogni cori; Ab se un cor barbaro, sung by Mattei with great energy and feeling; the duet likewise: Caro spiegar vorrei, and the finale: Deh risplende, by Cocchi, were justly admired and applauded.

Few of the airs of Zenobia surpass mediocrity; they are monotonous in style and passages. The best was Resta in pace, which Mattei rendered interesting by her singing, though in itself, it is tame and languid.

The two airs of Solimano, by Perez, that were printed, are charming. The first: Ab se in ciel, is full of graceful and beautiful passages; and the second: Infelice abbandonata, is one of the most pleasing bravuras of that style and time. A very pleasing air, by Bertoni, follows: Non so disciogliere, which has been sung to English of passages, which if he had thought worth looking at, he would have executed with certainty. After leading at the opera, whenever Giardini laid down the trunchion, he was engaged as first violin at Drury-lane theatre where he led during many years. He married for his first wife Sybilla a German under-finger at the opera, and sometimes employed in burlettas at Drury-lane. After her decease, he married the celebrated Miss Brent, and, quitting England, settled in Ireland, where he died about three or four years ago.

words.

words in one of our theatres. The last composition of the collection, and of Walsh's ninth volume, is Cangia il fine, a short and favourite duet in Handel's opera of Amadigi. Iffipile is in the same style as Zenobia. Cocchi came from Naples, a country where good composers abounded; he had good taste, and knowledge in counterpoint, and in all the mechanical parts of his profession; but his invention was very inconsiderable, and even what he used from others, became languid in passing through his hands. The composers named in the pasticcio of Creso, are Abos, Bertoni, and Cocchi; but no one air was distinguished from another by genius, or the applause it received from the public (b).

November 11th, the Opera-house opened with ATTALO, a pasticcio, represented eight times, successively, by the performers of the preceding season. There is a very pleasing short duet by Cocchi at the beginning of the collection: Sempre facciam contenti. After this, a spirited bravura air, by Aurificchio, an excellent Roman composer, who died young, and of whose compositions this is the only air that was ever sung on our stage. Then a cantabile, sung by Tenducci, who was just arrived. This air was set by Caffarelli the singer. It is in a fine style of grand pathetic, such as, six years after, Manzoli's Caro mio bene addio was written in, by Pescetti. The next is a pleasing graziosa by Perez. An air in minuet time for Calori, by Potenza, in which the composer and performer were well matched; and an anonymous air in agreeable common-place, sung by Portenza, terminates the collection.

After this, the favourite opera of Demetrio was resumed and continued till February 3d,

1759; when CIRO RICONOSCIUTO, a new opera by Cocchi,

(b) About this time, Walsh published a collection of songs by Vinci: among which is that admirable, and still favourite air, Vo solcando. The second air: I doni non voglio, has character and spirit; but the passages are too frequently repeated. There are grace and facility in Chi vive amante, which were then new, as was the monotonous base; but now we find nothing new in this air. Barbaro prendi e vena is excellent, and has been the model of many subsequent fine songs for the theatre. Luci spietate is a pretty air for a small singer; the triple repetition of the same passage makes an impression, and seems impassioned. Qui l'ombra pallida, is finely set; and the quick part of the air has energy and passion in it. He repeats the same passage often in the same notes with good effect, but seldom in rosalia.

was performed for the first time. This is the best of his productions during his residence in England. Rende mi il figlio mio, is happily set, and was still more happily sung, by Mattei. This air is full of spirit and passion, and perfectly suited to the situation of the character by which it was performed. This is one of the first capital opera airs without a second part and Da Capo. The duet has considerable merit, but too many of the passages are alla scozzese. This drama was represented during a great part of the remainder of the season. It was in this opera that Tenducci was first noticed on our stage; and, though a young performer, and only second in rank, he had a much better voice and manner of singing than Potenza, to whom he gave precedence. Mattei afforded the audience great pleasure in this opera; as her manner of singing, though not quite in the grand gusto, was extremely amiable and pleasing; her figure was unexceptionable; and her acting, in some scenes of passion and distress, acquired her as great applause as her singing, particularly in the air Rende mi il figlio mio, which was constantly encored. She was a scholar of Perez and Bertoni, and sung many songs of their composition, which they themselves had taught her, in an exquisite manner.

Quilici, a good musician with a base voice, was added to the band of singers this season, and Calori and Laura Rosa were the second and third women.

February 20th, IL TEMPIO DELLA GLORIA, set by Cocchi, was performed for the first and last time. Then Ciro and Demetrio were performed alternately, till the 24th of April, when FARNACE, set by Perez, was brought on the stage, and had sixteen representations, the season being terminated with it on the 22d of June. The first air is a very brilliant bravura, with passages of rapid iteration which few singers are now able to execute agreeably. The second air: Se vivo ben mio, is elegant and full of grace. The third, is a long and laboured song of two characters, pathetic and spirited, by Cocchi; in which he seems to have done his best to no great purpose. The next, a very agreeable song of spirit, by Perez.

The following season began with VOLOGESO, a pasticcio in which CORNACCHINI, a new first man, superseded Potenza; the public, however, gained but little by the change, as his voice was not good, and his style of singing by no means grand or captivating. The first air in Vologeso is Cocchi's, and as good as any of his spirited songs; the Scots snaps excepted. Perez's song (the second) is full of little else, but that little is good, and worthy of so great a master. The opening of the third song, by the same composer, though a slow minuet only, has dignity in it, with grace and agreeable melody and effects. The next air, by Jomelli, is very pleasing, and so much in Perez's style, that it is manifest they were both of the same school. The Scots snap seems to have been contagious in that school at this time; for all the three masters concerned in this opera are lavish of it. The duet, by Jomelli, is extremely pleasing, and the first I have found on the present dramatic models of dialogue, with only bursts of passion, in two parts. Vologeso and Farnace supplied all the variety of composition that was given till the 15th of January,

1760; when LA CLEMENZA DI TITO, a new opera set by Cocchi was brought out, which discovered no new resources in this composer. In March, ARMINIO, a pasticcio, was performed; and in May, ANTIGONA, another. All the airs in Arminio that Mattei sung, were composed by Perez. And among these, Nel pensar al gran cimento, is one of the most pleasing and original bravuras I ever heard. There are two duets in this opera, which pleased; the first easy enough to be sung à table, and without accompaniment; the second dialogued and dramatic. Se l'amor tuo, is an elegant graziosa, which has served for a model since to several others, by different composers. In Antigona, a bravura air by Galuppi, spirited, but now not new; one by Conforto full of Scoticisms; a bravura by Cocchi, in his best manner; and a duet by the same composer, in Solimano, constitute the whole of the collection that was published by Walsh under the title of Antigona. At the end of May, ERGINDA new set by Cocchi was likewise brought out; but after three representations, to very thin houses, the season was closed, June 7th, without its having afforded much rapture to the public, or profit to the impresaria; who not having been able to procure a capital singer to perform the first man's part, and Cocchi's invention, which was never fertile, being now exhausted, the season passed on rather heavily. Indeed, Mr. Gallini, as first dancer this year, received great applause, and in a pas seul was frequently encored, which I never remember to have happened to any other dancer. The Affelin was then the principal female dancer, and a favourite of the public.

6

rapture

The next season, 1760 and 1761, while Mattei was still in possession of the supreme power, the opera troops were reinforced, not only with ELISI, a new first man, of great reputation and abilities, but by a complete company for comic operas, consisting of Paganini buffo Caricato, Tedeschini second, Sorbellone serious man; Signora Paganini first buffa, Eberardi second, and Calori serious woman.

With these forces the campaign was opened, November 22d, when IL MONDO DELLA LUNA, a comic opera by Galuppi, was performed. The Music of this opera, the first in which the PAGANINI sung, is in a truly pleasant and agreeable comic style, particularly: Se l' uomini sospirano—Quando si trovano—O come è dolce amar, which, excellent in themselves, by the captivating manner in which they were sung and acted by the Paganini, became doubly interesting. In this opera Tedeschini, who afterwards became an eminent singing-master, appeared for the first time, in the part of second buffo.

With the Music and performance of this burletta the town seemed so pleased, that the new serious singer, Elisi, was kept in reserve till December, when he first appeared in ARIANNA E TESEO, a pasticcio, in which some admirable songs of Galuppi's composition were introduced, particularly: Frà stupido e pensoso, an aria parlante, in a new and fine style of dramatic Music, in which the accompaniments, in two of three flow triplets after each note in the base, had a new and fine effect. Eberardi's pleasing air by Scarlatti: No non mi vuol si misero, with her amiable manner of singing, was much applauded, and generally encored. La speme amabile, one of the best airs which Cocchi ever composed for Mattei, was admirably executed ; and Elisi's second air : Vorrei spiegar l' affanno, by Jomelli, was both written and sung in a grand style.

This opera, in which Mattei performed the first woman's part, was very much applauded by crowded houses a great part of the season. ELISI, though a great singer, was still a greater actor : his figure was large and majestic, and he had a great compass of voice. He was fond of distant intervals, of fourteen or fifteen notes, and took them well. Several airs of Jomelli, which he introduced in different operas, were calculated to shew the dexterity and accuracy with which he could form these remote intervals. SORBELLONI, a young singer of limited abilities, with an exquisitely toned voice, was an agreeable second singer, and EBERARDI gave great pleasure in the simplicetta and innocente way, both in the serious and comic operas of these times. Tenducci had quitted London, but Calori still remained.

1761. In January, was brought out IL FILOSOFO DI CAMPAGNA, a comic opera, composed by Galuppi. This burletta surpassed in musical merit all the comic operas that were performed in England, till the Buona Figliuola. And its success was proportioned to its merit. Though Signor Paganini was but a coarse first man, his wife, Eberardi, and Sorbelloni, performed their parts very much to the satisfaction of the public. The simple and elegant air : La bella che adora, sung by Sorbelloni, from the mere tone of his voice, was always applauded ; Eberardi's innocent manner of singing : La pastorella al prato, interested every hearer ; and the lively and playful air : Donne, donne siamo nate, was sung in a way so piquant and agreeable, that the applause Paganini acquired by it amounted almost to acclamation. Other parts of the Music were sufficiently good to support bad singing ; for the base song : Ho per lei in mezzo al core, was always heard with pleasure, though sung by Paganini, almost without a voice. This opera had an uninterrupted run of fifteen nights (c). Indeed, the airs of every kind, in Il Filosofo di ed with so much buffoonery and so little good Music, that it was never performed again.

(c) During which time Paganini got up a new comic opera for her benefit, called I tre Gobbi rivali, which abounded

Campagna, were in such favour, that Paganini was generally encored in whatever she sung. This performer, though not young when she came hither from Berlin, increased in reputation so much during the run of this opera, that when it was her turn to have a benefit, such a crowd assembled as I never remember to have seen on the like occasion, before, or since; indeed, not one third of the company that presented themselves at the Opera-house doors were able to obtain admission. Caps were lost, and gowns torn to pieces, without number or mercy, in the struggle to get in. Ladies in full dress, who had sent away their servants and carriages, were obliged to appear in the streets and walk home in great numbers without caps or attendants. Luckily the weather was fine, and did not add to their distress by rain or wind; though their confusion was greatly augmented by its being broad day light, and the streets full of spectators, who could neither refrain from looking or laughing at such splendid and uncommon street-walkers.

After running Arianna from December 2d 1760, to February 7th 1761, TITO MANLIO, a new opera by Cocchi, was brought out by the serious company; but it being found that Arianna, notwithstanding its many representations, had still more attractions, this opera, after three or four trials, was wholly laid aside, and Arianna resumed, till DIDONE ABANDONATA, a serious opera by Perez and Galuppi, in which Elisi had some admirable songs, could be got ready; and this opera, by returning now and then to Arianna, carried the impresaria reputably and profitably through the season, as far as concerned the Saturday nights. Didone Abandonata was chiefly by Perez, with two or three airs by Galuppi; indeed, all the airs that were sung by Elisi, in this opera, seem to have been composed by Galuppi, and those of Mattei, by her master Perez; among which: Va crescendo il mio tormento, is a graceful and pathetic minuet, and Son regina an air of great spirit; but those airs which we have since heard Agujari, Gabriele, and the Mara, sing to the same words, make us forget or despise all others. On the Tuesdays, besides the favourite operas of Il Mondo nella Luna, and Il Filosofo di Campagna, at the end of April, LA PESCATRICE, in which which Paganini had some very capital songs, was brought out, and well attended till the end of the season. The Music to this burletta is extremely pleasing, and many of the airs, sung by Paganini and Eberardi were constantly encored: Un pescatori me l'a fatta brutta, of the first, and Sono amante, of the second. No composer is mentioned either in the book of the words, or printed copy of the Music; but it must have been chiefly by Galuppi and Latilla, as there were no other masters at this time who wrote so well in this style.

The season closed, June 6th, with Arianna e Teseo, to which was added a Grand Sérénata, the Music by Cocchi; which was not sufficiently admired to encourage the manager to perform it more than twice.

In the autumn of this year, the arrival of her Majesty, with the royal nuptials and coronation, filled the capital with more company than perhaps had ever been assembled there since its foundation. And this may be safely asserted, not from its own increasing magnitude and population, but national curiosity, to see a young prince and princess of whom fame had published so much good, that a long and uninterrupted national felicity was expected during their auspicious reign.

September 19th, an occasional drama was exhibited at the King's theatre, called LE SPERANZE DELLA TERRA; after which, there was no other performance there till October 13th, when a new serious opera, by Cocchi, appeared called ALESSANDRO NELL' INDIE, which had nine representations, continuing in run till Christmas.

The two operas of Tito Manlio and Alessandro nell' Indie, by Cocchi, are in the same style as his former productions, in which, however, his favourite and usual passages afforded less pleasure for want of novelty. He had two admirable singers to write for, Elissi and Mattei; yet their performance could not procure any of his airs an encore in the Opera-house, or popularity out of it. In Tito Manlio: Padre con questo amplesso, a cantabile; Prendi l'ultimo addio; and the duet, are the best. And these have as much merit as he ever mustered on any occasion in this country.

The

The comic troop began with the favourite opera of Il Filosofo di Campagna, by command of their Majesties, which being the first time the royal pair had honoured the lyric theatre with their presence, occasioned such an unusual crowd of claimants for admission, as could not have been gratified with places, if instead of our diminutive Opera-house we had had a theatre of equal magnitude with the Coleseo at Rome.

November 7th, a new burletta was first performed, entitled IL MERCATO DI MALMANTILE, by Galuppi and Fischietti. The chief part of this Music is worthy of the fertile pen of Galuppi, which succeeded equally well in serious and in comic songs; there is a spirit and a sportiveness in the airs inferior in no respect to the preceeding operas. Fischietti's songs have likewise considerable merit of the same kind.

1762. The remainder of the season was filled up with the following operas; serious: TOLOMEO, a pasticcio, which had ten representations. The whole collection of songs that was printed of this opera consisted only of three: Se mai senti, a fine cantabile by Galuppi, that was sung by Elisi; a bravura by Ciampi: Il nocchier, not very common, for Mattei; and another bravura for Elisi, by an anonymous composer, that was good for nothing. The next opera was LA DISFATTA DI DARIO, of which, being a pasticcio that was acted but three times, and never printed, I can give no account. And, lastly, ATTILIO REGOLO, by Jomelli. There is some excellent composition in this opera, which had been produced in Italy chiefly to display the extent of voice, and powers of expression of Elisi. Non so sfrenare il pianto, is in a fine style of cantabile, which was afterwards imitated by Pescetti, for Manzoli, in Caro mio bene addio.

The comic operas this spring were BERTOLDO, by Ciampi; with LE NOZZE DI DORINA, and LA FAMIGLIA IN SCOMPILIA by Cocchi. Bertoldo had been performed in 1751 or 1752, when Lascchi, Pertici, and Guadagni were here. The two first airs in the second collection that were now sung by Paganini, are gay and pleasing. Felton's ground was introduced, at this time, in the opera of Bertoldo, by Eberardi; but was become too common and vulgar for an opera audience, though sung by a favourite performer. The air: Felice io sono, originally composed for Guadagni, and published in the first collection, is natural and elegant. Cocchi was quite exhausted long before his comic operas were produced. His invention did not flow in torrents, it was but a rill at its greatest swell; and now, with hardly a single smile upon any one of the airs, his heavy and thread-bare passages were doubly wearisome. Indeed, his resources in the serious style were so few, that he hardly produced a new passage after the first year of his arrival in England; but in attempting to clothe comic ideas in melody, or to paint ridiculous situations by the effects of an orchestra, he was quite contemptible. Without humour, gaiety, or creative powers of any kind, his comic opera was the most melancholy performance I ever heard in an Italian theatre (d).
of

(d) When Cocchi first arrived in England, he brought over the new passages that were in favour at Rome and Naples, to which, however, he added so little from his own stock of ideas, that, by frequent repetition, the public was soon tired of them; and his publications in this country are now as much forgotten as if he had lived in the fifteenth century. Indeed, all the animation and existence they had, was conferred on them by the performance of Elisi and Mattei. He remained here long enough to save a considerable sum of money by teaching to sing. Plutarch informs us, that Dionysius the tyrant of Syracuse, when he had lost his kingdom, became a school-master, the common resource of opera composers and singers, who after being dethroned in the theatre, often submit to the same drudgery. Cocchi set an opera for Rome, called Adelaide, so early as the year 1743; Bajazette, another, in 1746; and Arminio, a third, in 1749. In 1753, he set Il Pazzo Glorioso, a comic opera for the theatre of S. Cassiano, in Venice. The operas he composed and arranged in England have been specified, till the summer of 1762, when his engagement, as oper a composer, ceased. In 1765, he compiled a serious pasticcio, called La Clemenza di Tito, in which he introduced a few of the songs from his own former opera of that name, which had been performed in 1760; and in 1771, he composed an opera called Semiramide Riconosciuta, and this was his Finale; but the nation had been too long accustomed to better Music to listen to it with much pleasure. About 1772, he retired to Venice, where he had been maestro of a conservatorio before his arrival in England; and there he still enjoys the fruits of his labours in ease and tranquillity. His wife, a Venetian, had been formerly a buffa singer on the stage, but never performed publicly in England; however, one night I was luckily present at Frasi's, when, after supper, she was prevailed on to sing, and treated the company, which was chiefly composed of Italians, with whom she was intimate, with a comic song of a very curious and uncommon kind: it seemed a practical example of the acceleration of notes in the time-table; for she began the first stanza of her song with semibreves, in a kind of slow psalmody; the second in minims, having two syllables to each note; then three, four, five, six, and so on, till the rapidity of notes and articulation of words were truly astonishing; and such as would have enabled her, had she been of a clamorous disposition, to communicate her opinions to her spouse, in times of domestic debate, to some tune.

But

But so full was the capital this winter, that if the Music and performance had been ever so despicable, the theatre would have been equally crowded. And since this period, operas have seldom been so contemptible as not to be an excuse for infinite crowds assembling in the Hay-market of a Saturday night, from the time of her Majesty's birth-day, till Whitsuntide. Indeed, it should seem as if that Music, singing, and dancing, which are detestable on a Tuesday night, by some latent cause or magic, were sure of being exquisite on a Saturday. The houses of parliament not sitting on that day may account for a little addition to the crowd, but the rest is certainly the work of Fashion.

At the close of this season Mattei retired from the stage, but continued the management of the opera another year. And perceiving a partiality in the public for comic operas, seems in her first arrangements to have neglected the serious, for which she provided no first woman; and the first man, who was to supply the place of Elisi, was not of the highest class. She had, indeed, engaged the DE AMICIS' family for burlettas, and Zingoni their maestro, with Giustinelli and the Cremonini, for the serious parts.

November 18th, 1762, the Opera-house opened with the comic opera of IL TUTORE E LA PUPILLA, a pasticcio, in which ANNA DE AMICIS captivated the public in various ways. Her figure and gestures were in the highest degree elegant and graceful; her countenance, though not perfectly beautiful, was extremely high-bred and interesting; and her voice and manner of singing, exquisitely polished and sweet. She had not a motion that did not charm the eye, or a tone but what delighted the ear. Indeed, she acted and sung for the whole family; for by her merits and good works, she covered the multitude of their sins, which would otherwise have had no remission (e).

GIUSTINELLI had a good voice, and sufficient merit to supply the place of second man on our stage in the serious operas, for several years after; the CREMONINI had more schooling, and attempted more than the Eberardi, as second woman; but was less amiable.

(e) The airs of this burletta are pleasing, characteristic, and truly comic.

Her voice, though a young woman, was in decay, and failed on all occasions of the least difficulty; which, however, did not prevent her from attempting passages that not only required more voice, but more abilities than she could boast.

CIARDINI, a soprano, the serious first man, being arrived, Mattei hastened to try his powers and those of such other performers as she could muster, in a serious opera; and had a pasticcio cooked up for the occasion, called ASTARTO RE DI TIRO, in which Ciardini, Giustinelli, and Quilici were the male singers; and the Cremonini, Valescchi, Carmignani, and Segantini, the female. Ciardini, the only performer of whose abilities any expectations were formed, disappointed every hope, by turning out a singer who seemed to have been possessed of no very capital powers, originally, but now wholly in decay (f).

1763. In January, a new comic pasticcio was brought on the stage, called LA CASCINA; and in February, another comic opera, composed by Galuppi, called LA CALAMITA DE' CUORI, which had in it some charming airs, that seem to have been originally intended for the display of all the enchanting powers of the young Anna De Amicis (g).

Though Mattei had made such a scanty provision of singers for a serious opera; yet perceiving, probably, how much Cocchi's limited powers of invention were exhausted, and that he had been of little use but in preparing pasticcios, for some time, she had engaged Mr. JOHN CHRISTIAN BACH, who had added new lustre to his name and family by his dramatic productions in Italy, and been appointed by the Empress Queen organist of the Duomo at Milan. On his arrival here, he was extremely mortified to find that he had no better singers to write for than Ciardini and the Cremonini, and for some time totally declined composing for our stage, being unwilling, as a stranger, to trust his reputation to such (f) A very pleasing air which Bach composed for him: Pupille vèzzose, is printed with the favourite songs of the burletta called La Calamita de' Cuori.

(g) Of this burletta, as well as the preceding, the elegant and interesting De Amicis was the chief support. The rest of the singing was so despicable, that only her songs have been printed.

performers.

performers. But, at length, having heard the De Amicis sing two or three serious songs in private, it suggested to him the idea of giving her the first woman's part in his serious opera; and having communicated his design to Mattei the impresaria, matters were soon arranged, and the De Amicis, who afterwards held the first rank among female singers in the serious operas of Naples and other great cities of Italy, was now first taken from the comic opera, and invested with the character of principal woman in the serious. And during the rest of the season, on Tuesday nights, she delighted the town as the representative of Thalia, and on Saturdays as that of Melpomene.

Mr. Bach's first opera in England, called ORIONE, O SIA DIANA VENDICATA, was honoured with the presence of their Majesties on the first night, February the 19th, 1763, and extremely applauded by a very numerous audience. Every judge of Music perceived the emanations of genius throughout the whole performance; but were chiefly struck with the richness of the harmony, the ingenious texture of the parts, and, above all, with the new and happy use he had made of wind-instruments: this being the first time that clarinets had admission in our opera orchestra. Their Majesties honoured the second representation likewise with their presence, and no other serious opera was wanting for near three months. On the 7th of May, however, ZANAIDA, a second serious opera by Mr. J. C. Bach, was performed, with which the season was closed, June 11th.

The principal songs of these two operas, though excellent, being calculated to display the compass of voice and delicate and difficult expression and execution of De Amicis, were not likely to become common or of much use out of the Opera-house (b).

(b) De Amicis was not only the first who introduced staccato divisions in singing on our stage, but the first singer that I had ever heard go up to E flat in altissimo, with true, clear, and powerful real voice. The Agujari, long after, ascended much higher, but in falset. The Danzi, now Madame Le Brun, went much higher than the Agujari, in real voice, of the same register as her middle notes. It seems a trick, however, which persons gifted with a fine voice of a common compass may learn: for Mrs. Sheridan, to my great astonishment, sung one night in my hearing Madame Le Brun's song of greatest compass, which goes up to B b in altissimo; and when this charming singer was in her highest practice, I never heard her attempt a note above B b, or C in alt. But I must own, that such tricks, such cork-cutting notes, as they were once well

The rest of the airs were so indifferently sung, that they were more admired as instrumental pieces, than compositions for the voice. But this excellent master soon convinced us that he possessed every requisite for a great musician : by the songs he afterwards composed in every style of good singing ; by his symphonies, quartets, and concertos for almost every species of instrument, as well as by his expressive and masterly performance on the piano forte. It is with pleasure I take this opportunity of doing justice to his talents and abilities. Mr. J. C. Bach having very early in life been deprived of the instructions of his father, the great Sebastian Bach, was for some time a scholar of his elder brother, the celebrated Charles Phil. Emanuel Bach, under whom he became a fine performer on keyed-instruments ; but on quitting him and going to Italy, where his chief study was the composition of vocal Music, he assured me, that during many years he made little use of a harpsichord or piano forte but to compose for or accompany a voice. When he arrived in England, his style of playing was so much admired, that he recovered many of the losses his hand had sustained by disuse, and by being constantly cramped and crippled with a pen ; but he never was able to reinstate it with force and readiness sufficient for great difficulties ; and in general his compositions for the piano forte are such as ladies can execute with little trouble ; and the allegros rather resemble bravura songs, than instrumental pieces for the dis-well called by a musical lady of high rank, are unworthy of a great singer, and always give me more pain than pleasure. Such notes may become a Canary-bird ; but they are not human ; and as a friendly warning to those who may aspire at such unnatural heights, my fair vocal readers will I hope pardon me, if I now stop them to relate a short story, well known in Italy, for the truth of which I will venture to risk my historical fidelity. " Lucca Fabris, a young singer with a soprano voice, who, at the age of twenty-four, the last of his life, was the delight and wonder of the Italian theatre. His voice and manner of singing were equally perfect, and he was able to contend with the celebrated Guadagni when at the summit of his glory ; till a fatal effort to sing a very high and difficult passage, which a Neapolitan composer had injudiciously and cruelly given him to execute in the great theatre of San Carlo, cost him his life. It is asserted that this master, merely to encourage him to try to surpass another singer, composed an air beyond his natural compass and powers of execution ; and though the unfortunate Fabris protested to him that he could only attempt it at the risk of his life, the master insisted on his performing it ; by which he burst a blood-vessel, that brought on a hæmorrhage, which all the art of medicine and surgery being unable to stop, soon put an end to his existence!" Essai sur la Mus. Tom. III. p. 317.

play

play of great execution. On which account, they lose much of their effect when played without the accompaniments, which are admirable, and so masterly and interesting to an audience, that want of hand, or complication in the harpsichord part, is never discovered.

There are many admirable airs in the operas he composed for our stage that long remained in favour. The richness of the accompaniments perhaps deserve more praise than the originality of the melodies; which, however, are always natural, elegant, and in the best taste of Italy at the time he came over. The Neapolitan school, where he studied, is manifest in his cantilena, and the science of his father and brother in his harmony. The operas of this master are the first in which Da Capos disappeared, and which, about this time, began to be generally discontinued: the second part being incorporated with the first, to which, after modulating into the fifth of the key, the singer generally returns.

Bach seems to have been the first composer who observed the law of contrast, as a principle. Before his time, contrast there frequently was, in the works of others; but it seems to have been accidental. Bach in his symphonies and other instrumental pieces, as well as his songs, seldom failed, after a rapid and noisy passage to introduce one that was slow and soothing. His symphonies seem infinitely more original than either his songs or harpsichord pieces, of which the harmony, mixture of wind-instruments, and general richness and variety of accompaniment, are certainly the most prominent features. In the sonatas and concertos which he composed for his own playing, when his hand was feeble, or likely to tire, he diverted the attention of the audience to some other instrument; and he had Abel, Fischer, Cramer, Crofdil, Cervetto, and other excellent musicians to write for, and take his part, whenever he wanted support.

At the close of the season, June 11th, Signora Mattei left England, and Giardini and Mingotti again resumed the reins of opera government.

During the winter of 1763 and 1764, the following operas were brought on the stage. CLEONICE, a pasticcio. This was the first opera

opera printed by Bremner, who superseded Walsh, and continued opera publisher for more than twenty years. Cleonice was engraved in a half score, with instrumental parts printed separately, ready for use in concerts; a plan which seemed promising to the public and the editor, but it was not favoured. The airs selected for this collection were composed by Galuppi and Giardini, with a duet by Bertoni. There is, however, nothing very captivating in any one of them. The duet seems to have the most merit of any one of them: Tu parti mio ben. The singers were the Mingotti, in the decline of her favour; Marrietti, Peretti, Giustinelli, La Sartori, and La Bains.

SIROE, the second opera, was likewise a pasticcio, of which Giardini furnished the principal part. His air: Ab non so perche tu sei, sung by Mingotti, was long in favour both to Italian and English words. Tremo frà dubbj miei, a bravura air by Galuppi, was brilliant in its effect, as sung by the same performer, though the passages have been since worn out. Giardini's D' ogni amator la fede, was pleasing.

ENEAS E LAVINIA, the third opera, was entirely by Giardini, for the same singers as Cleonice. The airs and duets that are printed, have never been much noticed.

LEUCIPPE E ZENOCRITA, the fourth opera, was a pasticcio, in which there are two or three airs by Vento, whom Giardini invited hither upon a supposition he should continue impresario. This was his first winter in London, and in the specimens he gave of his abilities, the melody is graceful and pleasing. His rondeau: Se fidi fiete, was always encored at the Opera-house, and afterwards at Ranelagh, to English words. This was the last collection that Bremner published, with separate instrumental parts. And here the reign of Giardini and Mingotti seems to have ended, after an inauspicious season.

1764 and 1765. We are now arrived at a splendid period in the annals of the musical drama, when, by the arrival of GIOVANNI MANZOLI, the serious opera acquired a degree of favour to which it had seldom mounted, since its first establishment in this country.

The

The expectations which the great reputation of this performer had excited were so great, that at the opening of the theatre in November, with the pasticcio of Ezio, there was such a crowd assembled at all the avenues, that it was with very great difficulty I obtained a place, after waiting two hours at the door. Manzoli's voice was the most powerful and voluminous soprano that had been heard on our stage since the time of Farinelli; and his manner of singing was grand and full of taste and dignity. In this first opera he had three songs, composed by Pescetti, entirely in different styles: Recagli quell' acciario, an animated aria parlante; Caro mio bene addio, an adagio in a grand style of cantabile; and Mi dona mi rende, of a graceful kind, all which he executed admirably. The lovers of Music in London were more unanimous in approving his voice and talents than those of any other singer within my memory. The applause was hearty, unequivocal, and free from all suspicion of artificial zeal; it was a universal thunder. His voice alone was commanding from native strength and sweetness; for it seems as if subsequent singers had possessed more art and feeling; and as to execution, he had none. However, he was a good actor, though unwieldy in figure, and not well made in person; neither was he young when he arrived in London; yet the sensations he excited seem to have been more irresistible and universal, than I have ever been witness to in any theatre.

SCOTTI, the first woman, with an elegant figure, a beautiful face, and a feeble voice, sung in a very good taste; and, though in want of power, she possessed great flexibility and expression. Tenducci, the second man, now arrived for the second time, and much improved; Ciprandi, an excellent tenor (i); Cremonini, second woman, a good musician, with a modern style of singing, but almost without voice; and Miss Young, afterwards Mrs. Barthelemon, composed the company.

Every composer now in London was ambitious of writing for such a performer as Manzoli. And the managers, to manifest impar-

(i) He was very deservedly applauded and generally encored in Bach's charming air: Non so donde viene, originally composed for the celebrated tenor Raaf.

tiality, gave our countryman, Dr. ARNE, an opportunity of distinguishing himself by setting Metastasio's admirable drama of OLIMPIADE. But the doctor had kept bad company: that is, had written for vulgar fingers and hearers too long to be able to comport himself properly at the Opera-house, in the first circle of taste and fashion. "He could speak to the girls in the garden" very well; but whether through bashfulness, or want of use, he had but little to say to good company. The common play-house and ballad passages, which occurred in almost every air in his opera, made the audience wonder how they got there. A tarnished Monmouth-street suit of cloaths in the side boxes, would not have surprised them more. This production was performed but twice, and never printed. Many reasons may be assigned for this failure of a man of real genius, who had on so many occasions delighted the frequenters of our national theatres and public gardens: a different language, different fingers, and a different audience, and style of Music from his own, carried him out of his usual element, where he mangled the Italian poetry, energies, and accents, nearly as much as a native of Italy just arrived in London, would English, in a similar situation.

The next opera that was brought out, after Olimpiade, was BERENICE, a pasticcio, to which Hasse, Galuppi, Ferradini, Bach, Vento, and Rezel, contributed. Abel likewise furnished a march; and yet the favour of this opera was not great, nor was any one of the airs ever noticed after its short run was over. The best song in the printed collection is; Confusa, smarrita, by Bach, which from the melancholy key of F minor, and the expression of the beautiful, but feeble-voiced, Scotti, had a very pleasing effect.

This opera was succeeded by ADRIANO IN SIRIA, new set by Bach. The expectations of the public the first night this drama was performed, occasioned such a crowd at the King's theatre as had been seldom seen there before. It was impossible for a third part of the company collected together on this occasion to obtain places. But whether from heat or inconvenience, the unreasonableness of expectation, the composer being out of fancy, or too anxious to please, the opera failed. Every one seemed to come out of the theatre disappointed, and the drama was performed but two or three times. This seemed matter of great triumph to the Italians, who began to be jealous of the Germanic body of musicians at this time in the kingdom. The songs were printed by the elder Welcker, and many of them sung afterwards at concerts with great applause, and found, as detached airs, excellent, though they had been unfortunate in their totality.

After this, DEMOFOONTE, a new opera, by Vento, was performed, of which the airs are natural, graceful, and pleasing; always free from vulgarity, but never very new or learned. They were, however, in great public and private favour a considerable time (k).

Manzoli had for his benefit IL RE PASTORE, an opera of which the Music was chiefly by Giardini, and, except the songs he composed expressly for Manzoli, had been performed in 1755. This opera and SOLIMANO, a pasticcio, were all that were brought out during the rest of the season. In this last opera an agreeable aria andante, by Ciccio da Majo: Serba gli affetti o cara, and Se non ti moro allato, by Perez, in a fine style of cantabile, render the collection worth procuring. The public, however, seems to have been more delighted with Manzoli's performance in Exio than in any other opera that was brought on the stage during his residence in this country, which was only one season, at the end of which he returned to Italy, and was succeeded here by Elisi, who arrived in London, a second time, in the autumn 1765.

The opera regency was now undertaken by Messrs. Gordon, Vincent, and Crawford; the two first experienced professors, and the third had been many years treasurer, under different managers. Gordon, the son of a Norfolk clergyman, had been a good performer on the violoncello; and Vincent, a scholar of San Martini, long a favourite on the hautbois. His father was a bassoon player in the guards, and his brother, James Vincent, who died young, was joint organist of the Temple with Stanley, and a brilliant performer. Mr. T. Vincent, the impresario, had been in great favour with the prince of Wales, father to his present Majesty; had acquired a considerable sum of money in his profession, which he augmented by marriage. However, the ambition of being at the head of so forward a family as an opera vocal and instrumental band, turned his head and his purse inside out; in short, he soon became a bankrupt, and his colleagues, though they escaped utter ruin, were not enriched by the connexion.

(k) Bremner published two collections.

The first opera that was performed in autumn this year, under the new direction, was EUMENE, a pasticcio, which was not much noticed on the stage, or thought worth printing.

The next was La Clemenza di Tito, a revived opera, by Cocchi, with a few new airs for Elisi. It shared the same neglect both by the public and publishers as Eumene, and is neither to be found in any memory, or shop whatever. The singers this season with Elisi were the Visconti, Spagnoli, Ciprandi, and SAVOI, for the first time.

This was succeeded by SOFONISBA, an opera wholly set by Vento, in that easy and graceful style which pleased more generally than what professors would call better Music. Savoi's fine voice was now the more noticed, as Elisi's was upon the decline. This drama was represented more frequently than any other during the season; and the songs, printed by the elder Welcker, were long after in favour at concerts and public places, as well as among singing-misses and dilettanti.

An opera called ARTASERSE, and said to have been composed by Haffé, was brought out in January 1766; but the songs were not printed, and neither memory nor tradition furnish me with any farther information concerning it. L' EROE CINESE, an opera set by Galuppi, performed about this time, is alike swept away by the waters of oblivion.

The last drama that was brought out this season, in which Elisi and Scotti performed the principal parts, was PELOPIDA, set by Mr. Barthelemon, who now led the opera band. The favourite songs were printed by Welcker, in two collections. There were traits of genius and bold modulation in this Music, which, promised, with experience in writing for the voice, and a more perfect perfect acquaintance with the Italian language and stage, future works of great worth and abilities.

During the summer of this year a new plan was formed by the opera managers for the ensuing season, which involved future impresarij in great difficulties and expence. The lyric theatre having been much neglected on Tuesdays, even when it was crowded on Saturdays, it was thought expedient, in order to excite curiosity by a different species of entertainment to engage two distinct companies of singers for the performance of serious operas on Saturdays, and comic on Tuesdays; and for this purpose Mr. Gordon, one of the managers, went to Italy, during the recess, in order to engage performers. The serious troop he brought over were Guarducci, first man; Grassi, first woman; with the two females Piatti and Ponce; with whom were retained Savoi, Micheli, and Miss Young, of the preceding season. The burletta company consisted of Lovattini, Morigi, Signoras Guadagni, Quercioli, Maggiore, and Piatti, to whom were occasionally added, Savoi and Micheli. The principal of these performers I shall characterize as they are brought into action.

The first drama presented to the public this winter was a comic opera, October 21st, called GLI STRAVAGANTI, by different composers, in which there were several airs by Piccini; but his reputation was not yet sufficiently established for them to be honoured with particular notice.

While this was in run, a serious pasticcio, entitled TRAKEBARNE GRAN MOGUL was brought on the stage, in which the two principal singers made their first appearance, without impressing the public with very favourable ideas of their talents.

The third opera, however, which was the celebrated BUONA FIGLIUOLA of Piccini, first performed December 9th, rendered the name of this composer, which had scarcely penetrated into this country before, dear to every lover of Music in the nation. This admirable production, before it was brought hither, had saved the impresario of the opera at Rome from ruin, and been performed in the principal cities of Italy. In the year 1760, Piccini passing through Rome, in his way to Milan, was entreated to compose a comic opera for the Teatro delle Dame in that city, which had lately been very unfortunate. No libretto was ready, and application having been made to the poet Goldoni, at this time in Rome, he furnished the musical drama of La Bouno Figliuola, from his comedy of Pamela, in a few days. Several of the original performers were now in London, particularly the first buffo, LOVATTINI, and the serious man SAVOI, with the buffo caricato MORIGI. And though females are not allowed to appear on the stage at Rome, yet SIGNORA GUADAGNI had previously performed the part of Cecchina in several cities of Italy, with great and well-deserved applause.

Lovattini's voice, which was a sweet and well-toned tenor, with his taste, humour, and expression, insured him great and constant applause, in whatever character he appeared; but the Music of this drama was so admirable, from its originality, fire, and instrumental effects, that a worse singer than Lovattini, would have been sure of a favourable reception. And some of the success of this opera, particularly in England, must be ascribed to the drama, which has more character, and much less ribaldry and buffoonery, than usual in Italian burlettas. The under parts were well filled on our stage by the Quercioli, Maggiore, Piatti, Micheli, and, afterwards, by the Gibetti. Slingsby and Radicati were the principal dancers this year, and as far as agility and neatness of execution could gratify, afforded the public high entertainment.

In the spring of 1767, two serious operas were brought out, in the performance of which, the principal singers, Guarducci and Graffi, excited more attention, and acquired more applause, than had been bestowed upon them before Christmas. These operas were CARATTACO by Bach, and LA CONQUISTA DEL MESSICO by Vento; both well entitled to favour from different excellencies: the one for correct and rich harmony, and the other for elegant and graceful melody.

TOMMASO GUARDUCCI TOSCANO, a scholar of Bernacchi, was tall and awkward in figure, inanimate as an actor, and in countenance

nance ill-favoured and morbid ; but with all these disadvantages, he was a man of great probity and worth in his private character, and one of the most correct singers I ever heard. He was unfortunate in arriving here so soon after Manzoli, the impressions of whose great voice and majestic manner of singing had not been effaced by his immediate successor, Elisi. Guarducci's voice, though of much less volume than Manzoli's, was clear, sweet, and flexible. His shake and intonations were perfect, and by long study and practice he had vanquished all the difficulties of his art, and possessed himself of every refinement of his particular school, as well as of the general vocal embellishments of Italy at this period.

Though prejudice ran high against him on his first arrival in London, his merit at length made its way, and his highly polished manner of singing was very much approved and felt by the principal professors and persons of taste and discernment who heard him. He soon discovered that a singer could not captivate the English by tricks or instrumental execution, and told me some years after, at Montefiascone in Italy, that the gravity of our taste had been of great use to him. "The English," says he, "are such friends to the composer, and to simplicity, that they like to hear a melody in its primitive state, undisguised by change or embellishment. Or if, when repeated, riffioramenti are necessary, the notes must be few and well selected, to be honoured with approbation." Indeed, Guarducci was the plainest and most simple singer, of the first class, I ever heard. All his effects were produced by expression and high finishing, nor did he ever aim at execution. He sung in the English oratorios upon short notice, with very little knowledge of our language, and still less practice in pronouncing it. However, he was well received and well paid, for he had £.600 for twelve oratorios, a larger sum than was ever given on a like occasion, till the time of Miss Linley.

CECILIA GRASSI, afterwards Mrs. Bach, who performed the first woman's part for several successive years at the opera with Guarducci and Guadagni, was inanimate on the stage, and far from beautiful in her person ; but there was a truth of intonation, with a plain-

a plaintive sweetness of voice, and innocence of expression, that gave great pleasure to all hearers who did not expect or want to be surprised.

After the great success of the Buona Figliuola, the public was disposed to hear with partiality any compositions by the same master, and when the BUONA FIGLIUOLA MARITATA, or sequel of the Buona Figliuola was brought out, the crowd at the Operahouse was prodigious; but expectation, as usual, was so unreasonable as to spoil the feast; to gratify it, was impossible. Some ascribed their disappointment to the composer, some to the performers, but none to themselves. The Music was excellent, full of invention, fire, and new effects; but so difficult, particularly for the orchestra, that the performers forgot it was winter. The principal part of the Marchesa, was given to ZAMPARINI, a very pretty woman, but an affected singer. Music so difficult to perform, was not easy to hear; and this drama was never sufficiently repeated for the public to be familiarly acquainted with it. They were glad, as well as the performers, to return to the Buona Figliuola for their own ease and relief from a too serious attention.

In October, the King's theatre was opened with a new serious opera, by different authors, called TIGRANE, in which an admirable cantabile air: Care luci, composed by Sacchini, was sung in an exquisite manner by Guarducci. This air, the first that was ever performed on our stage of Sacchini's composition, was printed without his name.

In November, a most agreeable comic opera by Piccini, called the SCHIAVA, was brought out, and in the course of the winter had fourteen representations. Several very pleasing airs in this drama were admirably sung by Lovattini and the Guadagni: such as, Ab che la mia schiavetta, by the former; and Ab quegl'occhi ladroncelli; and Se quel cor, by the latter, who was a graceful and elegant actress, as well as singer.

In December, another serious pasticcio, called SIFARE, was performed, in which Guarducci gained great applause by his polished manner of singing a simple and elegant air by Galuppi: Quel labro addorato, addorato, which was constantly encored during the run of the opera. Abel composed an air for him in this drama: Frena le belle legrime, with an accompaniment for the viol da gamba, which he played himself; but it was laboured, and had not the effect that might be expected from the united powers of two such complete musicians.

1768. In January this year was first performed IFIGENIA IN AULIDE, a new serious opera, by a new composer, PIETRO GUGLIELMI, of Naples, just arrived in England. This master had some Neapolitan fire, and brought over the new and fashionable musical phrases from Italy, but he wrote too fast, and with little invention or selection of passages. Indeed, he arrived here at an unfortunate period, when cabals in favour of Cocchi, Bach, Vento, and Giardini, as composers of serious operas, ran high; and when the comic operas of Piccini were so justly admired, that their merit was not likely to be effaced or eclipsed by a composer of inferior fame and intrinsic worth, when it was less the interest of rival candidates for public favour to decry the productions of Piccini who was absent, than of Guglielmi who was present, and a mark for envy and detraction to shoot at. Guglielmi never had great success here. Indeed, it seems to have been fairly proportioned to the abilities he manifested, though he has since composed better and more successfully in Italy. His harpsichord pieces are full of froth and common passages, and have little other merit than appearing difficult, though of easy execution; and which, though pert, can never be called dull or tedious.

Another new composer arrived here about this time, FELICE ALESSANDRI, of Rome, the husband of Signora Guadagni, who set two comic operas for our stage: La Moglie Fedele, and Il Re alla Caccia, which are not devoid of merit; but there were so many masters here at this time, whose fame was already established, that a young composer, who had his reputation to make, had little chance of being much noticed. He has however distinguished himself, since he left England, by writing for some of the first singers in the principal theatres of Italy.

Guarducci, instead of an opera, had for his benefit this spring the the oratorio of BETULIA LIBERATA, set by Jomelli, in which among many admirable compositions, an air of supplication, through which were heard the cries of the people in a distant chorus, sung extremely soft, was justly admired for its new and fine effect.

Among the comic operas produced this season, Galuppi's Filosofo di Campagna, which was so superior to all other burlettas of Paganini's time, was revived; but not heard with the same pleasure as formerly. The fire and originality of Piccini's productions proved, that Music had not remained stationary since this opera was first composed.

The lyric theatre was shut June 30th, but opened again in August, for the entertainment of the King of Denmark, then in England. There were six performances on this occasion. Guarducci was returned to Italy, and there were no capital singers left to enable the managers to present his Majesty with a serious opera. However, besides the Buona Figliuola and the Schiava, Arianna e Teseo was revived on this occasion, when Luciani and the Giacomazzi, the serious singers in the comic operas, supplied the principal characters.

The theatre after these performances was shut up till November 5th, 1768, when it was opened for the subscribers, with the comic opera of Gli Amanti Ridicoli, by Buranello. During this whole season, no serious operas were attempted. The ingenious and lively productions of Galuppi, Piccini, and Guglielmi, performed by the comic troop, of which the favourite singers, Lovatini and the Guadagni, were principals, supplied the wants of the public till the second arrival of Guadagni in this kingdom, in autumn 1769 (1).

GAETANO GUADAGNI, of Vicenza, came first into this country at an early period of his life, as serious man in a burletta troop of

(1) Besides the compositions by the three masters just mentioned, in the spring season of 1769, the comic operas of Il Mercato di Malmantile, by Fischietti, an agreeable composer, and Nanetta e Lubino, by Signor Pugnani, who then led the band, were performed. This last, though an able and celebrated professor on the violin, seems to have begun writing for the voice too late in his life to arrive at great excellence in lyric compositions. He has, however, since he left England, composed serious operas for several of the great theatres of Italy.

fingers,

fingers, 1748. His voice was then a full and well toned counter-tenor; but he was a wild and careless singer. However, the excellence of his voice attracted the notice of Handel, who assigned him the parts in his oratorios of the Messiah and Samson, which had been originally composed for Mrs. Cibber; in the studying which parts, as I often saw him at Frasi's, whom I then attended as her master, he applied to me for assistance. During his first residence in England, which was four or five years, he was more noticed in singing English than Italian. He quitted London about the year 1752. In 1754 he was at Lisbon as second serious man under Gizziello, and 1755 very narrowly escaped destruction during the earthquake. After this dreadful calamity, Gizziello, seized with a fit of devotion, retired into a monastery, where he spent the rest of his life. Having a friendship for Guadagni, and being pleased with his voice and quickness of parts, he persuaded the young singer to accompany him in his retreat, where, during a considerable time, he took great pains in directing his studies; and it is from this period that Guadagni's great reputation, as a refined and judicious singer, may be dated. His ideas of acting were taken much earlier from Garrick, who, when he performed in an English opera called the Fairies, took as much pleasure in forming him as an actor, as Gizziello did afterwards in polishing his style of singing. After quitting Portugal, he acquired great reputation as first man, in all the principal theatres in Italy, and the year before his return to England, he excited great admiration by his talents, as well as disturbance, by his caprice, at Vienna. The highest expectations of his abilities were raised by rumour, before his arrival here for the winter season; and as an actor, he seems to have had no equal on any stage in Europe: his figure was uncommonly elegant and noble; his countenance replete with beauty, intelligence, and dignity; and his attitudes and gestures were so full of grace and propriety, that they would have been excellent studies for a statuary. But though his manner of singing was perfectly delicate, polished, and refined, his voice seemed, at first, to disappoint every hearer. Those who remembered it when he was in England before, found it comparatively thin and feeble. For he had now changed it to a soprano, and extended its compass from six or seven notes, to fourteen or fifteen. And let a fluid of six feet in depth be spread over more than double its usual surface, and it will necessarily be shallower, though of greater extent. The Music he sung was the most simple imaginable; a few notes with frequent pauses, and opportunities of being liberated from the composer and the band, were all he wanted. And in these seemingly extemporaneous effusions, he proved the inherent power of melody totally divorced from harmony and unassisted even by unisonous accompaniment. Surprised at such great effects from causes apparently so small, I frequently tried to analyze the pleasure he communicated to the audience, and found it chiefly arose from his artful manner of diminishing the tones of his voice, like the dying notes of the Æolian harp. Most other singers captivate by a swell or mezza di voce; but Guadagni, after beginning a note or passage with all the force he could safely exert, fined it off to a thread, and gave it all the effect of extreme distance. And though neither his voice nor execution contributed much to charm or excite admiration, he had a strong party in England of enthusiastic friends and adherents, of whom, by personal quarrels and native caprice, he contrived to diminish the number very considerably before his departure. He had strong resentments and high notions of his own importance and profession, which revolted many of his warmest friends, and augmented the malice of his enemies.

The serious operas in which he performed during the season of 1769 and 1770, were OLIMPIADE, a pasticcio, but chiefly by Piccini, though the favourite song was Quel labbro addorato, by Bach; EZIO, by Guglielmi; and ORFEO, by Gluck (m). In this last drama his attitudes, action, and impassioned and exquisite manner of singing the simple and ballad-like air: Che farò, acquired him very great and just applause; but in the midst of the utmost public

(m) The unity, simplicity, and dramatic excellence of this opera, which had gained the composer so much credit on the Continent, were greatly diminished here by the heterogeneous mixture of Music, of other composers, in a quite different style; whose long symphonies, long divisions, and repetitions of words, occasioned delay and languor in the incidents and action. A drama, which at Vienna was rendered so interesting, as almost to make the audience think more of the poet than musician, in England had the fate of all other Italian dramas, which are pronounced good or bad in proportion to the talents and favour of the singers.

favour,

favour, his private difference with the Hon. Mr. Hobart, the patentee at that time, concerning an imagined affront put upon his sister in favour of Zamparini, together with his determined spirit of supporting the dignity and propriety of his dramatic character, by not bowing acknowledgment, when applauded, or destroying all theatrical illusion by returning to repeat an air, if encored at the termination of an interesting scene, he so much offended individuals, and the opera audience in general, that, at length, he never appeared without being hissed (n).

In the Lent of 1770, Bach undertook oratorios at the King's theatre in the Hay-market, with Guadagni, Graffi, Signora Guglielmi, and others, to sing for him, and tried to recover his organ-playing; but he was too much out of practice to satisfy Stanley's friends, or those that remembered Handel. The compositions he had performed, were La Passione by Jomelli, and his own Gioas Re di Giuda; the success, however, was neither flattering nor profitable, though the undertaking was patronised and frequently honoured with the presence of their Majesties.

During the next season of 1770 and 1771, in the few serious operas that were performed, TENDUCCI was the immediate successor of Guadagni. This performer, who came here first in the time of Mattei and Potenza only as a singer of the second or third class, was now so much improved, during his residence in Scotland and Ireland, as not only to be well received as first man on our stage, but, afterwards, in all the great theatres of Italy.

From May 1771 there was no serious opera attempted, till the arrival of MILLICO, in the spring of 1772. This judicious performer, and worthy man, who was not an Adonis in person, and

(n) His enemies knowing him to be passion's slave, frequently began an encore with which they knew he would not comply, on purpose to enrage the audience. Guadagni was allowed to be the finest billiard player in Europe; but his antagonists discovering his irritability, used, when he was playing for large sums, to dispute, as unfair, something that was clearly otherwise, by which he was so agitated, as not to be a match for a child. He quitted England for the last time in the summer of 1771; in 1772 he performed at Verona, and afterwards accompanied the late Electrice Dowager of Saxony, a dilettante of the first order in abilities as well as rank, to Munich, where he continued till 1776, when he appeared on the stage, for the last time, at Venice. After which he settled at Padua in the service of Sant' Antonio, where he lost his sight in 1786, by a paralytic stroke, and soon after his life.

whose voice had received its greatest beauties from art, found the musical part of our nation in no favourable disposition towards him. The admirers of Tenducci and Guadagni, as well as the Cocchi, Guglielmi, Giardini, Vento, and Bach parties, however hostile in other particulars, all agreed in decrying every part of that opera in which their favourite had no concern. SACCHINI, who arrived here soon after, was involved in these cabals. None of the friends of their predecessors would allow that Millico could sing or the new master compose. Violent and virulent means were used to poison, or at least to shut the ears of the unprejudiced public; but not with much success. Indeed, at first both the Music and performance were frequently hissed: but, at length, Sacchini's compositions were generally allowed to be admirable, and Millico's importance was manifested by a crowded house at his benefit, composed of the first persons for taste and rank in the kingdom; and at the end of the next season, several who had boldly pronounced that neither Sacchini could compose nor Millico sing, would have given a hundred pounds if they could have recalled their words, or made their acquaintance forget they had been guilty of such manifest injustice and absurdity.

It was during this period that Dancing seemed first to gain the ascendant over Music, by the superior talents of Mademoiselle HEINEL, whose grace and execution were so perfect as to eclipse all other excellence (o).

The first opera in which Millico performed was ARTASERSE, arranged by GIORDANI, and the favourite air: Infelice, ah dove io vado, which he sung with great feeling and expression. Grassi was the first woman in this opera. In the next, which was the pasticcio of SOFONISBA, arranged, and in part composed, by Vento, Signora GIRELLI AGUILAR, a new principal female singer, first appeared.

(o) At this time crowds assembled at the Opera-house more for the gratification of the eye than the ear; for neither the invention of a new composer, nor the talents of new singers, attracted the public to the theatre, which was almost abandoned till the arrival of Mademoiselle Heinel, whose extraordinary merit had an extraordinary recompence: for besides the £.600 salary allowed her by the Hon. Mr. Hobart as manager, she was complimented with a regallo of six hundred more from the Macaroni Club. E molto particolare, said Cocchi the composer, ma quei Inglese non fanno conto d' alcuna cosa, se non è ben pagata: "It is very extraordinary, that the English set no value upon any thing but what they pay an exorbitant price for."

Her style of singing was good, but her voice was in decay, and her intonation frequently false, when she arrived here; however, it was easy to imagine from what remained, that she had been better.

In January 1773, Sacchini's first opera for our stage IL CID came out; and in the May following TAMERLANO, both admirable productions, full of taste, elegance, and knowledge of stage effects. The principal singers in these operas were Millico and Girelli.

In November 1773, Mrs. Yates, who was now joint manager with Mrs. Brook, spoke a poetical exordium at the opening of the King's theatre; by which it appeared, that she intended mixing plays with operas, and entertaining the public with singing and declamation, alternately; but permission could never be obtained from the Lord Chamberlain for putting this plan into execution.

The first opera which was performed this season, was LUCIO VERO, composed by Sacchini, in which Miss CECILIA DAVIES, known in Italy by the name of L'INGLESINA, first appeared, and sung several very agreeable airs composed on purpose for the display of her neat and rapid execution, admirably. Miss Davies has the honour of being not only the first Englishwoman who has performed the principal female parts in several great theatres of Italy, but who has ever been thought worthy of singing there at all. She went very young into France with her sister, who was much admired for her performance on the glasses; and after travelling with her to Vienna, they there became connected with the family of the celebrated composer Hasse and Faustina. Here Miss Davies seems to have acquired much of that steady and prudent carriage of her voice, as well as recitative and action, for which she has been so justly admired. Her powers of execution were at this time allowed to be unrivalled by those of any other singer that had been heard in England. Italians and travellers used to confess, that only Gabrielli on the Continent could surpass them. Her voice, though not of a great volume, or perhaps sufficiently powerful for a great theatre, yet was clear and perfectly in tune. Her shake excellent, open, distinct, and neither sluggish like the French cadence, nor so quick as to become a flutter. The flexibility of her

her throat rendered her execution of the most rapid divisions fair and articulate, even beyond those of instruments in the hands of the greatest performers. The critics, however, though unanimous in this particular, did not so readily allow her excellence to be equal in the cantabile style. She took her notes judiciously, they readily granted; sung them perfectly in tune; but was said by some to want that colouring, passion, and variety of expression, which render adagios truly touching. And I own that I felt myself more tranquil when she sung slow songs than quick. In rapid airs of bravura, if I had had as many hands as Briarius, they would have been all employed in her applause; but in cantabile movements, though there was nothing to blame, and much to commend, the transport of pleasure and satisfaction was less violent. Indeed, if both styles had been equal, she would have been two distinct singers. And it very seldom happens that persons possessed of much pathos, are equally admirable in rapid execution; or that singers remarkable for agility of voice, are gifted with the power of impressing slow notes with passion. And yet, from ignorance of ourselves, or from the hope of defending weak places, singers more frequently try to acquire reputation by such talents as they want, than by those they have. Thus Shooter and Weston, when left to themselves at their benefits, chose to appear in tragedy! Their fame, on comic ground, was natural right and inheritance; all they gained in tragedy was pais acquis.

In the spring season of 1774, Sacchini produced two admirable new operas, NITTETI and PERSEO, that were performed by the same singers, except that the Carara sung the second woman's part in the one, and the Marchetti in the other. The first of these females was not without merit, but it was not of a spirited kind; the second had a brilliant toned voice, bel metallo di voce, with which she might have become a singer of the first class, if want of health had not prevented her from that persevering practice which is so necessary to the vanquishing vocal difficulties (p).

(p) In Sofonisba and the Cid, MADAME SYRMEN, the scholar of Tartini, who was so justly admired for her polished and expressive manner of playing the violin, appeared as a singer, in the part of second woman; but having been first woman so long upon her instrument, she degraded herself by assuming a character in which, though not destitute of voice and taste, she had no claim to superiority.

In November the new season began with ALESSANDRO NELL' INDIE, new set by CORRI, a young composer of genius; but his name was not sufficiently blazoned to give his opera much eclat, or, indeed, to excite the attention it deserved. The articles of Millico and Miss Davies being expired, Rauzzini began his career on our opera stage this winter, with the Schindlerin, who had performed with him at Venice, previous to his arrival in England.

VENANZIO RAUZZINI was at this time a beautiful and animated young man, as well as an excellent musician, who not only knew his own business well as a singer, but that of a composer: being as able to set an opera as to sing in it(q). His voice was sweet, clear, flexible, and extensive; being in compass more than two octaves. But it was not powerful when I heard it at Munich, two years before; and it was perhaps daily rendered more feeble by his applying closely to composition. He played the harpsichord neatly, and had a real genius for writing, which inclined him to devote that time to the pen and the improvement of his hand, which, in his station, would have been better bestowed in nursing and exercising his voice. It was some time before his abilities were felt by the public here, to the favour of which nothing can so speedily convey the merits of a singer as a great and powerful voice: however, his taste, fancy, and delicacy, together with his beautiful person and spirited and intelligent manner of acting, before the season was over, gained him general approbation.

The moderate abilities, and more feeble voice of the female singer SCHINDLERIN, were advantages to him, though none to the public. She was engaged at his recommendation, was a native of Germany, young, and by many thought handsome. Her figure was elegant and graceful on the stage, and she was a good actress. Off the stage, however, she was coquettish, silly, and insipid. Her voice was a mere thread, for the weakness of which there was neither taste nor knowledge to compensate. Indeed, she always appeared on the stage, what she really was off it, Rauzzini's scholar; and she was so inferior to him in voice and abilities, that he thought

(q) Piramo e Tisbe, and La Vestale, may be instanced in proof of this assertion.

thought it necessary to lower himself to her level, in order to make her appear to more advantage. It is injudicious and dangerous to consult either the first man or the first woman, of an opera, about the performers they are to contend with for fame. Millico wished to sing with no better performer than his young and inanimate scholar, the Carrara. Gabrielli long made it a condition of her coming to England, that Manzoletto should be the first man; and Rauzzini made several ingenious manœuvres to have the Schindlerin for his partner a second season. Singers of nearly equal abilities, though of different kinds, regard one another with horror; reciprocally imagining that all the applause gained by their colleague is at their own expence.

Lovattini, who had merited and enjoyed the public favour during eight years, having left England this summer, TREBBI, a new buffo, was engaged to supply his place; but his voice was not so sweet, his taste so good, or his humour so risible, as those of his predecessor. Signora SESTINI came here about the same time, from Lisbon, as prima buffa. When she first appeared on our stage in La Marchesa Giardiniera, by Anfossi, her face was beautiful, her figure elegant, and her action graceful. Her voice, though by nature not perfectly clear and sweet toned, had been well directed in her studies, and she sung with considerable agility, as well as taste and expression.

The most memorable musical event of the next season, 1775 and 1776, was the arrival of the celebrated CATERINA GABRIELLI, called early in life La Cuochetina, being the daughter of a cardinal's cook at Rome. She had, however, no indications of low birth in her countenance or deportment, which had all the grace and dignity of a Roman matron. Her reputation was so great, before her arrival in England, for singing and caprice, that the public, expecting perhaps too much of both, was unwilling to allow her due praise in her performance, and too liberal in ascribing every thing she said and did to pride and insolence. It having been reported that she often feigned sickness, and sung ill when she was able to sing well, few were willing to allow she could be sick, or that she ever sung her best while she was here; and those who

who were inclined to believe, that sometimes she might perhaps have exerted herself, in pure caprice, thought her voice on the decline, or that fame, as usual, had deviated from truth in speaking of her talents. Her voice, though of an exquisite quality, was not very powerful; and her chief excellence having been the rapidity and neatness of her execution, the surprize of the public must have been diminished, on hearing her after Miss Davies, who sung in the same style many of her songs, with a neatness so nearly equal, that common hearers could distinguish no difference. There were, however, a few fair and discriminating critics, who discovered a superior sweetness in the natural tone of the Gabrielli's voice; an elegance in the finishing her musical periods or passages; and an accent and precision in her divisions, not only superior to Miss Davies, but to every singer of her time. As an actress, though of low stature, there were such grace and dignity in her gestures and deportment, as caught every unprejudiced eye; indeed, she filled the stage and occupied the attention of the spectators so much, that they could look at nothing else while she was in view. Her freaks and espiegleries which had fixed her reputation, seem to have been very much subdued before her arrival in England. In conversation she seemed the most intelligent and best bred virtuosa with whom I had ever conversed; not only on the subject of Music, but on every subject concerning which a well educated female, who had seen the world, might reasonably be expected to have obtained information. She had been three years in Russia previous to her arrival in England, during which time no peculiarities of individual characters, national manners, or court etiquette, had escaped her observation. In youth, her beauty and caprice had occasioned a universal delirium among her young countrymen, and there were still remains of both sufficiently powerful, while she was in England, to render credible their former influence. With respect to the rapidity of her execution, it was never so excessive as to cease to be agreeable; in slow movements her pathetic powers, like those in general of performers the most renowned for agility, were not sufficiently touching or effectual to occasion disputes concerning her genre. Soon after she quitted England, she retired to Bologna, where she still resides in private tranquillity, after all the storms which her beauty and talents had occasioned, while she remained in the service of the public.

The operas in which the Gabrielli performed, during her residence in England, were DIDONE, chiefly by Sacchini; CAJO MARIO, by Piccini; and LA VESTALE, by Vento. The dancing was at this time attractive: the principal performers being Fierville and Baccelli, serious; and the two Valouys, in demi-caractere.

At this time, there was no male singer, di gran grido, in England, except Rauzzini, who more frequently pleased than surprised his audience; but it was during this period, that the proprietors of the Pantheon ventured to engage the AGUJARI, at the enormous salary of £. 100 a night, for singing two songs only! And yet, however exorbitant the demand, or imprudent the compliance with it may seem, the managers of this most elegant and superb building, which would have done honour to Greece at its most splendid period of taste and magnificence, have since involved the proprietors in disgrace and ruin, by going a more æconomical way to work. Indeed, in subsequent undertakings, they have more frequently had money to pay than receive; for, notwithstanding so much was disbursed to the Agujari, much was likewise cleared, and the dividend was more considerable than it has ever been since that memorable æra.

LUCREZIA AGUJARI was a truly wonderful performer. The lower part of her voice was full, round, of an excellent quality, and its compass, after she quitted its natural register, which it was to be wished she had never done, beyond any one we had then heard. She had two octaves of fair natural voice, from A on the fifth line in the base, to A on the sixth line in the treble, and beyond that, in alt, she had in early youth more than another octave; as Sacchini told me, he had heard her go up to B b in altissimo. Her shake was open and perfect, her intonation true, her execution marked and rapid; and her style of singing, in the natural compass of her voice grand and majestic: though the pathetic and tender were not what her manner or figure promised, yet she had expressions sometimes, that were truly touching, and she would have been as capable of exciting universal universal pleasure, as admiration, if she had been a little less violent in the delivery of her passages, and her looks had been more tempered by female softness and timidity (r). She sung hardly any other Music while she was here than her husband's, Signor Colla, which, though often good, was not of that original and varied cast which could supply the place of every other master, ancient and modern.

In 1776, a new Neapolitan composer was engaged for the opera, Signor TOMASO TRAETTA; but, though an able master of great reputation, he arrived here too late: for Sacchini had already taken possession of our hearts, and so firmly established himself in the public favour, that he was not to be supplanted by a composer in the same style, neither so young, so graceful, or so fanciful as himself. Traetta, who was one of the last scholars of Durante, had, previous to his arrival in England, after composing for all the great theatres of Italy, been invited to Vienna and Petersburg, where he increased his reputation. In his younger days he possessed much original genius and fire, and composed many operas which will bear a comparison with the best works of the most celebrated masters of his own and later times; particularly, Armida and Ifigenia, two grand operas with choruses and ballets, which he produced at Vienna in 1759 (s). Though many excellent songs and scenes of his composition have been introduced in pasticcio operas, yet I can remember but two entire dramas of this master that were executed here: Germondo, a serious opera, and La Serva Rivale, a burletta (t).

ANNA POZZI arrived here in autumn 1776, as successor to the Gabrielli; but though young, handsome, and possessed of a voice uncommonly clear, sweet, and powerful, yet her want of experience, both as a singer and actress, rendered her reception not very flattering, after so celebrated a performer as Gabrielli; though the public had never been partial, or, I think, just to her, while she was in (r) This great singer died at Parma, in 1783.

(s) Ifigenia, though never exhibited on our stage, had lately the advantage of being admirably performed at Mrs. Blaire's, by herself and friends, who, among diletanti, are of the first class for voice and style of singing.

(t) Traetta died in 1779.

England. Before the season was far advanced, Pozzi was superseded by Miss Davies; and after this degradation she generally appeared as second woman, in which character she was always thought more superior to singers of that rank, than any of the first women to whom she was obliged to give the pas, were to herself. The spirit and brilliancy of her voice, with more study and experience, have since rendered her one of the best and most admired female singers in Italy (u).

The musical annals of this period require some account of MATTHIAS VENTO, who, about 1763, was invited hither by Giardini, during his management of the opera and Manzoli's performance. Vento's genius never approached the sublime; however, his melody was totally free from vulgarity, and, though not new, was always pleasing and graceful. On which account, and perhaps by the assistance of Italian politics, he had the honour of defeating Bach; of whose opera of Adriano perhaps too much was expected, but Vento's Demofonte, of which no hopes were formed, gained infinitely more applause, and a much longer run. It was even revived the next year, on the arrival of Guarducci. This composer's harpsichord pieces are flimsy, and so much alike, that the invention, with respect to melody and modulation of the eight sets, may be compressed into two or three movements. In these sonatas, as well as in his songs, he avoids vulgar passages, and has a graceful, easy, and flowing melody; but his bases are too like Alberti's, and his trebles too like one another, either to improve the hand or delight the ear. He had a great number of scholars, which ensured the expence of printing his pieces, though not their general and public favour. One or two sets of such easy compositions would, indeed, have been very useful to scholars in the first stages of their execution; but eight books, in which there is so little variety, can never be wanted, or indeed borne, but by those who think it right implicitly to receive all their master's prescriptions. His duos

(u) Mr. Sheridan during his opera regency, used to say, with great sagacity, when she was on the point of quitting for voices are alike trivial and uninteresting, and the opera of Attaferse, which he composed for the Harmonic Meeting, that was set up in 1771 by the friends of Guadagni and Giardini against the great opera, under the management of Mr. Hobart, which people of the first rank were so impatient to hear in a clandestine way, as to run the risk of pains and penalties for it, when published, appeared to have less merit and novelty than any one of his former works (x).

England, that it would be worth a manager's while to engage her for six years hence, on speculation.

After the departure of Agujari for the second and last time, the managers of the Pantheon engaged the GEORGI, a young singer since married to Banti, the dancer, as her successor. A measure adopted merely on speculation. She was the daughter of a Gondoliere at Venice, and for some time a piazza performer in that city. After this exercise of her natural vocal powers, she sung her way to Lyons, where she performed in coffee-houses for such small donations as are usually bestowed on itinerant talents in such places. Hence, by the power of song, she was conveyed and bien nourrie to Paris, where her voice was so much admired, that after very little teaching by some of her countrymen whom she met with there, she was permitted to sing at the concert spirituel. Here the applause was so loud that it soon reached England, and inclined the proprietors of the Pantheon to engage her for three seasons, upon condition that 100*l.* a year should be deducted out of her salary, for the payment of an able master to cultivate her voice. Sacchini was the first appointed to this office; but soon found her so idle and obstinate, that he quitted her as an incurable patient. She was next assigned to Signor Piozzi, whose patience was likewise exhausted before she became a perfect singer (y). Since her return to her own country, where the air is more favourable to good singing than in any other, she has improved, by example, perhaps, more than precept, so much, that she now is

(x) Vento died in 1777, very rich, as there was every reason of industry, parsimony, and avarice, to imagine; but by some strange disposition of his property and affairs, none of his effects could be found at his death; and his widow and her mother were left wholly destitute of support, but from charity and the lowest menial labour.

(y) Abel, after these unsuccessful trials, took her in hand, and in pure love for her voice and person gave her instruction at his lodgings in the country, which being then at Fulham, gave occasion to one of her countrymen, who had long tried in vain to find Abel in town, to say, that he despaired of ever meeting with him, for he was always going to Foolish.

frequently employed as first woman in the operas of the principal cities of Italy; an honour to which she is well entitled, if an old adage of that country is true: that "there are a hundred requisites necessary to make a good singer, of which, whoever is gifted with a fine voice has ninety-nine."

The principal singers at the opera in London during the season of 1777 and 1778, were FRANCESCO RONCAGLIA, and FRANCESCA DANZI, afterwards Madame Le Brun. The dramas in which they sung, besides pasticcios, were CRESO and ERIFILE, by Sacchini.

Roncaglia had an elegant face and figure; a sweet toned voice; a chaste and well disciplined style of singing; hazarded nothing, and was always in tune. The best part of his voice, which was a soprano, was from D to A, he sometimes went to C, but not easily. Both his voice and shake were feeble; and of the three great requisites of a complete stage singer, pathos, grace, and execution, which the Italians call cantabile, graziosa, and bravura, he was in perfect possession of only the second. As his voice is merely a voce di camera, his singing in a room, when confined to the graziosa, leaves nothing to wish. He is of the Bologna school, formed by Bernacchi, and reminds his hearers of one of that master's best scholars, Guarducci. As Signora Danzi, now Madame Le Brun, had a voice well in tune, a good shake, great execution, a prodigious compass, and great knowledge of Music, with youth, and a face and figure far from disagreeable; it seems difficult to account for the little pleasure her performance afforded to persons accustomed to good Italian singing. However, the problem certainly admits of a solution, if it be considered, that the natural tone of her voice is not interesting; that she had never been in Italy, and had been constantly imitating the tone and difficulties of instruments; that her chief labour and ambition had been to surprise, concluding perhaps that wonder however excited includes pleasure; and forgetting that though an ounce of salt may make a soup or ragoût sufficiently savoury, yet that two ounces will spoil it; in short, forgetting that she is not a bird in a bush or a cage, and that from a human figure, representing a princess or great personage, sonage, it is natural for an audience to expect human passions to be expressed in such tones, and with such art and energy, as will not degrade an individual of our own species, into a being of an inferior order (z).

In 1777, two new comic singers appeared in PAESIELLO's burletta of Le due Contesse: JERMOLI and the TODI. The manner of singing of the tenor Jermoli, more resembled that of a German, than an Italian; but neither in voice, taste, nor action, did his performance ever surpass mediocrity. And as for Signora Todi, she must have improved very much since she was in England, or we treated her very unworthily; for though her voice was thought to be feeble and seldom in tune while she was here, she has since been extremely admired in France, Spain, Russia, and Germany, as a most touching and exquisite performer.

In autumn 1778, the lyric theatre opened with a well selected and agreeable pasticcio, called DEMOFOONTE, in which the two principal singers, Pacchierotti and Bernasconi, appeared on our stage for the first time. Of BERNASCONI little is to be said, but that she had a neat and elegant manner of singing, though with a voice that was feeble and in decay. But to describe with discrimination the uncommon and varied powers of Pacchierotti would require a distinct dissertation of considerable length, rather than a short article incorporated in a general history of Music. We are, however, now arrived at a period of time when praise and censure are equally dangerous, and when little information can be communicated to the reader, with which he is not already acquainted. There are few subjects on which the opinions of men differ more than on the merit of public performers, particularly of the vocal kind. Some having been previously pleased by another voice and style of singing, listen unwillingly, and with a determination to hear nothing but defects; while others, unable to judge for themselves, have not

(z) In the summer of 1778 she went into Italy and sung at Milan with Pacchierotti, Rubinelli, and the Balducci; and during this journey it was imagined that she would have improved her style of singing; but travelling with her husband, an excellent performer on the hautbois, she seems to have listened to nothing else; and at her return to London she copied the tone of his instrument so exactly, that when he accompanied her in divisions of thirds and sixths, it was impossible to discover who was uppermost.

the courage to trust to their own feelings, without authority. Judgment and candour, the guides of so inconsiderable a part of an audience, too seldom speak loud, or endeavour to make proselytes, to have much weight or influence in fixing the character of a new singer. Indeed, nothing but a fine voice and uncommon powers of execution are sure of general applause; while original genius, taste, feeling, and refinement, are often friendless and unnoticed.

GASPARO PACCHIEROTTI, born in the Roman state, seems to have begun his career in 1770, at Palermo in Sicily, where he continued during 1771. In 1772, he was the principal singer in the great theatre of San Carlo at Naples, with the De Amicis. In 1773, at Bologna; 1774, at Naples again. In 1775, at Milan, with the Taiber; 1776, at Forli; 1777, at Genoa and Milan; and in 1778, at Lucca and Turin, previous to his arrival in England, where his reputation had penetrated a considerable time, and where Signor Piozzi, who had heard him at Milan, sung several airs after his manner, in a style that excited great ideas of his pathetic powers. The Travels of Captain Brydone had likewise contributed to raise public expectation; indeed, my own was excited so much, that I eagerly attended the first general rehearsal, in which though he sung sotto voce under a bad cold in extreme severe weather, my pleasure was such as I had never experienced before. The natural tone of his voice is so interesting, sweet, and pathetic, that when he had a long note, or mezza di voce, I never wished him to change it, or to do any thing but swell, diminish, or prolong it in whatever way he pleased, to the utmost limits of his lungs. A great compass of voice downwards, with an ascent up to B b and sometimes to C in alt, with an unbounded fancy, and a power not only of executing the most refined and difficult passages of other singers, but of inventing new embellishments, which, as far as my musical reading and experience extended, had never then been on paper, made him, during his long residence here, a new singer to me every time I heard him. If the different degrees of sweetness in musical tones to the ear might be compared to the effects of different flavours on the palate, it would perhaps convey my idea of its perfection.

fection by saying that is as superior to the generality of vocal sweetness, as that of the pine apple is, not only to other fruits, but to sugar or treacle. Many voices, though clear and well in tune, are yet insipid and uninteresting, for want of piquancy and flavour. A more perfect shake on short notice, and in every degree of velocity, I never heard. His execution of rapid divisions was so true and distinct, that, with a loud and vulgar-toned voice, he would have been admired as a bravura singer; but the natural tone, and, if I may so call it, sentimental expression and character of his voice, is such, as to make many hearers lament his condescending to rival the lark, or ever, even in pathetic songs, quitting simplicity in order to change or embellish a passage in the most new, artful, or ingenious manner possible. But to lovers and judges of Music who constantly attend the opera, it seems desirable that the performers, during the run of a musical drama, should have the power of stimulating attention to an air often repeated, by a variety of new graces and ornaments, which, in some measure, renovate a song every time it is performed; yet though Pacchierotti possessed this power far beyond any singer I had heard, the public, frequently poisoned by the shafts of envious professors, and perhaps dilettante, was always more inclined to censure than duly commend this talent; for which I can no otherways account, unless this seeming injustice still proceeded from the wishes of an audience to hear more of the sweet tones of his natural voice, undisturbed by art or science.

That Pacchierotti's feeling and sensibility are uncommon, is not only discoverable by his voice and performance, but countenance, in which, through a benign and benevolent general expression, there is a constant play of features, which manifests the sudden workings and agitations of his soul. He is an enthusiast in his art, and feels the merit of a composition and performance with true Italian energy. Nice and fastidious in criticising himself, he consequently does not gratify frivolous and doubtful claims upon his admiration or applause; but to real and intrinsic merit, I never met with more candour, or heard more judicious and zealous panegyric bestowed from one professor to another.

To hearers not accustomed to the refinements of singing, his extemporaneous flights and divisions were so new, that they at first were doubtful whether to blame or commend. But as the true criterion of merit in the arts, is to improve on examination, all persons of knowledge and feeling constantly experienced encreasing pleasure at each performance, however frequent the opportunities may have been of gratifying their wish to hear him.

He is not gifted with a very robust constitution, nor was his chest proof against the rude and sudden attacks of our climate; so that though he was never obliged by indisposition to be absent from the stage when his duty called him thither, above once or twice during four years residence among us, yet his voice was sometimes affected by slight colds, from which the stoutest natives are not exempt; but when it was quite in order and obedient to his will, there was a perfection so exquisite in tone, taste, knowledge, sensibility, and expression, that my conceptions in the art could not imagine it possible to be surpassed.

The low notes of his voice were so full and flexible, that in private, among his particular friends and admirers, I have often heard him sing Anfani's and David's tenor songs in their original pitch, in a most perfect and admirable manner, going down sometimes as low as B b on the second line in the base.

It appears that in his youth, when his chest was strong, while stimulated by a love of perfection and a determination to execute every conquerable difficulty, he studied with such unremitting diligence and assiduity as have enabled him to execute, at sight, in all clefs, and in every style of composition, the most difficult songs that have been composed, with such facility, precision, and expression, as if he had long perused and prepared them for public performance. This I have often seen him do in original scores, that it was impossible for him ever to have seen before. He was the only modern singer that of late years I had found able to enter into the style of composers and performers of past times; but being an excellent mimic, he seems never to have heard a singer of great abilities without remembering the particular traits, inflexions, tone of voice, and expressions, which rendered him or her famous. Though he seemed to have a particular zeal for the success of his friend friend Bertoni's composition at the opera; yet I never perceived a want of ardour in his performance of Sacchini's Music, particularly in Rinaldo, where he sung with as much energy, taste, and expression, as ever it was possible for him to manifest on any occasion. And in concerts, he treated the audience with a greater variety of masters in the songs he selected than any singer of my time had ever done. At the Hay-market he was usually obliged to lower his performance, particularly duets, to the level of a first woman of very moderate abilities, we except Madame Le Brun, who was however so cold and instrumental in her manner of singing, that they did not well accord together. I know, there were many frequenters of concerts, who called themselves lovers of Music and judges of singing, and yet disliked both his voice and manner, and did not scruple to say that he had never sung a note in tune during his residence in this country; which was such an insult upon the ears and feelings of his admirers, that they, in revenge, flatly denied their claims to superior knowledge, taste, or experience in such matters.

Almost every great singer unites himself in interest and friendship with some particular composer, who writes to his peculiar compass of voice, talents, and style of singing. Thus Manzoli and Pescetti, Guarducci and Sacchini, Millico and Gluck, the Agujari and Colla, and Pacchierotti and Bertoni, were closely connected.

FERDINANDO BERTONI, of Salo, a little island in the neighbourhood of Venice, who accompanied Pacchierotti to England, has been upwards of forty years a dramatic composer; having set the opera of Orazio Curiazio for the theatre of San Cassiano at Venice, in 1746; and since that time he has not only been often employed for that city, where he has been long maestro of the conservatorio of the Mendicanti, but for all the principal theatres of Italy, particularly that of Turin, where he has been opera composer at seven different carnivals*. Sacchini was in too high favour

* Upon the death of Galuppi, in 1785, Bertoni was appointed maestro di cappella to St. Mark's church and the state of Venice, the most honourable and lucrative employment at which a musical composer in Italy can aspire.

here at the time of Bertoni's arrival in London for his success to be very considerable. Though the invention of this master is not very fertile, his melody is graceful and interesting; and though he never had perhaps sufficient genius and fire to attain the sublime, yet he is constantly natural, correct, and judicious; often pleasing, and sometimes happy. His opera of Quinto Fabio, which had twelve representations in England, was previously performed twenty times at Padua with the greatest applause. Indeed, a considerable part of its success, both here and in Italy, may be justly ascribed to the admirable manner in which his friend Pacchierotti performed the part of Fabio, where he appeared not only as a great singer, but an intelligent and spirited actor.

On the first arrival of Pacchierotti in England, when the Bernasconi was first woman, Coppola, a languid and uninteresting soprano, second man, and Pozzi second woman; Adamberger was the tenor, who with a better voice would have been a good singer; with Micheli for all work, and his scholar Rovedino, a very young singer with a well toned base voice, who brought up the rear.

In the summer of 1779, Pacchierotti went to Italy; and Roncaglia, who, during the applause he received in singing: So che fedele, a graceful air in Sacchini's opera of Creso, had been hastily engaged for another season, before Pacchierotti had been heard, returned to supply his place, as Madame Le Brun did that of the Bernasconi.

At the end of Roncaglia's second season, 1780, Pacchierotti came again to England, and continued principal singer at the opera till after the Commemoration of Handel, in 1784. During which time, if Madame Le Brun be excepted, we were unfortunate in all the first women with whom he appeared. These were the Prudon, a young singer with a voice which study and experience, had she been allowed a longer life, might have rendered fit for the place she only supplied occasionally, till the arrival of the MACCHERINI, who disappointed every hearer. Nor were the expectations of the public better gratified on the arrival of Signora MORIGI, daughter of the buffo caricato of that name, who on his first first coming to England in 1766, so admirably performed the part of Tagliaferro, the German soldier in the Buona Figliuola; but alas! his long services were not sufficient to render the public partial to his daughter, who in the autumn of 1782, when she appeared in the opera of Medonte, astonished the audience, not by the powers she had, but by those she wanted; for it was hardly possible to account for such a singer having been recommended, or thought of, for the first woman of a serious opera, or indeed of any opera. She was not only much limited in her taste, style, and knowledge, but in total want of voice. In recitative she had not one musical tone; and in her songs the greatest efforts she made amounted to little more than a shriek, except about three notes at the top of her compass, (F, G, and A,) on which, when she had time allowed for it, she could make something like a swell. She was young, had a pretty figure, and, with teeth, would have been handsome. Signora LUSINI, and other female singers, were tried with Pacchierotti before his departure, but unsuccessfully (a).

On his arrival in London the second time, he found the tenor, ANSANI, here, who, though he disputed Roncaglia's claims to superiority, submitted, with more than his usual patience, to Pacchierotti's supremacy. This performer had one of the best tenor voices I ever heard on our opera stage. It was sweet, powerful, even, and of great compass and volubility. Nor could any defect be justly ascribed to it, except perhaps a little want of variety, spirit, and animation, in singing allegros, to distinguish joy from sorrow. For there was a natural melancholy and pathos in his tones on all occasions, which rendered his performance somewhat monotonous. His shake was not good, and he was not a deep musician. However, the same critics who censured Pacchierotti's licentiousness in changing and embellishing his airs, were most severe on Ansani's want of those powers. The truth is, that he was too good for a first singer, of such limited talents as Roncaglia, to like; they had

(a) The airs in which Pacchierotti's natural sweetness of voice, taste, expression, and general powers of pleasing seem to have made the deepest impression, were: Misero

pargoletto, by Monza, in Demofonte; Non temer, by Bertoni, in the same opera; Dolce speme, by Sacchini, in Rinaldo; and Ti seguirò fedele, in Olimpiade, by Pacchiello.

disagreed in Italy, and here their enmity broke out anew, with double violence. Sacchini took sides in the dispute, and Anfani being neither of an humble, patient, or conciliating disposition, was in a perpetual warfare during the two seasons he remained in this country.

His figure and countenance on the stage were good; he was tall, thin, and had the look of a person of high rank. He told me, I believe with great truth, that he was sempre in guai, always in affliction and vexation, from the natural irritability of his temper, and the quarrels and ill success of his peevish, affected, and unfortunate wife; who, if ever she had a voice, lost it before her arrival in this country. I never could receive any pleasure from her performance; every note, feeble as it was, she squeezed out with such difficulty, and with a look so cross and miserable, that after her first exhibition I never wished more either to see or hear the Signora Maccherini, who was so proper a match for her husband in sweetness of disposition, that in Italy, when employed in the same theatre, if one happened to be applauded more than the other, they have been known mutually to employ persons to hiss the successful rival (b).

The comic opera in England, after the departure of Lovattini, seemed to be in a languid and declining state. TREBBI's performance was never very attractive; and that of his successor, JERMOLI, was still more feeble, and less in favour with the public. The same may be said of VIGANONI, with some small diminution of praise. But he, or rather the managers, had the advantage of a very captivating prima buffa in the MADDALENA ALLEGRI, who supplied his defects, and was soon distinguished by the public. Her first appearance seems to have been at Venice in 1771, and after singing at several other Italian theatres, in 1774, she went into Germany, where she continued to perform at Manheim and Ratisbon, till the year 1789, when

(b) The Maccherini is said to have been once a very agreeable singer, and considerable favourite on the Continent. Soon after her first appearance, she ran away with an English nobleman from the theatre at Florence, in her stage dress, before the performance was over.

she returned to Venice, and after singing there at the theatre of San Samuele, during the carnival, she came to England in 1781. Her voice was very sweet and flexible, though not very powerful. Her taste, closes, and variety of passages in the Viaggiatori Felici, composed by Anfosfi, which was the first burletta in which she appeared on our stage, were universally admired. However, after she had been heard in the Contadina in Corte, of Sacchini, and in Anfosfi's Vecchi Burlati, it was found by some that her riffioramenti were not inexhaustible, and by others, that she did not always sing perfectly in tune. In 1783, she returned again to Germany, and is now (1788) at Dresden in the service of the court of Saxony.

Within these last ten years, DANCING seems to have encroached upon Music, and instead of being a dependant or auxiliary, is aiming not only at independency, but tyranny. During the last century, dancing had very little share of importance in a musical drama. As the British government consists of three estates: King, Lords, and Commons, so an opera in its first institution consisted of Poetry, Music, and Machinery: but as politicians have observed, that the ballance of power is frequently disturbed by some one of the three estates encroaching upon the other two, so one of these three constituent parts of a musical drama generally preponderates, at the expence of the other two. In the first operas POETRY seems to have been the most important personage; but about the middle of the last century, MACHINERY and DECORATION seemed to take the lead, and diminished the importance both of Music and poetry. But as the art of singing and dramatic composition improved, MUSIC took the lead, and poetry and decoration became of less consequence, till the judgment of Apostolo Zeno, and the genius of Metastasio, lifted lyric poetry far above its usual level. But a fourth and new estate seems to have sprung up in DANCING, which has almost annihilated the influence of the former three. Yet it seems for the common interest that no one of the constituent parts of a musical drama should arrogate to itself more than its due share of notice. If poetry and Music are degraded into humble dependants on dancing, the story of the drama had better be be told in pantomime; and as articulation is unnecessary, let the fiddle do the rest.

After the departure of Mademoiselle Heinel, no dancing had so much delighted the frequenters of the opera as that of M. Vestris le Jeune and Mademoiselle Baccelli, till the arrival of M. Vestris l' Aîné, when pleasure was sublimed into ecstasy. In the year 1781, Pacchierotti had been heard so frequently, that his singing was no impediment to conversation, or even to animated narrative and debate; but while the elder Vestris was on the stage, if during a pas seul, any of his admirers forgot themselves so much as to applaud him with their hands, there was an instant check put to his rapture by a choral hu—sh! For those lovers of Music who talked the loudest when Pacchierotti was singing a pathetic air, or making an exquisite close, were now thrown into agonies of displeasure, lest the graceful movements du dieu de la dance, or the attention of his votaries, should be disturbed by audible approbation. Since that time, the most mute and respectful attention has been given to the manly grace of Le Picq, and light fantastic toe of the younger Vestris; to the Rossis, the Theodores, the Coulons, and the Hilligsburgs, while the poor singers have been disturbed, not by the violence of applause, but the clamour of inattention.

The year 1784 was rendered a memorable æra in the annals of Music by the splendid and magnificent manner in which the birth, genius, and abilities of HANDEL, were celebrated in Westminster Abbey and the Pantheon, by five performances of pieces selected from his own works, and executed by a band of more than 500 voices and instruments in the presence and under the immediate auspices of their Majesties and the first personages in the kingdom. This event, so honourable to the art of Music and an illustrious artist, and so worthy of a place here, having been minutely recorded already in a distinct work (c), I shall only add, that this celebration has been since establishment into an annual musical festival for charitable

(c) Account of the musical Performances in COMMEMORATION OF HANDEL, by the author of this history, written and published for the benefit of the MUSICAL FUND; an establishment which his Majesty having since deigned to honour with his patronage, the members and guardians have been permitted to incorporate themselves under the title of ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

purposes,

purposes, in which the number of performers, and perfection of the performances, as well as favour of the public, have continued to increase. In 1785, the vocal and instrumental band amounted to six hundred and sixteen. In 1786, to seven hundred and forty-one. And in 1787, to eight hundred and six vocal and instrumental performers.

In the spring of 1784, Madame MARRA first arrived in England, being engaged to sing six nights at the Pantheon. The dissolution of parliament and general election happening soon after her arrival, the audiences to which she sung were not very numerous, nor had her performance the effect it deserved, till she sung at Westminster Abbey; where she was heard by near three thousand of the first people in the kingdom, not only with pleasure, but extacy and rapture (d).

In the summer of this memorable year, not only Pacchierotti and his friend Bertoni quitted the kingdom, but Sacchini and Giardini; two musicians whose genius and abilities are of too high an order not to be mentioned with particular respect.

ANTONIO SACCHINI, of Naples, arrived in England in 1772, after having composed for all the great theatres in Italy and Germany, with increasing success. And here he not only supported the high reputation he had acquired on the Continent, but vanquished the natural enemies of his talents in England. His operas of the Cid and Tamerlano were equal, if not superior, to any musical dramas I had heard in any part of Europe. The airs of Millico, the first man, were wholly written in the delicate and pathetic style of that singer; as the first woman's part was in the spirited and nervous style of Girelli. And he cherished the talents of the inferior singers in so judicious a manner, that all their defects were constantly disguised or concealed. Savoi, notwithstanding his fine voice, had been worse than unnoticed before this period, for he was almost insulted; yet so excellent was the Music he had to execute in Sacchini's operas, and so favourably did it call him into notice, that instead of going off the stage in silence, he was applauded and even encored nearly as much and as frequently as the first fingers. The CARRARA too, a young singer, whose voice was naturally drowsy, childish, and insipid, from the beauty of her songs, was well received. Indeed, each of these dramas was so entire, so masterly, yet so new and natural, that there was nothing left for criticism to censure, though innumerable beauties to point out and admire. It is evident that this composer had a taste so exquisite, and so totally free from pedantry, that he was frequently new without effort; never thinking of himself or his fame for any particular excellence, but totally occupied with the ideas of the poet, and the propriety, consistency, and effect of the whole drama. His accompaniments, though always rich and ingenious, never call off attention from the voice, but, by a constant transparency, the principal melody is rendered distinguishable through all the contrivance of imitative and picturesque design in the instruments.

(d) See printed account of the several performances, quarto.

In the year 1770, when I saw Sacchini at Venice, he told me that he had composed near forty serious and ten comic operas; and in 1778, upon enquiring of him to what number his dramatic works then amounted, he said to seventy-eight, of which he had forgot even the names of two. Sacchini, while he remained at Venice in the character of Maestro dell' ospidalello Conservatorio, by the number of masses and motets he had composed, manifested himself to be as able to write for the church as stage (e). He remained too long in England for his fame and fortune. The first was injured by cabals and by what ought to have increased it, the number of his works; and the second by inactivity and want of œconomy. Upon a difference with Signor Rauzzini, this singer from a fond friend became his most implacable foe; declaring himself to be the author of the principal songs in all the late operas to which Sacchini had set his name; and threatening to make affidavit of it before a magistrate. The utmost I could ever believe of this accusation was, that during Sacchini's severe fits of the gout, when he was called upon for his operas before they were ready, he might have employed Rauzzini,

(e) I procured in Germany an admirable mass, à due cori, which he composed for the funeral of a great personage at the court of the Duke of Wirtemburgh, of which he had not himself a copy.

as he and others had done Anfosfi in Italy, to fill up the parts, set some of the recitatives, and perhaps compose a few of the flimsy airs for the under singers. The story, however, gained ground, and was propagated by his enemies, though always disbelieved and contemned by his friends and the reasonable part of the public. In the summer of 1781, he went first to Paris, where he was almost adored; but after increasing his reputation there by new productions, he returned the following year to London, where he only augmented his debts and embarrassments; so that, in 1784, he took a final leave of this country, and settled at Paris, where he not only obtained a pension from the Queen of France, but the theatrical pension, in consequence of three successful pieces. This graceful, elegant, and judicious composer died at Paris in September 1786, where he was honoured with a public funeral, and every mark of respect and distinction, which sensibility and gratitude could bestow on an artist, though a foreigner, who had contributed so largely to their most elegant pleasures.

Though living musicians are, in general, neither fair nor safe objects of history or criticism, while rumour is loud, and the public able to judge for itself; yet the merit of some is so prominent and universally acknowledged, that total silence would perhaps disappoint those even who only look in a book for what they already know. And the professor of whom I am going to speak has been so long the delight and wonder of our country; has so much improved the general knowledge and practice of his particular instrument; and had so large a share in our musical transactions, that he is well entitled to an honourable niche in my work.

FELICE GIARDINI, a native of Piedmont, when a boy, was a choirister in the Duomo at Milan, under Paladini, of whom he learned singing, the harpsichord, and composition; but having previously manifested a disposition and partiality for the violin, his father recalled him to Turin, in order to receive instructions on that instrument of the famous Somis. But though his preference to the violin, upon which he soon became the greatest performer in Europe, seems a lucky circumstance, yet he had talents which would have made him a superior harpsichord player, had he continued to practise that instrument; but he told me himself, that he was perfectly cured of that vanity, at Paris, by the performance of Madame de S. Maur, a scholar of Rameau, who played in such a manner, as not only made him ashamed of his own performance, but determined him never to touch the instrument again in serious practice. He went to Rome early in his life, and afterwards to Naples, where, having obtained a place among Ripienos in the opera orchestra, he used to flourish and change passages much more frequently than he ought to have done. "However," says Giardini, of whom I had this account, "I acquired great reputation among the ignorant for my impertinence; yet one night, during the opera, Jomelli, who had composed it, came into the orchestra, and seating himself close by me, I determined to give the Maestro di Capella a touch of my taste and execution; and in the symphony of the next song, which was in a pathetic style, I gave loose to my fingers and fancy; for which I was rewarded by the composer with a—violent slap in the face; which," adds Giardini, "was the best lesson I ever received from a great master in my life." Jomelli, after this, was however very kind, in a different way, to this young and wonderful musician.

Giardini came to England in 1750. His first public performance in London, at which I was present, was at a benefit concert for old Cuzzoni, who sung in it with a thin cracked voice, which almost frightened out of the little theatre in the Hay-market, the sons of those who had perhaps heard her at the great theatre in the same street, with extacy. But when Giardini played a solo and concerto, though there was very little company, the applause was so loud, long, and furious, as nothing but that bestowed on Garrick had ever equalled. I had met him the night before at a private concert, with Guadagni and Frasi, at the house of Napthali Franks, Esq. who was himself one of the best dilettanti performers on the violin at that time; and we were all equally surprised and delighted with the various powers of Giardini at so early a period of his life; when, besides solos of his own composition of the most brilliant kind, he played several of Tartini's, in manuscript, at sight, and at five or six feet distance from the notes, as well as if he had never practised any thing else. His tone; bow; execution; graceful carriage of himself and his instrument; playing some of my own Music, and making it better than I intended, or had imagined it in the warm moments of conception; and, lastly, playing variations, extempore, during half an hour, upon a new but extraordinary kind of birth-day minuet, which accidentally lay on the harpsichord—all this threw into the utmost astonishment the whole company, who had never been accustomed to hear better performers than Festing, Brown, and Collet! Of his academy, scholars, manner of leading at the opera and oratorio, performance in private concerts, compositions vocal and instrumental, I shall say nothing here, lest my praise should be too much for others, and too little for himself.

The Opera-house was opened in autumn, 1784, in no very auspicious manner: Pacchierotti being succeeded by CRESCENTINI, with a feeble and uncertain voice, and the Lufini not much surpassed, by the Ferrarese del Bene. And in the burletta troop, the tenor and prima buffa were so inferior to the expectations of the public, that the season went on unprofitably, till after Christmas.

1785. In the spring of this year, Crescentini, in the serious operas, was superseded by Tenducci, who revived Gluck's Orfeo; and the D'Orta, in the comic, by the Ferrarese. But these arrangements, with the assistance of the new serious tenor, Babbini, and the excellent Baritono, Tasca, would hardly have crouded the house, without the more attractive assistance of the admirable dancers, Le Picq, Vestris, Rossi, and Theodore.

TASCA, who had a powerful base voice, and seemed to be a good musician, returned to Italy at the end of this season. He had been here three years, during which time he was not only a useful performer at the opera, but in the oratorios and performances in Westminster Abbey. His voice, however, wanted mellowness and flexibility; for, like an oaken plant, though strong, it was stiff.

This was likewise the last season that ANFOSSI remained in England. He came hither in 1782, but, like his countryman, Traetta, arrived here at an unfavourable time: for as Sacchini had preceded him, and as the winter following was only rendered memorable at the Opera-house by misfortunes, disgrace, and bankruptcy, ruptcy, his reputation was rather diminished than increased in this kingdom. But though his resources failed him, and circumstances were unfavourable to him here, he had produced before his arrival in this country many works that have endeared him to his own, where he is now in the highest reputation.

In the summer, the whole opera machine came to pieces, and all its springs, disordered by law suits, warfare, and factions, were not collected and regulated, till the next year.

1786. The regency being at length settled, and Mr. Gallini invested with the power of ruining himself and others, DIDONE ABBANDONATA, a pasticcio serious opera, was brought out previous to the arrival of Rubinelli, and had considerable success. But this must be wholly ascribed to the abilities of Madame Mara, who sung on our opera stage for the first time. Indeed, she was so superior to all other performers in the troop, that she seemed a divinity among mortals. The pleasure with which she was heard, had a considerable increase from her choice of songs; which, being in different styles by Sacchini, Piccini, Mortellari, and Gazzaniga, were all severally encored during the run of the opera; a circumstance, which I never remember to have happened to any other singer (f).

MATTEO BABBINI, the tenor, whose voice was sweet, though not powerful, had an elegant and pleasing style of singing. It is easy to imagine that his voice had been better; and not difficult to discover, though his taste was modern, and many of his riffioramenti refined and judicious, that his graces were sometimes redundant, and his manner affected. His importance was very much diminished when he sung with the Mara, and after the arrival of Rubinelli, he sunk into insignificance.

GIOVANNI RUBINELLI arrived in England during the run of Didone, in April 1786. His journey hither from Rome, where he sung during the carnival of this year, was not very propitious; as the weather was uncommonly inclement, and he was not only overturned in his chaise at Macon, in France, but after quitting (f) These airs were: Son regina, by Sacchini; Se il ciel mi divide, by Piccini; Ah, non lasciarmi, no, by Mortellari; and a Scena, in the last act, by Gazzaniga.

the ship, in which he sailed from Calais to Dover, the boat that was to have landed him was overfet near the shore, and he remained a considerable time up to his chin in water, to the great risk of his health, his voice, and even his life. The first time I meet with his name in the dramatis personæ of an opera, is in Caliroe, set by Sacchini, for Stutgard, 1770, where he performed the part of second man. He seems to have continued at the court of Wirtemberg, in no higher station several years, as Graffi and Muzio are named before him in the Indice de' Spettacoli Theatrale. His name does not appear as first serious man in Italy till 1774, when he sung at Modena, in Paefiello's Alessandro nell' Indie, and Anfossi's Demofonte. After this, he appeared as principal singer in all the great theatres of Italy, till his arrival in London. The first opera in which Rubinelli appeared in England, was a pasticcio, called VIRGINIA, May the 4th. His own part, however, was chiefly composed by ANGIOLO TARCHI, a young Neapolitan, who is advancing into eminence with great rapidity. Rubinelli is, in figure, tall and majestic; in countenance, mild and benign. There is dignity in his appearance on the stage; and the instant the tone of his voice is heard, there remains no doubt with the audience of his being the first singer. It is a true and full contralto from C, in the middle of the scale, to the octave above. He sometimes, however, goes down to G, and up to F, but neither the extra low notes nor the high are very full. All above C is falset, and so much more feeble and of a different register from the rest, that I was uneasy when he transcended the compass of his natural and real voice. His shake is not sufficiently open; but in other respects he is an admirable singer. His style is grand, and truly dramatic. His execution is neat and distinct. His taste and embellishments are new, select, and masterly. His articulation is so pure and well accented, in his recitatives, that no one who understands the Italian language can ever want to look at the book of the words, while he is singing. His chest is so strong, and his intonation so perfect, that I have very seldom heard him sing out of tune. His voice is more clear and certain in a theatre, where it has room to expand, than than in a room. He had a greater variety of embellishments than any singer I had heard, except Pacchierotti, who not only surpasses him in richness of invention and fancy, but in the native pathos, and touching expression of his voice. Yet Rubinelli, from the fulness of his voice, and greater simplicity of style, pleases a more considerable number of his hearers than Pacchierotti, though none perhaps, so exquisitely, as that singer used to please his real admirers. Rubinelli finding himself censured on his first arrival in England for changing and embellishing his airs, sung "Return, O God of Hosts," at Westminster Abbey, in so plain and unadorned a manner, that those who venerate Handel the most, thought him bald and insipid. Indeed, I missed several appoggiaturas, which I remember Mrs. Cibber to have introduced, who learned to sing the air from the composer himself; and who, though her voice was a thread, and her knowledge of Music very inconsiderable, yet from her intelligence of the words and native feeling, she sung this admirable supplication in a more touching manner, than the finest opera singer I ever heard attempt it; and Monticelli, Guadagni, Guarducci, and Pacchierotti, were of the number.

The second opera in which Rubinelli and the Mara sung together, was ARMIDA, May 25th. All the Music, except the Mara's part, in this drama was the composition of MORTELLARI, whose taste in singing, if we may judge from the three great singers we have lately heard, Pacchierotti, Rubinelli, and Marchesini, is of the most refined and exquisite sort. Mortellari was a scholar of Piccini; but, though of the Neapolitan school, his compositions are less bold, nervous, and spirited, than elegant, graceful, and pleasing. But being Palermitano by birth, his strains may be rather called Sicilian than Neapolitan.

Virginia and Armida, with now and then a comic opera, were alternately performed till the end of the season, July 12th.

The King's theatre was not opened again till December 23d, when ALCESTE, a new opera, composed by M. GRESNICH, a German master of the Italian school, was first performed. This opera, to which the public did not seem partial, was represented but three times before it was stopt by the indisposition of Madame Mara.

1787. January 13th, was first performed, a comic opera called
GIANNINA

GIANNINA E BERNARDONI, originally composed by Cimarosa, but in which many songs were now introduced of Cherubini. There were several pretty ariette alla Veneziana, but the drama was thought too long, and too full of silly Italian buffoonery. Mingozi, the first buffo, was ill, and his part consigned to another who merited and met with but little applause. Signora BENINI, however, the first buffa, gave me great pleasure by her performance. Her voice was not powerful, but of a good quality, and perfectly in tune. Her execution surprises no more than her voice; but her taste is good, and her manner of singing extremely graceful and pleasing. If she was a dilettante and only to sing in a room, her performance would be perfect.

CHERUBINI, the nominal composer at the opera this year, was a young man of genius, who had no opportunity while he was here of displaying his abilities; but, previous to his arrival, he had frequently been noticed in his own country, where he is now travelling fast to the temple of Fame. His opera of GIULIO SABINO, was murdered in its birth, for want of the necessary support of capital singers in the principal parts; Babini, the tenor, being elevated to first man, and the Ferrarese first woman, were circumstances not likely to prejudice the public in favour of the composer.

February 17th, IL TUTOR BURLATO, a comic opera by Paefiello, was first performed, in which MINGOZZI, being somewhat recovered, appeared in the principal man's part. He seems a good musician, and to have a good style of singing, but he was still too feeble to excite any other sensation in the audience, than pity for the state of his health.

About this time was performed a serious opera, set by Signor Rauzzini, called LA VESTALE, which, from our long acquaintance with his taste and style, was heard with less attention, perhaps, than it deserved.

In March, Handel's opera of Julius Cæsar was revived for a benefit. Though few of the original airs were retained, yet so many fine things from his other operas supplied the omissions, that after fulfilling the purpose intended, it was performed for the manager, with increasing favour, the rest of the season.

In April, the curiosity of the public was excited and gratified by the arrival of two new comic singers, Signor Morelli and Signora Storace, from Vienna, whence rumour had been previously very loud in praise of their abilities. The opera in which they first appeared was GLI SCHIAVI PER AMORE, by Paisiello, in which, besides a great number of gay and agreeable airs, there are fragments of excellent composition, in which new passages and effects abound, as usual, in the works of that admirable master.

GIOVANNI MORELLI has a base voice of nearly the same force and compass as Tasca's, but infinitely more flexible and pleasing. He is likewise a good actor, and superior in all respects to every buffo caricato we have had since Morigi's first appearance in the Buona Figliuola, 1766; yet, as a principal singer to supply the place of a tenor, it must be owned that he is inadequate to the expectations of those who remember the sweet voice and excellent humour of Lovattini.

ANNA STORACE, a native of England, who went young into Italy; where, by hearing good singing, with quickness of parts and study, she acquired a very good taste, and first gave us l'avant goût of Marchesi's embellishments. But though a lively and intelligent actress, and an excellent performer in comic operas, her voice, in spite of all her care, does not favour her ambition to appear as a serious singer. There is a certain crack and roughness, which, though it fortifies the humour and effects of a comic song, in scenes where laughing, scolding, crying, or quarrelling is necessary; yet in airs of tenderness, sorrow, or supplication, there is always reason to lament the deficiency of natural sweetness, where art and pains are not wanting.

The opera in which these two performers first appeared, was performed to full houses, with great applause, to the end of the season (g).

(g) The principal dancers of 1786 and 1787, were M. Gojon, with Mademoiselle Mozon, and Madame Perignon, whose performance was frequently much applauded.

December 8th, the King's theatre opened with the comic opera of IL RE TEODORO; another proof of the fertility of Paesello's pen. This burletta had been performed all over Italy and Germany with the greatest applause, previous to its being brought on our stage. The Music, that was not changed, is extremely original and pleasing, particularly the finales. There was a mixture of airs by Corri, Mazzinghi, and Storace; but besides destroying the unity of style, the certainty of there being merit of some kind or other in every composition of Paesello, inclines lovers of Music to lament, that any of his airs should be changed or omitted.

1788. January 3d, a comic opera originally composed by Cimarosa, entitled L' ITALIANA IN LONDRA, was brought on our stage by the name of LA LOCANDIERA. Whether this celebrated burletta was injured by changing the drama, and laying the scene in Holland, instead of London, or by the mediocrity of most of the performers, I know not; but I was much disappointed in its effect, after all that I had heard and read of its prodigious favour in Italy, for three years successively, in every great and little town where there is a theatre, as well as Germany and Poland. Much of the Music seemed feeble, common, and not of the newest taste. The symphony, however, of one movement only, and the duet in the second act, taken from another opera, were very good.

On the last night of this opera, a new dance, composed by the celebrated M. Noverre, with his usual ingenuity and resources, called CUPID AND PSYCHE, was exhibited. The effect of this ballet was very extraordinary; for so great was the pleasure it afforded the spectators, that Noverre was unanimously called for on the stage to receive the applause and acclamations due to his merit. He was led on by M. Vestris and Hilligberg, who had so admirably performed the parts of Cupid and Psyche, and crowned with laurel on the stage not only by them, and the other principal dancers, Messrs. Chevalier, Didelot, and the Coulon, but by all the figuranti who had been employed. This, though common in France, was a new mark of approbation in England.

No serious opera was attempted this season, till the arrival of Signor LUIGI MARCHESI, who having been engaged to sing at Turin during the carnival, was unable to perform in London till April 5th. This singer, whose talents have been the subject of praise and admiration in every great theatre of Europe, where musical dramas are performed in the Italian language, first appeared at Rome 1774, in a female character, the usual introduction of a young and promising singer, with a soprano voice and beautiful person. In 1775, he performed the second man's part at Milan, with Pacchierotti, and at Venice with Millico; but the same year, he was advanced to the principal character at Treviso. In 1776 and 1777, he sung as first man at Munich and Padua; and by 1778, he had worked his way to the great theatre of San Carlo at Naples, which is the criterion and post of honour of an opera singer. He continued here two seasons, and has since performed with increasing celebrity at Pisa, Genoa, Florence, Milan, Rome, Petersburg, Vienna, and Turin.

The GIULIO SABINO of SARTI, was the first opera in which Marchesi performed on our stage. The elegant and beautiful Music of this drama did not please so much here as it ought, and had done in other parts of Europe (b). Several of the songs, indeed, had been previously sung here at concerts, and did not appear new. Marchesi's style of singing is not only elegant and refined to an uncommon degree, but often grand and full of dignity, particularly in his recitatives and occasional low notes. His variety of embellishments and facility of running extempore divisions are truly marvellous. Many of his graces are new, elegant, and of his own invention; and he must have studied with intense application to enable himself to execute the divisions, and running shakes from the bottom of his compass to the top, even in a rapid series of half notes. But besides his vocal powers, his performance on the stage is extremely embellished, by the beauty of his person, and grace and propriety of his gestures. We expected a great singer, but that does not always include a fine actor.

Having heard the three greatest Italian singers of the present

(b) It was first set for Pacchierotti and the Pozzi at Venice 1781. Rubinelli performed the principal man's part, in Leghorn, Pisa, and Imola, in 1782. And after that, it was performed by inferior singers in several other cities of Italy, before the arrival of Marchesi in England.

times,

times, though the drawing a parallel, and pointing out their several excellencies and imperfections, would be easy, yet it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to do it without offending them and their exclusive admirers. Even comparative praise, as well as censure, would be thought invidious. But as I have received great pleasure from the performance of each, and never expect to find talents exactly similar in different singers, I am always thankful for the good I find, and endeavour to hear the rest with candour.

In discriminating the several excellencies of these great performers, I should, without hesitation, say, that Pacchierotti's voice was naturally sweet and touching; that he had a fine shake, an exquisite taste, great fancy, and a divine expression in pathetic songs. That Rubinelli's voice was full, majestic, and steady; and besides the accuracy of his intonations, that he was parsimonious and judicious in his graces. And that Marchesi's voice was elegant and flexible; that he was grand in recitative, and unbounded in fancy and embellishments.

All seem to have studied their art with great diligence during youth, and to read Music as easily as their native language.

As actors: Pacchierotti seemed in earnest on the stage, and consequently interested the spectator. Rubinelli had great dignity in his deportment, though he discovered but little sensibility by his gestures or tone of voice. Marchesi, with an elegant figure and pleasing countenance, is at once graceful and intelligent in his demeanor and action.

SIGNORA GIULIANI, the first woman of the present serious opera, with a person, figure, and style of singing, not inelegant, wants power of voice to fill a theatre so much, that in forcing her tones beyond their natural power, in order to be heard, all their proportions are destroyed, and she is justly accused of singing out of tune. To this defect, she adds that of a bad shake, and affectation. But such is the present scarcity of good female singers in Italy, that previous to her arrival in England, she had been employed as first woman with Pacchierotti and Rubinelli, in several great theatres of Italy. At present, the Pozzi and the Giorgi Banti, whose voices we know to be good, occupy the first places among Italian female singers; but whether study or experience have yet made

made them more perfect fingers than we formerly thought them, I am unable to inform my readers.

The tenor singer of this year, FORLIVESI, who has supplied that place in most of the great theatres of his country, and whose style of singing seems of the most modern cast, wants not only power of voice to be heard at a distance, but spirit and sweetness of tone sufficient to please those that are near him. The lower notes of his voice seem totally decayed; he has no shake; and though neither deficient in figure nor action, I am sorry truth obliges me to say, that he is one of the most uninteresting singers I have ever heard in an Italian serious opera.

I am now arrived at the end of this laborious chapter, which the various styles of composition and vocal performance that I had to describe, and the different subjects that are connected with the musical drama, have obliged me to make of an enormous length; but as the OPERA includes every species of Music, vocal and instrumental, its annals, if faithfully and amply recorded, seem nearly to comprise the whole history of the art. For here we have the most varied and impassioned composition, the most refined singing, the completest orchestra, with the occasional use of every species of solo-instrument; and though the general style of opera Music is necessarily dramatic, yet that of the church or chamber is not precluded. Choruses and solemn scenes of splendid sacrifice or funereal sorrow, in the ecclesiastic style, as well as scenes of simplicity and social gaiety, are here frequently admitted with propriety. Indeed, the opera is not only the union of every excellence in the art of Music, but in every other art; a junction which Voltaire has well described in his Mondain, when he says:

*Il faut se rendre a ce palais magique
Où les beaux arts, la danse, la Musique,
L'art de tromper les yeux par les couleurs,
L'art le plus heureux de séduire les coeurs
De cent plaisirs font un plaisir unique.*

Haste to the magic palace where abound
The joys sublime of verse, of dance, and sound;
Where bright illusion fascinates the sight,
And Siren-notes the enchanted ear delight;
Where all the plastic powers of art are shewn,
And joys unnumber'd are combin'd in one.

CHAP.

C H A P. VII.

Progress of the Musical Drama at VENICE, during the present Century.

THE opera composers at the beginning of the present century in Venice, were Marcantonio Ziani, Carlo Fran. Polarolo, Antonio Polarolo, his son, the Abate Pignatta, Bernardo Bergognoni, Gius. Benevento, and Tomaso Albinoni*.

In 1702, the elegant and graceful Fran. Gasparini composed Tiberio, his first opera for the city of Venice; and between that period and the year 1723, produced twenty-five operas for the same city only, besides the many he set for Rome, Bologna, and other places. In 1703, Vinacefe and Orgiani composed each of them an opera; and Antonio Caldara, whose first drama for this theatre was composed in 1697, this year produced the opera of Farnace. CALDARA was one of the greatest professors both for the church and stage that Italy can boast. He seems to have been in the service of the court of Vienna at its most glorious musical period, and had there the happiness of first setting the operas and oratorios of Apostolo Zeno and Metastasio, under the direction of those poets themselves. He continued the favourite composer in the imperial service till the year 1736, when he set Metastasio's opera of Achille in Sciro, written expressly for the marriage of the late Empress-queen with the Duke of Lorrain; so that he was a dramatic composer near fifty years.

In 1704, Polani, Mixte, Zanettini, Manza, Coletti, and other minor composers, gave specimens of their abilities in dramatic Music at Venice; but probably with little success, as we hear no more of them. It must not, however, be forgotten that, in 1706, the two excellent composers Antonio Bononcini and Antonio Lotti furnished, each of them, an opera for the Venetian theatre.

* See above, p. 77.

ANTONIO LOTTI, the disciple of Legrenzi and master of Marcello, Galuppi, and Pescetti, was first organist, and then maestro di capella, of St. Mark's church at Venice, and one of the greatest men of his profession. To all the science and learned regularity of the old school, he united grace and pathos. Hasse is said to have regarded his compositions as the most perfect of their kind. And I can venture to say, from my own experience, that his choral Music is at once solemn and touching. Between the year 1698 and 1717, he composed fifteen dramas for the Venetian theatre. I am much better acquainted with the church Music of this excellent master than with his operas. His cantatas, however, of which I am in possession of several, furnish specimens of recitative that do honour to his feeling. He was opera composer at the court of Dresden in 1718, and in 1720 returned to Venice, where he was living in 1732.

In 1707, Alessandro Scarlatti produced two operas, and Caldara another, for this city. In 1708, there were ten new operas composed for different theatres, by the masters already mentioned; and in 1709 to the productions of these great musicians, was added Agrippina, set for the theatre of S. Gio. Crisostomo, by George Frederic Handel, who was now on his travels.

No new composer appears to have entered the lists at Venice till 1712, when Floriano Aresti and Giacomo Rampini gave proofs of their existence, which were soon swept away by the waters of oblivion. In 1713, George Heinichen, another young Saxon composer, travelling through Italy, set two operas for the Venetian theatre, which were well received. This musician became eminent afterwards in Germany, and was appointed maestro di capella to the Electoral King of Poland, at the court of Saxony. Andrea Paulati, an obscure composer, set an opera this year, called I veri Amici, in which Nicolini sung, which, however, did not give celebrity to the composer, or longevity to his Music.

The

The next new master who distinguished himself at Venice, as a dramatic composer, was the celebrated DON ANTONIO VIVALDI, who, in 1714, set Orlando Finto Pazzo; and between that period and the year 1728, produced fourteen operas for the same city, in the performance of which he generally led the band. In 1715, three new composers appeared: Lucantonio Predieri, a Bolognese master, who besides the operas he set for different parts of Italy, composed a great number for Vienna, where he was much esteemed by the Emperor Charles VI. and spent the chief part of his life; Lorenzo Bassaggio, whose name has occurred no where else in my reading; and Fortunato Chelleri, of Milan, whose Music I have never seen, but his being employed at Venice to compose five operas, at a time when men of great abilities abounded in Italy, seems to imply merit of some kind or other. To his talent as a composer, he is said to have joined that of an excellent performer on the harpsichord.

In 1716, a composer appeared at Venice for the first time, who afterwards produced twelve operas for that city, besides many for other places: this was GIOVANNI PORTA, of whose dramatic Music we have already had occasion to speak in England. He was long in the service of Cardinal Ottoboni, at Rome, and afterwards settled at the court of Bavaria, where he died about the year 1740. He was one of the most able masters of his time; uniting learning with invention and fire. No new composer appeared in 1717.

In 1718, an opera was composed by Girolamo Bassani, of whom I know nothing more; and another by GIUS. MAR. ORLANDINI, an able and favourite Bolognese master, who furnished the Venetian theatre with seven operas between this year and 1729. I have seen compositions of this author, particularly in the opera of Nino, performed at Rome in 1722, which seem more dramatic and elegant than those of any master in the Italian school, anterior to Haffé and Vinci. He is said to have been happy in the composition of intermezzi, a gay picturesque Music, which seems to have been little understood by any other master, till the time of Pergolesi. I have seen Laudi, or hymns, of his composition, in three parts.

that are sufficiently natural and easy for psalm-fingers, not very deep in knowledge of Music; and cantici, or catches. He continued to flourish from 1710 till 1745.

The year 1719 furnished several memorable events in the theatrical annals of Venice: besides operas composed by masters already mentioned, there was one, Lamano, set by Nich. Ang. Gasparini, of Lucca, the fourth which he had produced for this city. He was a scholar of Lotti, and an admirable singing-master, and prepared several excellent performers for the stage, among whom was the celebrated Faustina. Stefano Andrea Fiore, with whose merit I am unacquainted, set the opera called Il Pentimento Generoso; and GIUS. MAR. BUINI, the composer of more than thirty operas for different theatres in Italy, began his career at Venice this year, by setting the opera of La Caduta di Gelone. This master must be remembered among poet-musicians, as he frequently produced the poetry which he set to Music; and was often equally successful in both arts. But there seems to have been more attention paid this year to the singing, at the Venetian opera, than either the poetry or Music: at one theatre, Valentini and the Tesi performed in the opera of Lamano; and at another, Bernacchi, in the Pentimento Generoso, with the Faustina and Cuzzoni, two Sirens gifted with different enchanting powers, which they exercised afterwards in England to the destruction of theatrical tranquillity, and, indeed, of good neighbourhood among the adherents of the contending parties.

In 1720, there were ten new operas at the different theatres of Venice, set by Buini, Orlandini, Vivaldi, and Porta. The author of Notitia di Teatri di Venezia, complains this year of the enormous salaries of the first singers; and says, that more was then given to a single voice than need to be expended on the whole exhibition. Formerly, says he, the sum of a hundred crowns was thought a great price for a fine voice, and the first time it amounted to one hundred and twenty, the exorbitance became proverbial. But what proportion does this bear, continues he, with the present salaries, which generally exceed a hundred sequins; and which has such an effect upon the rest of the troop, that the demands of every every one go on increasing, in the ratio of the first singer's vanity and over-rated importance. The consequences, indeed, are fatal, when the performers combine, as often happens, in a resolution to extort from the managers a contract for certain sums, of which the uncertainty of success in public exhibitions, renders the payment so precarious.

In 1723, the admirable Leonardo Leo furnished the Venetian stage with the opera of Timocrate, in which Nicolini and the Tesi were the principal singers (p).

In 1724, GIMINIANO GIACOMELLI, of Parma, first appears here as an opera composer. He was the scholar of Capelli, and had a lively imagination that furnished him with agreeable flights, which, from their novelty, afforded so much pleasure, that they contributed considerably to propagate and establish the taste of subsequent times. FRANCESCO BRUSA, a Venetian dilettante originally, but by adverse fate being obliged to make a professional use of an accomplishment, he derived from it both honour and profit; being appointed master of the Conservatorio of the Incurabili in this city, and employed as an opera composer three successive years, composing in 1724, Il Trionfo della Virtù; in 1725, Amor Eroico; and in 1726, Medea e Giasone.

In 1725, the Venetian theatre first heard the natural, clear, and dramatic strains of Leonardo Vinci, in his two operas of Iffigenia in Aulide, and La Rosmira Fidele. A farther account and character of this elegant composer will be given among the masters of the Neapolitan school. Carestini first appeared this year at Venice, in Seleuco, set by another new composer, whose name, Andrea Zuccari, appears on no other occasion.

In 1726, Vinci's rival, Porpora, composed the opera of Siface, which was soon followed by Vinci's Siroe, on the same stage. The public, if not rendered unjust by a spirit of party, is always benefited by the emulation and contending efforts of men of abilities and talents: a powerful competitor not only stimulates diligence, but by the fermentation of hope, fear, and perhaps vanity, awakens, invigorates, and sublimates genius. There were fifteen new musical dramas brought on the several Venetian stages this year: two by Vinci, two by Porpora, and the rest by Albinoni, Vivaldi, Polarolo, Buini; with a single opera by each of the following four principianti: Luigi Tavelli, Fran. Roffi, Giuseppe Vignati, and Antonio Cortona, who mounted the stage for the first time, and seemingly with but little success, as their names, and works, whatever they were, have been long forgotten.

(p) Leo's opera of Argene was performed here in 1728; and his Cato in Utica, 1729.

The next year, 1727, the composers were Porta, Porpora, Albinoni, Vivaldi, Buini, and three new candidates for theatrical honours: Giac. Macari, Salvator Apollonj, and Gio. Reali, for whose works it would now be in vain to enquire. Vinci had been called to Rome, the preceding year, where he produced his celebrated opera of Didone, leaving his rival master of the field of battle at Venice. Here Porpora produced this year his two operas of Meride and Arianna, which last was afterwards performed in England.

The arrival of Farinelli at Venice in 1728, where he sung with the Faustina, who told me, near fifty years after, that she well remembered his performance, and the effect it had on the audience, was a memorable event in the opera annals of that city. The veteran composers this year, 1728, were Porta, Albinoni, Vivaldi, Polarolo, Porpora, and Leo; with Bertol. Cordans, and Pescetti and Galuppi among the principianti.

In 1729, the same composers are continued, with the addition of not only Giacomelli and Orlandini among the veterans, but of Ant. Galeazzi, Fran. Ciampi (q), Baldassare Galuppi detto Buranello, and Giambattista Pescetti, among the probationers. Of the two last, further notice will be taken hereafter. This year they composed the opera of Dorinda, written by the celebrated dilettante Marcello, in partnership.

In 1730, Gio. Ant. Gai, Ant. Mar. Lucchini, Gio. Adol. Haffe, and Ricardo Broschi, the brother of Farinelli, first composed for the Venetian theatres. In the opera of Idaspes, set by Broschi, (q) This was not the Ciampi who was in England 1748, and whose Christian name was Vincenzo; but the Ciampi who was at one time an excellent performer on the violin at Massa Carrara, and author of admirable productions for the church. I am in possession of a miserere and a mass, by this master, which are inferior to no productions of the kind that I have seen.

his brother Farinelli, Nicolini, and Cuzzoni performed, as they did in Haffé's Artaxerxes; and in that composer's opera of Dalila, Pafi, Amorevoli, the tenor who was afterwards in England, and Faustina, were among the singers; and this seems the most splendid period of the musical drama in Venice; where the poetry of Apostolo Zeno and Metastasio; the musical compositions of Leo, Haffé, Porpora, and Galuppi; and the vocal powers of Nicolini, Farinelli, Amorevoli, Faustina, and Cuzzoni, conspired to delight and charm the lovers of the lyric scene.

In 1731, Monticelli first appeared in the musical dramas of Venice, with Carestini, Bernacchi, and Faustina, now married to the composer Haffé. And the next year the same performers, and most of the same composers, were again engaged.

The opera being now arrived at its summit of glory in this philomusical city, we shall be less minute in our account of its progress, and only mention the principal persons who, in subsequent times, have most contributed to support by their genius and talents the high reputation, which the art of Music had acquired in this ancient republic.

Among the natives of Venice, no professor of the present century has contributed more copiously to the delight of his fellow-citizens, and lovers of Music in general, than BALDASSARE GALUPPI, DETTO BURANELLO, from the name of the little island of Burano near Venice, where he was born. His father taught him the first rudiments of Music, and afterwards he had Lotti for his master. His two first operas: La Fede nell' Incostanza, for Brescia, and Gli Amici Rivali, for Venice, were produced in 1722. He succeeded equally in every species of vocal Music. For the church of St. Marc, of which he was long maestro di capella, and for the Conservatorio of the Incurabili, where he presided many years, he composed masses, oratorios, and motetti innumerable (r). The number of operas, serious and comic, which he had composed for the principal theatres of Italy before his departure for Peterf-

(r) Having expressed a wish to Signor Galuppi to be in possession of some of his motetti, that I had heard at his conservatorio, this admirable composer was so obliging as to have some of them transcribed and sent after me. And, upon a late examination, I find in them his usual grace, fire, and originality.

burg, in 1766, exceeded seventy. At his return to Italy, when I saw him at Venice in 1770, at which time he was near seventy years of age, he was as full of genius and fire as ever. And he seems, during his long life, to have constantly kept pace with all the improvements and refinements of the times, and to have been as modern in his dramatic Music, to the last year of his life, as ever. This ingenious and fertile composer died at Venice, in 1785, at eighty-four years of age (s).

An account of GIO. BATT. PES CETTI has been already given in the course of the sixth chapter.

DOMENICO ALBERTI, an illustrious dilettante of Venice, is well entitled to a place here, as a dramatic composer, as well as an exquisite harpsichord player, and author of elegant and pleasing lessons for that instrument. He was the disciple of Biffi and Lotti, and went into Spain in the character of page to the Venetian ambassador at that court. He then astonished even Farinelli, with his manner of singing, who said, he rejoiced that he was not a professor, "for," he added "I should have too formidable a rival to cope with." Alberti afterwards went to Rome, where he still cultivated singing and playing on the harpsichord. In 1737, he set to Music Endimione, written by Metastasio; and, some time after, Galatea, of the same lyric poet. Of the vocal compositions of Alberti, which are but little known in England, and are, indeed, scarce every where, I procured several at Venice, which I regard as the most exquisite of the time in which they were produced.

GIAMBATISTA PES CETTI was a Venetian, and scholar of Lotti. His dramatic productions while he was in England have been already mentioned in the preceding chapter. His style was then too meagre and simple for our ears, which had been long accustomed to the rich food with which they had been fed by Handel. But in 1764, Manzoli sung him into favour. Indeed, the voice and style of this admirable performer were such as precluded all criticism of the Music he had to execute. The truth

(s) Pacchierotti wrote me word, that he assisted in singing his requiem, on the 10th of February. The funeral seems to have been public, and worthy of so celebrated an artist. "I sung very devoutly, indeed," says Pacchierotti, "to obtain a quiet to his soul."

is, that a singer of the first class, with a great voice, can render any Music captivating; whereas an ordinary singer must be supported by Music intrinsically good, or he sinks. If the attention is not interested and rewarded either by composition or performance, we become very severe critics. Pescetti was a good contrapuntist, having composed Music for the church, which is much esteemed. But whether he wrote for the church or the stage, the characteristic of his productions was facility of execution. This, by such as were fond of complication, was thought an insipid excellence. However, Manzoli, whose volume of voice was too unwieldy for tricks and execution, attached him to his service, and unwillingly performed the Music of any other composer; as Pescetti condescended not only to adhere to simplicity in his melodies, but to simplify and thin the accompaniments. And I have never been acquainted with a great singer who was not displeased with an air in which the harmony was so loaded, and the parts were so complicated and busy, as to rob him of the attention of the audience, and require too much of his own in the performance. Quest' aria è troppo caricata, have I often heard a singer exclaim, when the ingenuity and effect of the accompaniments, if kept under in the performance, have entertained me extremely.

FERDINANDO BERTONI has already had a place among Venetian composers who have been in England. Few masters know the mechanical parts of their business better than this worthy professor: his melody is flowing and graceful, though not often new; his parts are clear and well arranged; and his counterpoint perfectly correct. And yet there is sometimes a pacific smoothness in his Music that borders upon languor. Indeed, his own natural disposition is so quiescent and innoxious, that his friend Pacchierotti could not stimulate him to any solicitude or energy of conduct in his professional concerns. If things went ill, he was as little mortified, as elated if they prospered. And this even tenor of tranquillity pervaded all his compositions; they would soothe and please by grace and facility, but not disturb an audience by enthusiastic turbulence.

But

But though Venice, ever since the time of Zarlino, has produced within its own precincts a constant succession of able musicians, whose names and works have penetrated into the most remote parts of Europe, yet not content with endemic productions, the inhabitants have frequently fermented emulation, by calling in strangers of great talents and abilities to rouse and vivify the genius of their countrymen. The Neapolitan school, during the present century, has often furnished the Venetians with composers, whose productions have been received on their stage with universal applause. Among these, besides Alessandro Scarlatti, Leo, Vinci, and Porpora, already mentioned, Mich. Fini, Ign. Florillo, Salvator Perillo, Gaetano Latilla, Rinaldo di Capua, Giuseppe d' Arena, Genaro Alessandri, Domenico Paradies, Genaro Manna, Gioacchino Cocchi, Nicola Piccini, Tommaso Traetta, and Antonio Sacchini, all Neapolitans; as well as Sarti, Anfossi, and Mortellari, have had their works well performed and well received at Venice. Latilla resided there the chief part of his life; Paradies had been a composer for that city before his arrival in England, and on quitting it, retired thither to end his days. Haffe, of the Neapolitan school, though a Saxon, was long in the service of that republic, and maestro of the Incurabili Conservatorio, and he likewise retired thither with the Faustina his wife, who was a native of Venice, to close the busy and splendid scene of their lives. Cocchi, when he quitted England, did the same, and is now master of one of the Conservatorios of that city. Signor Sacchini when I was in Venice, 1770, was master of the Ospidaletto, and resided four years at Venice; and when he resigned that employment, it was conferred on Traetta, at whose decease Anfossi was invested with it, and allowed, while in England, to perform the duties of the office by deputation.

We must not quit Venice without paying proper respect to the noble and celebrated dilettante, BENEDETTO MARCELLO, a native of that city, and descended from the most illustrious families of the republic. No cotemporary professor was more revered for musical science, or half so much praised for his abilities in the art, as Marcello,

Marcello. This accomplished nobleman, besides his musical productions, consisting of psalms, operas, madrigals, songs, and cantatas, was frequently his own poet, and sometimes assumed the character of lyric bard, for other musicians (t). It is probable that Marcello had received some disgust in his early attempts at dramatic Music; for, in 1720, he published a furious satire upon composers, singing-masters, and singers in general, under the title of Teatro alla Moda, or “an easy and certain Method of composing and performing Italian Operas in the modern Manner.” But his great musical work, to which the late Mr. Avison’s encomiums and Mr. Garth’s publication to English words, have given celebrity in our own country, was first printed at Venice in eight volumes folio, under the following title: Estro poetico-armonico, Parafrasi sopra i primi 50 Salmi, Poesia di Girolamo Ascanio Giustiniani, Musica di Benedetto Marcello, Patrizj Veneti, 1724 & 1725. There is a long and learned preface to the first volume, in order to give weight and authority to the author’s plan and style of composition. But besides the great display of musical reading, sagacity, and superior views to any of his predecessors, letters are prefixed to each volume from the author’s friends and admirers, in the same encomiastic strain as the recommendatory verses, with which almost every book was ushered into the world during the last century. But not dazzled by these, or the hyperbolical praises of Algarotti or Avison, I have conscientiously examined the whole eight volumes of the Italian edition, and find, though there is considerable merit in the work, that the author has been over-praised: as the subjects of many of his fugues and airs are not only common and old-fashioned at present, but were far from new at the time these psalms were composed. But Marcello was a Venetian nobleman, as Venosa was a Neapolitan prince; both did honour to Music by cultivating it; but both expected and received a greater return in fame, than the legal interest of the art would allow. Marcello was a disciple of Gasparini, and died in 1741.

(t) He was author of a drama called Arato in Sparta, which was set by Ruggieri, and performed at Venice in 1709; and in 1710 he produced both the words and the Music of an oratorio called Giuditta. He set the Psyche, of Cassini, about the same time. In 1718, he published Sonnets of his own writing, without Music; and in 1725, he both wrote and set a Serenata, which was performed at the imperial court of Vienna.

C H A P. VIII.

Progress of the Musical Drama at NAPLES, and Account of the eminent Composers and School of Counterpoint of that City.

THE first Neapolitan master who worked for the stage during the present century, seems to have been FRANCESCO MANCINI, who flourished from 1700 to 1731, and produced several operas and intermezzi that were much esteemed by the first professors of the time, particularly Geminiani and Haffé, who always spoke of him as a very able master. The celebrated opera of Idaspe Fedele, brought on our stage in 1700, was set by Mancini.

About 1720, the scholars of Alexander Scarlatti and Gaetano Greco, who presided over the conservatorios of Naples, began to distinguish themselves: among these may be enumerated Leo, Porpora, Domenico Scarlatti, Vinci, Sarro, Haffé, Feo, Abos, Pergolesi, and many other great and celebrated musicians, who merit particular notice. To each of the most eminent of these masters I shall therefore assign a separate article, specifying the time when they began to flourish, and the chief works they produced for the stage.

LEONARDO LEO, principal organist of the Chapel Royal at Naples, was not only admired and respected by his contemporaries, but still continues to be held in reverence by every professor that is acquainted with his works (u). The first opera of his composition, that I have been able to find, is Sofonisba, which was performed at Naples in 1718, and the last, Siface, in Bologna, 1737. Between these, he produced three operas for Venice, and four for Rome. Leo likewise set the Olimpiade of Metastasio, in which the duo: Ne i giorni tuoi felice, and the air: Non sò donde viene, are admirable; as is Per quel paterno amplesso, in Artaserse, the only air of that opera, by this composer, that I have seen. Leo likewise set

(u) We must, however, except M. Reichardt of Berlin, who probably understanding the Italian language better than this venerable master, has severely criticised his manner of setting the words of his celebrated air: Non so con dolce moto; and his censures have been adopted by Prof. Cramer of Kiel. Musical Kunstma- gazin, 1781; and Mag. der Musik, 1783.

Metastasio's oratorio of St. Elena al Calvario, of which I have seen some very fine songs. His celebrated Miserere, in eight real parts, though imperfectly performed in London at the Pantheon, for Anfani's benefit, 1781, convinced real judges that it was of the highest class of choral composition (x).

The purity of his harmony, and elegant simplicity of his melody, are no less remarkable in such of these dramas as I have been able to examine, than the judicious arrangement of the parts. But the masses and motets which are carefully preserved by the curious, and still performed in the churches at Naples, have all the choral learning of the sixteenth century. There are likewise extant, Trios, for two Violins and a Base, superior in correctness of counterpoint and elegance of design to any similar productions of the same period. This complete musician is equally celebrated as an instructor and composer; and the Solfeggi which he composed for the use of the vocal students, in the conservatorio over which he presided at Naples, are still eagerly sought and studied, not only in Italy, but in every part of Europe, where singing is regularly taught.

This great musician died about the year 1742, at the age of fifty-three. His death was unhappily precipitated by an accident which at first was thought trivial; for having a tumor, commonly called a bur, on his right cheek, which growing, in process of time, to a considerable magnitude, he was advised to have it taken off; but whether from the unskilfulness of the operator, or a bad habit of body, a mortification ensued, which cost him his life.

NICOLA PORPORA began to contribute to the lustre of the Neapolitan school, about the same time as Leo. His first opera of Ariana e Teseo was performed at Vienna in 1717; at Venice, 1727; and in London, 1734. The operas he composed for Naples, Rome, and Venice, before and after his arrival in England, amount to upwards of fifty. Of his cantatas, which remained in favour much longer than his operas, mention has been made elsewhere (y).

(x) See Vol. II. note L. p. 474.

(y) See above, p. 179.

Porpora was so excellent an instructor in the art of singing, that not only Farinelli, Mingotti, and several other theatrical performers, but all his scholars, whether princesses or professors, were proud to own him for their master.

In 1736, during his residence in England, he published six Sinfonie da Camera, or Trios, for two Violins and a Bass, which he dedicated to the late prince of Wales; but these, like almost all the instrumental Music of vocal composers, except that of Handel and the late John Christian Bach, are fanciless, and no more fit for one instrument than another. Indeed, Vinci, Haffé, Pergolesi, Marcello, and Porpora, the great luminaries of vocal compositions, seem never to have had any good thoughts to bestow on Music, merely instrumental. Perhaps the superiority of vocal expression requires fewer notes in a song than a sonata; in which the facility of executing many passages that are unfit for the voice, tempts a composer to hazard every thing that is new. Thus the simplicity and paucity of notes, which constitute grace, elegance, and expression in vocal Music, render instrumental, meagre and insipid.

Porpora was long the principal master of the Incurabili Conservatorio at Venice, for which he composed several masses and motets, that are held in great estimation by the curious. He retired, however, late in life, to Naples, the place of his nativity, where, in 1767, he died in great indigence, at the advanced age of eighty-two. Signor Corri, who had studied under him five years, was his disciple at the time of his decease; and he says, that though his friends paid him a considerable sum, not only for his instruction, but board, Porpora kept so miserable a table, that he was frequently driven out of the house, by hunger, to seek a dinner elsewhere.

LEONARDO VINCI, of the Neapolitan school, who is said to have run away from the conservatorio of Gli poveri in Giesu Cristo, at Naples, where he was the scholar of Gaetano Greco, on account of a quarrel with Porpora, a student of the same school, began to distinguish himself in the year 1724, when he set the opera of Farnace, for the Aliberti theatre at Rome (z). So great was the success of this drama, that he was called upon to furnish at least one opera every year till 1730, when he composed two: Artaserse, and Alessandro nell' Indie, both written by Metastasio. These, as I was informed at Rome, he set for half price, to gratify his enmity to Porpora, who was then his rival, in that city.

(z) It is probable that most of the masters of this school produced specimens of their abilities at Naples, before they were employed to compose for the capitals of other states; but I have not been able to find any record of their Premiers Coups d'Essai.

The vocal compositions of Vinci form an æra in dramatic Music, as he was the first among his countrymen, who, since the invention of recitative by Jacopo Peri, in 1600, seems to have occasioned any considerable revolution in the musical drama. The airs in the first operas were few and simple; but as singing improved, and orchestras became more crowded, the voice-parts were more laboured, and the accompaniments more complicated. In process of time, however, poetry seems to have suffered as much as ever from the pedantry of musicians, who forgetting that the true characteristic of dramatic Music is clearness; and that sound being the vehicle of poetry and colouring of passion, the instant the business of the drama is forgotten, and the words are unintelligible, Music is so totally separated from poetry, that it becomes merely instrumental; and the voice-part may as well be performed by a flute or a violin, in the orchestra, as by one of the characters of the piece, on the stage. Vinci seems to have been the first opera composer who saw this absurdity, and, without degrading his art, rendered it the friend, though not the slave to poetry, by simplifying and polishing melody, and calling the attention of the audience chiefly to the voice-part, by disintangling it from fugue, complication, and laboured contrivance.

In 1726, he set Metastasio's Didone Abandonata for Rome, which established his reputation; for in this exquisite drama, not only the airs were greatly applauded, but the recitative, particularly in the last act, which being chiefly accompanied, had such an effect, that, according to Count Algarotti, "Virgil himself would have been pleased to hear a composition so animated and so terrible, in which the heart and soul were at once assailed by all the powers of Music (a)."

(a). Saggio sopra l' Opera in Musica.

I shall

I shall mention the rest of this pleasing and intelligent composer's operas, the airs of which long served as models to other masters, and are not yet become either ungraceful or inelegant.

In 1727, he composed Gismondo, Re di Polonia; in 1728, Catone in Utica; in 1729, Semiramide Riconosciuta; and in 1730, Alessandro nell' Indie, and Artaserse, all for the theatres in Rome (b). The celebrated air at the end of the first act of Artaserse: Vo solcando un mar crudele, originally composed for Carestini, is well known, and is perhaps the only production of Vinci by which his merits have been favourably estimated in England. In the printed book of the words Vinci is called Pro-vice maestro della Real Cappella di Napoli.

I have been able to find no more of his works after this period; so that he must either have begun late, or been cut off early in life, as his great and durable renown seems to have been acquired in the short space of six years of his existence.

The next Neapolitan who entered the lists, as a dramatic composer, was DOMENICO SARRO, vice maestro of the Chapel Royal at Naples, who flourished from the year 1725 to 1734. This master was much esteemed, both for his ecclesiastical and secular productions. Among the many operas he composed for the different theatres of Italy, the two most in favour, were Tito Sempromio Gracco, for Naples, 1725; and Metastasio's Didone Abandonata, for Turin, 1727. He was one of the early reformers, who, like Vinci, simplified harmony, and polished melody, in his productions for the stage.

ADOLFO HASSE, detto IL SASSONE, though a native of Germany, deserves a place in the list of Neapolitan composers, as he had not only instructions from the elder Scarlatti and Porpora, but began first to be noticed as a man of genius at Naples, in 1725 (c). Much has already been said of this admirable composer in a former work (d); and more information will be collected relative to his numerous productions in speaking of the musicians of his country; I shall therefore only observe here, that he pursued the elegant and simple manner of Vinci in his vocal compositions, and as he long survived this first reformer of lyric melody, he frequently surpassed him in grace and expression; and the operas of Metastasio, which he set for Rome and Venice after the decease of Vinci, were not only more applauded by the public, but more consonant to the ideas of the poet himself, as I discovered in conversing with him on the subject, at Vienna, in 1773.

(b) The two last were performed in the theatre delle Dame; the first is dedicated to the Chevalier de St. George, called in the title page Giocomo III. Re della Gran Bretagna; and the second, to his consort, Clementina, called Regina della Gran Bretagna.
(c) See German Tour, Vol. II. p. 183.

Hasse began to compose for the great theatre at Naples, by setting the opera of Sesostrate, in 1726, the year after the decease of his master, Alessandro Scarlatti. This opera and Attalo Re di Bitinia, for the same theatre, in 1728, seem to have been forgotten by the composer himself in the verbal enumeration of his early productions with which he favoured me at Vienna; but being in possession of the printed book of the words of both these dramas, with the above dates, to which his name is prefixed in the following manner: La Musica è del Signor Giovanni Adolfo Hasse detto il Sassone, Maestro di Capella di S. A. S. il Duca di Brunswick, the record is indisputable. In 1730, he set two operas for Venice: Dalisa, in which the principal singers were Pasi, Amorevoli, and Faustina, whom he married about this time; and Artaserse, written by Metastasio, in which the principal parts were performed by Farinelli and Cuzzoni. In one of these he is called Maestro soprannumerario of the Royal Chapel of Naples; and in the other Maestro di Capella of Augustus King of Poland and Elector of Saxony. In 1732, he composed Cajo Fabricio, for Rome; and Demetrio for Venice. These dramas, particularly the two written by Metastasio, and the great singers who performed in them, established his reputation, which extended to every part of Europe. Of the numerous operas he composed afterwards for the different courts of Germany, an account will be given elsewhere.

(d) Ibid. Vol. I.

GIUSEPPE

GIUSEPPE PORSILE, of Naples, the son of Carlo Porfile, who composed the opera of Nerone for that city in 1686, appears to have been in the service of the Emperor at Vienna in 1720. Apostolo Zeno (e) speaks of his bella Musica to Spartaco, an opera written by the Abate Pasquini for the imperial court in 1726. Between which period and 1735, he composed several dramas for the different theatres of Italy. His favour at Vienna, however, appears to have been durable, as he was employed there, in 1733, to set the oratorio of Giuseppe Riconosciuto, by Metastasio, which Hasse publicly declared to be the finest Music he had ever heard. I have never met with any of his productions; but his style is said, by others, to have been natural, and full of force and expression (f).

RICCARDO BROSCHI, Maestro di Capella Napolitano, and the brother of the celebrated Farinelli, whom he instructed in the first rudiments of Music, composed the opera called L' Isola d' Alcina, for Rome, in 1728. It was in this opera that the memorable contention happened between Farinelli and a celebrated performer on the trumpet, over whom that matchless finger obtained a complete victory. In 1730, Broschi accompanied his brother to Venice, where he composed the opera of Idaspe; in which, not only Farinelli performed, but the Cavalier Nicolini, then old, but still a great actor, and Cuzzoni, young, and at the summit of her favour. Though this was not the first appearance of any of these renowned performers on the Venetian stage, the late Sir Edward Walpole, who was there at the time, used to declare, that the acclamation with which they were received, and the rapture communicated by their talents, surpassed all that he had ever known in any other theatre in Europe.

FRANCESCO FEO, one of the greatest Neapolitan masters of his time, composed Ipermestra, for Rome, in 1728, and Andromaca, for the same city, in 1730. From this period till about the year 1740, his name frequently occurs in the musical dramas of Italy. The few specimens which I have seen of this composer's abilities

(e) Lettere, Tomo. I.

(f) Essai sur la Musique, Tom. III. p. 224.

in vocal Music, seem correct and masterly in counterpoint, and full of fire, invention, and force in the melody and expression of the words.

We are now arrived at a very important period of musical history, when Pergolesi, the child of taste and elegance, and nursling of the Graces, first began to captivate by his strains. This exquisite composer has so much interested and delighted the musical world, that a dry list of his works seems insufficient to satisfy the curiosity which his productions have excited. I shall, therefore, lay before my readers all the information I was able to procure concerning his short life, in my tour through Italy; at which time, though he had been dead upwards of thirty years, yet I met with several persons, both at Rome and Naples, particularly the late Mr. Wiseman and Barbella, who had been personally acquainted with him, and who communicated to me many of the following circumstances:

GIOVAMBATTISTA PERGOLESI was born at Casoria, a little town about ten miles from Naples, in 1704. His friends discovering, very early in his infancy, that he had a disposition for Music, placed him in the conservatorio at Naples, called Dei poveri in Giesu Gristo, which has been since suppressed. Gaetano Greco, of whom the Italians still speak with reverence as a contrapuntist, presided then over that celebrated school. This judicious master soon perceiving uncommon genius in his young pupil, took particular pleasure in facilitating his studies, and communicating to him all the mysteries of his art. The progress which the young musician made was proportioned to the uncommon advantages of nature and art with which he was favoured; and at a time when others had scarcely learned the gammut, he produced specimens of his abilities which would have done honour to the first masters in Naples. At the age of fourteen, he began to perceive that taste and melody were sacrificed to the pedantry of learned counterpoint, and after vanquishing the necessary difficulties in the study of harmony, fugue, and scientific texture of the parts, he intreated his friends to take him home, that he might indulge his own fancies, and write such Music as was most agreeable to his natural perceptions and feelings.

The instant he quitted the conservatorio, he totally changed his style, and adopted that of Vinci, of whom he received lessons in vocal composition, and of Haffé, who was then in high favour. And though he so late entered the course which they were pursuing with such rapidity, he soon came up with them; and, taking the lead, attained the goal, to which their views were pointed, before them. With equal simplicity and clearness, he seems to have surpassed them both, in graceful and interesting melody.

His countrymen, however, were the last to discover or allow his superiority, and his first opera, performed at the second theatre of Naples, called Dei Fiorentini, met with but little success. The prince of Stigliano, first equerry to the King of Naples, discovering, however, great abilities in the young Pergolesi, took him under his protection; and from the year 1730 to 1734, by his influence, procured employment for him at the Teatro Nuovo. But during this period, the chief of his productions were of the comic kind, and in the Neapolitan dialect, which is unintelligible to the rest of Italy, except the Serva Padrona, set for the theatre of San Bartolomeo.

It was not till the year 1735, that an account of his merit penetrated so far as Rome, and inclined the directors of the opera there, to engage him to compose for the Tordinona theatre in that city.

Pergolesi, ambitious of writing for a better theatre, as well as for better performers, than those for which he had hitherto been employed; and happy in having the exquisite poetry of Metastasio's Olimpiade to set, instead of the Neapolitan jargon, went to work with the zeal and enthusiasm of a man of genius, animated by hope, and glowing with an ardent passion for his art.

The Romans, however, by some unaccountable fatality, received his opera with coldness; and the composer being a young man but little known, they seemed to want to be told by others that his Music was excellent, and would soon, by the admiration of all Europe, make them ashamed of their injustice and want of taste.

To

To complete his mortification at the ill reception of this opera, Nerone, composed by Duni, the next that was brought on the stage, and for which his was laid aside, had a very great success.

DUNI, a good musician, and a man of candour, though greatly inferior in genius to Pergolesi, is said to have been ashamed of the treatment which he had received; and with an honest indignation declared, that he was out of all patience with the Roman public, frenetico contro il pubblico Romano. He even tried during the short life of this opera, to make a party in its favour among the professors and artists who were captivated with the beauty of the Music; but all their efforts were vain; the time was not yet come when judgment and feeling were to unite in its favour.

Pergolesi returned to Naples with the small crop of laurels which had been bestowed on him by professors and persons of taste, who in every country compose but a very inconsiderable part of an audience. He was, indeed, extremely mortified at the fate of his opera, and not much disposed to resume the pen, till the Duke of Matalon, a Neapolitan nobleman, engaged him to compose a mass and vespers for the festival of a saint at Rome, which was to be celebrated with the utmost magnificence.

Though Pergolesi had but too much cause to be dissatisfied with Roman decrees he could not decline the duke's proposition, and it was on this occasion that he composed the Mass, Dixit, & Laudate, which have been since so often performed for the public, and transcribed for the curious. They were heard for the first time in the church of San Lorenzo in Lucina, with general rapture; and if any thing could console a man of genius for such unworthy treatment as he had lately experienced at Rome, it must have been such hearty and unequivocal approbation as he now received in the same city.

His health, however, daily and visibly declined. His friends had perceived, by his frequent spitting of blood, for four or five years before this period, that he was likely to be cut off in his prime; and his malady was still increased by this last journey to Rome. His first patron, the prince of Stigliano, who had never ceased to love and protect him, advised him to take a small house at Torre del Greco, near Naples, on the sea-side, almost at the foot of Mount Vesuvius (g). It is imagined by the Neapolitans, that persons afflicted with consumptions are either speedily cured, or killed, in this situation.

During his last sickness, Pergolesi composed his celebrated cantata of Orpheus and Euridice, and his Stabat mater, at Torre del Greco, whence he used to go to Naples from time to time to have them tried. The Salve Regina, which is printed in England, was the last of his productions, and he died very soon after it was finished, in 1737, at the age of thirty-three!

The instant his death was known, all Italy manifested an eager desire to hear and possess his productions, not excepting his first and most trivial farces and intermezzi; and not only lovers of elegant Music, and curious collectors elsewhere, but even the Neapolitans themselves, who had heard them with indifference during his lifetime, were now equally solicitous to do justice to the works and memory of their deceased countryman. Rome, sensible now of its former injustice, as an amende honorable, had his opera of Olimpiade revived: an honour which had never been done to any composer of the present century before. It was now brought on the stage with the utmost magnificence, and that indifference with which it had been heard but two years before, was now converted into rapture.

Pergolesi's first and principal instrument was the violin, which was urged against him, by envious rivals, as a proof that he was unable to compose for voices. If this objection was ever in force with reasonable and candid judges, it must have been much enfeebled, not only by the success of Pergolesi in vocal compositions, but by Sacchini, whose principal study and practice, during youth, were likewise bestowed on the violin.

It is Mr. Walpole's opinion that Mr. Gray first brought the compositions of Pergolesi into England (b). His opera of Olimpiade was first performed on our stage in 1742, when Monticelli acquired uncommon applause in the air: Tremende oscuri atroce, and the scene where the aria parlante: Se cerca se dice occurs; which, though it has often been set since to more elaborate and artificial Music, its effect has never been so truly dramatic; all other compositions to those words are languid on the stage, and leave the actor in too tranquil a state for his situation (i).

(g) This house was shewn to me in 1770, the extraordinary things to be seen in the thirty-three years after his death, among the environs of Naples.

The words Tremende oscuri atroce, are not Metastasio's, nor have I ever been able to discover whose they are, or how they happened to be set by Pergolesi; the air, however, A due cori, is admirable (k).

From all the information that I was able to procure at Rome and Naples, concerning the premature death of Pergolesi, there does not seem the least foundation for the story concerning his having been poisoned. The disease of which he died was a consumption, that preyed upon his lungs during the last five or six years of his existence, and the most active and important of his life. As envy was said to have stimulated his concurrents to have recourse to poison in order to get rid of so formidable a rival, it has been well observed (l), that the success of Pergolesi's productions was never sufficiently brilliant to render him such an object of envy to his brethren as to make it necessary to dispatch him by unfair means.

(b) This exquisite poet went abroad in the spring of 1739, and travelling through France, arrived at Turin in November of the same year. He did not reach Rome, however, till April 1740. In his letters, he only speaks of the Music he heard in that city, (see page 86 of Mr. Mason's Mem.) and of a glorious concert at Naples, (96.) His last letter from Italy is dated at Florence April 21st, 1741. Mr. Mason says, that he quitted Turin the 15th of August, and began to cross the Alps the next day. But though there is no mention made of Pergolesi in Gray's letters from Italy, yet I have frequently heard from Mr. Walpole, Mr. Mason, and others, of his intimate friends, that he regarded the vocal compositions of this master as models of perfection. His Salve Regina was performed in England at the little theatre in the Hay-market January 8th, 1741, (as appears in the newspapers of the time); so that it could not have been brought first into this country by Mr. Gray, who did not arrive in England from Italy till the August of that year.

(i) When I mentioned this circumstance to Pacchierotti, in a conversation on the subject, he very well applied our English vulgar phrase to Pergolesi, by saying, that in setting these words "he had hit the right nail on the head."

(k) I have a copy of this air in manuscript to the words: Torbido in volto e nero, which are likewise not to be found in the works of Metastasio.

(l) Notices sur la Vie et les Ouvrages de Pergolesi, par M. Boyer, Mercure de France, pour Juiller 1772, p. 191.

The art of Music, however, did not die with Pergolesi, as we shall see by the list of his successors, who pursuing the track which Vinci, Haffé, and Pergolesi had first traced out, have advanced into new regions of invention, taste, grace, elegance, and grand effects.

I was assured at Rome by a musician who had known him personally, that he was a slow workman; but “the gods sell to mortals,” says Epicharmus, “all that is great and beautiful at the price of immense labour (m).” Salvini tells us, that the celebrated composer Carissimi being praised for the grace and ease of his melodies, used to cry out: “Ah, with what difficulty is this ease acquired (n)?”

He had perhaps more energy of genius, and a finer taût, than any of his predecessors: for though no labour appears in his productions, even for the church, where the parts are thin, and frequently in unison, yet greater and more beautiful effects are often produced in performance than are promised in the score. And, indeed, it frequently happens, that a score in which the texture of the parts is very artificial, ingenious, and amusing to the eye, affords nothing but noise and confusion to the ear. As the Italians in the sixteenth century were the masters to all Europe in elaborate composition, even to a pedantic excess, so they have been the first, in modern times, to abjure its absurdity.

The ease and simplicity of Vinci's and Pergolesi's style, were soon imitated with servility by men of no genius, who always appear more contemptible in light than laboured strains; and these, pushing facility to an insipid excess, soon rendered opera Music proverbially flimsy and frivolous. Of this number were Lampugnani, Pescetti, Pelegrini, Giacomelli, Paleazzi, Schiaffi, Pampani, and many others.

The church Music of Pergolesi has been censured by his countryman, Padre Martini, as well as by some English musical critics, for too much levity of movement, and a dramatic cast, even in some of his slow airs; while, on the contrary, Eximeno says, that “he never heard, and perhaps never shall hear, sacred Music

(m) Πάντα χαλεπὰ τὰ καλὰ.

(n) Ah! questo facile, quanto è difficile!

accom-accompanied with instruments, so learned and so divine, as the Stabat Mater."

As the works of this master form an æra in modern Music, and as general praise or censure is seldom just or satisfactory to discriminative minds, it was my intention to have inserted here, some critical remarks resulting from a late careful examination of his principal productions for the church; but upon calculating the business I have still to do, and the pages left for its reception, I find that critical discussion must give way to matters of fact, or my volume will be rendered too cumbrous and unwieldy.

If the SONATAS ascribed to Pergolesi, for two violins and a base, are genuine, which is much to be doubted, it will not enhance their worth sufficiently to make them interesting to modern ears, accustomed to the bold and varied compositions of Boccherini, Haydn, Vanhal, &c. They are composed in a style that was worn out when Pergolesi began to write; at which time another was forming by Tartini, Veracini, and Martini of Milan, which has been since polished, refined, and enriched with new melodies, harmonies, modulation, and effects.

No fair and accurate judgment can be formed of the merit of a composer of past times, but by comparing his works with those of his predecessors and immediate competitors. The great progress that has been made in instrumental Music, since the decease of Pergolesi, will not diminish his reputation, which was not built on productions of that kind, but on vocal compositions, in which the clearness, simplicity, truth, and sweetness of expression, justly entitle him to supremacy over all his predecessors and cotemporary rivals, and to a niche in the temple of Fame, among the great improvers of the art; and, if not the founder, the principal polisher of a style of composition both for the church and stage which has been constantly cultivated by his successors, and which, at the distance of half a century from the short period in which he flourished, still reigns throughout Europe.

To the abilities of the Neapolitan composers Paradies, Cocchi, Guglielmi, Traetta, Sacchini, and Anfosì, who have all been in England, due respect has been paid in a preceding chapter.

GAETANO

GAETANO LATILLA, an excellent composer of the Neapolitan school, has spent the greatest part of his life at Venice, where he distinguished himself chiefly by his comic operas; he was, however, frequently called to Rome, where his serious operas were likewise very successful. Temistocle, his first drama of that kind, was composed for the Tordinona theatre in that city, 1737. He continued to compose for the Roman theatre till the year 1740, when his opera of Siroe, of which I am in possession of the score, and in which the principal singers were Lorenzini, a soprano; Appiano, contralto; and the celebrated tenor Babbi, had very great success. From this time till 1766, he continued writing alternately for Rome and Venice with uninterrupted success.

His invention was perhaps less fertile than that of many Neapolitan masters; but in the arrangement of his parts, in correctness and knowledge of effects, he has seldom been exceeded.

Latilla is, I believe, still living. In 1770, he was an assistant to Galuppi at the church of St. Mark, in Venice, and seemed in great indigence; which, considering his professional abilities, and former favour, excited indignation and melancholy reflexions, at the caprice and ingratitude of the public. Since that time, I have been told that he had the misfortune to be a patriot; and was thrown into prison at Venice for speaking too freely of state affairs, and, when enlarged, was ordered to quit the city. To clamour at grievances in any country, without either power or plan to redress them, is useless; but in the midst of despotism, the folly is as great as reasoning with a furious lion, whose mouth is wide open.

RINALDO DI CAPUA, a Neapolitan composer of great genius and fire, and whose productions were the delight of all Europe during many years, is another melancholy instance of the transient state of a musician's fame and favour. He was living, or rather starving, in 1770 at Rome, the chief scene of all his former glory! His history and opinions have been given at large in another work (p); I shall therefore here only mention his principal productions. He seems to have been a successful composer from 1737 to 1758. His first serious opera at Rome was Il Ciro Riconosciuto, (p) Present State of Music in France and Italy, Art. ROME.

1737; and Adriano in Siria, the last, in 1758. A very fine air from his opera of Vologeso was sung by Monticelli in England, and printed by Walsh among the favourite songs of the opera of Gianguir, nell' orror di notte oscura, to which I refer as a specimen of his serious style. Indeed, the whole scene in this opera, beginning by the accompanied recitative, Berenice, ove sei? and terminated by the air, Ombra che pallida, is so admirable, that I should wish to insert it here as an example of the perfection to which dramatic Music was brought in Italy near fifty years ago, if it would not occupy too much space in my work. The curious will, however, do well to procure a copy of it whenever they have an opportunity.

It has been said (q), perhaps with some truth, that the science of this composer is not equal to his genius; for being educated as a dilettante, he probably did not submit to all the drudgery of dry study, which one intended for the profession of Music must necessarily undergo.

DOMENICO TERRADELLAS, or TERRADEGLIAS, a Spaniard, born and educated in Catalonia; but, afterwards, a disciple of Durante, at Naples, began to flourish about 1739, when he composed the opera of Astarto, and part of Romolo, in conjunction with Latilla, for the Teatro delle Dame, at Rome.

In the latter end of the year 1746 he came to England (r), where he composed two operas: Mitridates and Bellerophon. But unfortunately for the composer, none of the singers of this time stood high in the favour of the public. Yet his opera of Mitridate, I well remember, received much applause, as Music, distinct from what was given to the performers. And his compositions when executed in Italy by singers of the first class, acquired him great reputation.

Besides the favourite songs in the two operas just mentioned, which are printed by Walsh, Terradellas himself, while he was in England, published a collection of Twelve Italian Airs and Duets in score, which he dedicated to Lady Chesterfield. In these he seems less masterly and original than in his other productions that have come to my knowledge. In the songs he composed for Reginaldi, a very learned singer in ruin, we find boldness and force, as well as pathos. And some arie di bravura of his composition, for the celebrated tenor singer Babbi, at Rome, abound with fire and spirit. If his productions are compared with those of his contemporaries, his writings, in general, must be allowed to have great merit; though his passages now seem old and common (s).

(q) Essai sur la Musique, Tom. III. p. 177.

(r) This was between the departure of Gluck and arrival of Ciampi.

Terradellas was remarkable, not only for attending, in every situation of the singer, to the spirit of the drama which he had to compose, but for giving good Music to bad singers, and not under-writing, as Mr. Bayes calls it, the inferior parts of his theatrical pieces. Indeed, it has always appeared to me, that an exquisite singer who can command attention by the mere tone of his voice, and who requires only a canevas, or out-line, to colour at his pleasure, is in less want of artificial and captivating composition, than an ordinary singer, who is neither possessed of voice nor taste sufficient to interest the audience. And Terradellas seems to have written all his songs for performers of abilities; for his airs are never made easy and trivial in order to spare the singer. Jomelli's pen always flowed with this spirit; for he never rejected a passage that presented itself, because it would be difficult and troublesome in the execution; but this freedom of style, twenty years ago, might be more safely practised than at present: for it is well known, that a company of singers is now reckoned good, in Italy, if the two first performers are excellent; and an opera is sure to please if two or three airs and a duet deserve attention; the audience neither expecting nor attending to any thing else. And the managers, who find this custom very convenient, take care not to interrupt play or conversation by the useless and impertinent talents of the under-singers; so that performers of the second or third class are generally below mediocrity.

(s) This composer having spent his youth in Catalonia, was not regularly initiated into the mysteries of counterpoint in any Neapolitan Conservatorio, having been placed under Durante, for a short time, only as a private scholar; and I think I can sometimes discover in his scores, thro' all his genius and elegance of style, a want of study and harmonic erudition.

Between the year 1725 and 1740, the musical drama in Italy seems to have attained a degree of perfection and public favour, which perhaps has never been since surpassed. The opera stage from that period being in possession of the poetry of Apostolo Zeno and Metastasio; the compositions of Leo, Vinci, Haffé, Porpora, and Pergolesi; the performance of Farinelli, Carestini, Caffarelli, Bernacchi, Babbi, la Tefi, la Romanina, Faustina, and Cuzzoni; and the elegant scenes and decorations of the two Bibienas, which had superseded the expensive and childish machinery of the last century. Dancing was at this time likewise substituted in serious operas, to the coarse farces between the acts, called Intermedj, or Intermezzi; and it was about this period that Balli were first composed analogous to the incidents of the piece, which they enlivened and embellished without assuming such a degree of importance as robs the poet, composer, and performer, of their due rank and attention in every musical drama.

Such was the progress of the melo-drama in Italy, when NICOLÒ JOMELLI began to flourish. This truly great composer was born in 1714, at Avellino, a town about twenty-five miles from Naples, in which city he had his musical education under Leo and Durante. The first opera to which I find his name, is Ricimero Rè de' Goti, composed for the Argentina theatre at Rome, 1740. And between that period and 1758, he composed for the same city fourteen operas, besides others for Venice and different Italian theatres.

From 1758 till about 1765, he resided in Germany, being engaged in the service of the Duke of Würtemberg, at Stuttgardt, or rather at Ludwigsbürg, his new capital, where Jomelli's works were performed. Here he produced a great number of operas and other compositions, by which he acquired great reputation, and totally changed the taste of vocal Music in Germany. On his return to Italy, he left all these productions behind him, upon a supposition that he should again resume his station at Ludwigsbürg, after visiting his native country. But as he never returned thither to claim these compositions, they fell into the hands of his patron the Duke of Würtemberg, who preserved them as precious relics of this great master (1).

After he quitted Germany, Jomelli composed a great number of operas expressly for the King of Portugal, who tried every expedient to tempt him to go to Lisbon; which honour though he declined, on account of the delicate state of his wife's health, yet he annually furnished that prince with new productions, as well as with whatever he composed for other purposes.

He composed, after his return to Naples, three operas for that city: Armida, in 1769; Demofonte, 1770; Ifigenia in Aulide, 1771. And in 1772, Achille in Sciro, for Rome, which was his last.

Some of the Music which he composed for the dances of his operas has been much celebrated, particularly his Chaconne, which is well known in England, and has served as a model for that species of dance throughout Europe, ever since it was composed.

The operas of Jomelli will be always valuable to professors and curious collectors, for the excellence of the composition; though it has been thought necessary, in compliance with the general rage for novelty, to lay them aside, and to have the same dramas new set for the stage, in order to display the talents, or hide the defects, of new singers.

As Jomelli was a great harmonist, and naturally grave and majestic in his style, he seems to have manifested abilities in writing for the church, superior even to those for the stage. Of the many oratorios which he composed, I am only acquainted with three:

(1) Proposals were published at Stuttgart in 1783, and in Cramer's Mag. der Mus. for September of the same year, for printing by subscription the entire dramatic works of Jomelli in score, which we recomposed during the twenty years that he was in the service of the Duke of Würtemberg, consisting of fifteen serious operas, five pastoral dramas, and three burlettas; but whether this undertaking was ever accomplished, I have not as yet been able to learn.

The serious operas which Jomelli composed for Stuttgart, are the following: L' Olimpiade, La Clemenza di Tito, Nitteti, Pelope, Enea nel Lazio, Catone in Utica, Il Re Pastore, Alessandro nell' Indie, Ezio, Didone, Demofonte, Semiramide, Velogeso, Artaserse, and Fetonte. Pastoral dramas: Imeneo in Atene, Il Pastore Illustre, and L' Isola Disabitata. Comic operas: Il Matrimonio per Concorso, La Schiava Liberata, and Il Cacciatore Deluso.

Ifacco Figura del Redentore, Betulia Liberata, and La Passione, all written by Metastasio and all admirably set. In the first accompanied recitative and air of Ifacco, at the opening of the second part, beginning: Cbi per pietà mi dice, il mio figlio che fa? in which are painted, with an uncommon degree of agitation and passion, the anxiety and terror of Sarah during the absence of Abraham, whom she supposes is in the act of sacrificing her son Isaac, have been justly much admired. I am in possession of a Te Deum, and a Requiem, of his composition, which manifest him to have been a great master of the church style; though he had acquired great fame as a dramatic composer before he began to exercise himself in this species of writing, concerning which he had never bestowed a thought since he left the Music-school, or conservatorio, till about the year 1751, when it having been determined at Rome that the Music for Passion-week should be as excellent as possible, Durante, Jomelli, and Perez, were employed to set the lessons from the Lamentations of Jeremiah, for the three most solemn days of that holy time. Jomelli's composition was performed on Wednesday, Perez's on Thursday, and Durante's on Good-Friday. The first is entitled LETTIONE PRIMO per il mercoledì santo, con Violini, Oboè, Viola, Flauti e Corni da Caccia. The second LETTIONE PRIMA del Giovedì santo, a Soprano solo, con Violini, Viola, Oboè, e Corni da Caccia. And the third LETTIONE TERZA del Venerdì santo, a 4 Voci, con Violini, Viola, e Corni da Caccia. Having procured a score of these compositions at Rome, and lately examined them, I can venture to say that they all appear to me admirable; and as the composers were all men of great abilities, who exerted themselves on this honourable occasion, it is difficult to determine, in their several styles, which is the best. The productions of Jomelli and Perez are in an elegant and expressive oratorio style; and that of Durante more in the ancient style of church Music: more learned in modulation, more abounding in fugue, and more elaborate in the texture of the parts, as might be expected from his maturer age, and the solemnity of the day on which his Music was to be performed.

But

But though Jomelli acquired considerable fame by this composition for the church, yet he was so far from being intoxicated by it, that in a visit to Padre Martini, at Bologna, soon after, he told this learned contrapuntist that he had a scholar to introduce to him. Padre Martini assured him, that he should be glad to instruct any one so well recommended. And a few days after, the good father asking who and where was the disciple he had talked of? Jomelli, answered, Padre son io; and, pulling a studio of paper out of his pocket, on which he had been trying his strength in modulation and fugue upon canto fermo, begged of him to examine and point out his errors.

From this period he produced many admirable compositions for the church, in which he united elegance with learning, and grace with bold design. Among other productions of this kind, the two following merit commemoration. An Offertorio, or motet, for five voices without instruments, followed by an Alleluja of four parts in chorus; and a Missa pro defunctis, or burial service, which he composed at Stuttgardt for the obsequies of a lady of high rank and favour at the court of his patron the Duke of Würtemberg. These compositions, which are learned without pedantry, and grave without dulness, will be lasting monuments of his abilities as a contrapuntist.

But the most elaborate of all his compositions, is the Miserere, or fifty-first psalm, translated into Italian verse, by his friend Saverio Mattei, which he set for two voices, accompanied with instruments, in 1773, the year before his decease. In this production, which breathes a pious gravity, and compunction of heart suited to the contrite sentiments of the psalmist, there is a manifest struggle at extraneous modulation and new effects, perhaps too much at the expence of facility and grace. Though all the movements of this composition are slow, yet the execution is so difficult, both to the voices and instruments, that when it was performed in London at Marchetti's benefit, it was the opinion of the late Mr. Bach, that Jomelli had purposely written what he could not execute himself, in order to perplex the performers.

This

This, however, must have been said in pleasantry, for Jomelli had no malevolence in his disposition; perhaps in striving at excellence with too great solicitude, he sometimes had recourse to art and study, instead of giving way to his own feelings. There are, however, admirable strokes of passion as well as science in the Music that he has set to this psalm, which, though above the comprehension of common hearers, will afford great pleasure to those that are able to read the score, or to follow the performers through the labyrinths of art.

This admirable composer had, in general, such a facility in writing, that he seldom courted the Muse at an instrument; and so tenacious a memory, that Sacchini assured me he frequently composed an air on opening a book of lyric poetry, while, like a peripatetic, he has been walking about a room, which he remembered a year after, and then committed it to paper, as fast as as he could write a letter.

Jomelli has been called, in a splenetic fit, a Ciarlatano, by a great and celebrated composer of the same school. If writing too well for common ears, and too learnedly for lazy hearers, is quackery, Jomelli was certainly guilty. As Raphael had three manners of painting, Jomelli had three styles of composition. Before he went to Germany, the easy and graceful flow of Vinci and Pergolesi pervaded all his productions; but when he was in the service of the Duke of Würtemberg, finding the Germans were fond of learning and complication, he changed his style in compliance with the taste and expectations of his audience; and on his return to Italy, he tried to thin and simplify his dramatic Music, which, however, was still so much too operose for Italian ears, that in 1770, upon my asking a Neapolitan how he liked his opera of Demofonte, he cried out with vehemence—è scelerata, Signore!

Climate seems to operate so much on Music, however its influence may be disputed in manners and government, that what is admired in one country is detested in another. In cold climates labour is necessary to circulation; in hot, ease is the grand desideratum. This principle is carried to such excess in Italy, that whatever gives the hearer of Music the least trouble to disentangle, is Gothic, pedantic, and scelerata. As to difficulties of execution, in a single part, the composers and performers may spin their brains, and burst their blood-vessels, and welcome, provided the texture of the parts is clear and simple.

The Gothic inventions, as they call them, of fugues, canons, and laboured counterpoint of the sixteenth century, they are willing to resign to the Flemings, who first brought them into Italy; but of which all the natives, except a few obstinate pedants, struggled to divest their Music, particularly that for the stage, during the last century.

I entirely agree with Martial, that Turpe est DIFFICILES habere nugas; but that the art is to be enervated to the level of ignorance, idleness, and caprice, I deny. It is the excess of learning and facility that is truly reprehensible by good taste and sound judgment; and difficult and easy are relative terms, which they only can define. To lovers of Music who have heard much in various styles, little is new; as to others who have heard but little, all is new. The former want research and new effects, which to the latter, old Music can furnish. Palates accustomed to plain food find ragouts and morceaux friands too highly seasoned; while to those who have long been pampered with dainties, simplicity is insipid. How then is a composer or performer to please a mixed audience, but by avoiding too much complacency to the exclusive taste of either the learned, or the ignorant, the supercilious, or the simple?

The health of Jomelli began to decline soon after I had seen him in perfect health at Naples, 1770. He was then corpulent, and reminded me of the figure of Handel. In 1771, he had a stroke of the palsy, which, however, did not impair his intellects, as he composed Achille in Sciro, for the Roman theatre, and a cantata for the safe delivery of the Queen of Naples, in 1772; and in 1773, his Italian Miserere, the most elaborate and studied of all his works.

His friend Signor Saverio Muttei, the translator of the psalms into Italian verse, from whose version Jomelli had taken the Miserere, or fifty-first psalm, gives the following account of the public funeral and works of the great musician, in his Saggio di Poesie Latine ed Italiane, published at Naples immediately after his decease.

Naples, September, 1774. "Yesterday all the musicians of this city united in celebrating the funeral of the great Jomelli. The church was very finely ornamented; and a great number of wax tapers were placed about the pompous bier. Two orchestras of three rows each could scarcely contain the vocal and instrumental performers who assisted in executing the Music that was expressly composed on the occasion by the worthy Sabatini, who beat the time himself, as maestro di capella. It was the celebrated Genaro Manna, composer of the archiepiscopal church, who first suggested this plan of a public funeral, in which all these musicians had an opportunity of manifesting their regard for Jomelli, and of furnishing an example to posterity of the gratitude due to great talents, which may likewise stimulate young artists to merit equal honours. At the desire of Signor Manna, not only every musician attended the funeral and performed gratis, but contributed likewise towards the expences of this solemnity. I drew up the inscriptions myself, and the Abate Sparziani sent some sonnets from Rome, that were written by him and his friends on the occasion.

"Jomelli was my friend; he lived two years in my neighbourhood, and I had frequent opportunities of conversing with him, and of admiring his captivating manners, particularly his modesty in speaking of rival artists, whose compositions he readily praised, though their authors were not equally candid in speaking of him.

"Jomelli had acquired considerable knowledge in other arts than Music: his poetry was full of taste, and there is a fine ode of his writing, in the collection published at Rome, on the subject of the reconciliation between the Pope and King of Portugal.

"He was ambitious of distinguishing himself from other composers in a way peculiar to himself. His invention was always fertile, his style lyrical and Pindaric; and just as Pindar darted from one subject to another, Jomelli changed his tones and themes in a way wholly new, and learnedly irregular.

“But though his learning and elaboration, which appeared in his works, procured him the esteem of consummate musicians, they sometimes lost him that of the multitude. He found the theatre at Naples, and indeed almost all the theatres of Italy, in the greatest corruption; where, in and out of the orchestra, all is noise and confusion. No one thing or circumstance harmonises with another; the company regardless of what is acting, and wholly ignorant of the text, after much noise, chattering, and inattention, are scarce quiet when a particular interesting air is performing by a singer of the first class. A learned and ingenious Music, like that of Jomelli, full of harmony and contrivance, which requires a careful execution, and the utmost stillness and attention in the audience, could not satisfy the frivolous and depraved taste of the Italians, who used to say, that the Music of Gluck, Jomelli, Haffé, and Bach, was too rough and German, and pleased them less than the songs of the Gondolieri and airs with few accompaniments and many graces and divisions.

“It was without sufficiently reflecting upon the present depraved taste of his countrymen, that Jomelli set Ifigenia, his last opera, in such a scientific and elaborate style, that the audience was dissatisfied with it; but, to say the truth, most of the singers, who had but little time to rehearse, Jomelli having only finished the opera, entirely, on the day of representation, executed this learned composition in a very imperfect manner: and in a few evenings it was withdrawn. This production, however, by a caprice, not uncommon in theatrical matters, is now admired, and thought far superior to the two former; and every judge and lover of good Music has it on his harpsichord desk, and would for ever continue to hear it with delight.

“Jomelli was extremely chagrined at the reception of this opera, and had soon after a paralytic stroke; of which, however, he entirely recovered; and, notwithstanding the ill usage of the public, he composed, at the desire of the Duke of Arcos, a cantata on the delivery of the Queen, which has many inimitable beauties in it, that astonish, shake, and affect every mind. His last composition was my Miserere, which was performed in my house to a very distinguished assembly, by two great singers, Signor Aprile and Signora de Amicis; and a second time, before her excellence the Marchioness Tanucci and a select number of the first people of Naples.

“Metafasio, to whom I transmitted a copy of this Miserere, the last work of the admirable Jomelli, writes to me as follows:

“Yesterday I received the psalm of the great Jomelli. Full of impatience, Mademoiselle Martinetz flew to her harpsichord and sung it with the utmost attention, being obliged to stop in different places to express her astonishment and admiration of passages at which she was particularly affected, and which she repeated. We did not find in this composition his usual rich and enchanting invention; but we believe he checked his ideas, designedly, from too free a range, as a flowery or fanciful style would not have suited the humiliation and penitence of the psalmist. And it is manifest, that he sought to supply the want of invention by learning and solemnity, as well as by the ingenuity and texture of the accompaniments, which leave no vacuity or room for embellishments; and in this richness of harmony the great merit of this excellent composer shines with so much lustre. Mademoiselle Martinetz and myself are greatly obliged to you for this precious gift. We shall be often gratified by it, and use our best endeavours that justice may be done to it by those who are capable of feeling its great and superior merit.” Farewell my dear friend, Vienna, 17th of October, 1774.

“I have only this to add (says Signor Mattei) that though I am so zealous an admirer of Jomelli, and at his death was eager to bear testimony to his worth and abilities, yet I am always an enemy to pedantry, party, and injustice. And it is vexatious to hear certain young people, in the spirit of party, cry out, that Jomelli is a barbarian, and that there is no other great man than Piccini. What? Piccini, says a Jomellist, Piccini may compose farces and songs for the street. What signifies disputing about Piccini and Jomelli, says a third, Cafaro is the only contrapuntist now living—What wretched prejudice and injustice is this? Is it impossible for Casaro to be a great man unless Piccini is ignorant? Or for Piccini to be praised without pronouncing Jomelli a barbarian? And must Jomelli be praised by depreciating both Casaro and Piccini? Such quarrels of thoughtless or malignant partizans must be odious to each of these composers, who through different paths have arrived at that great renown which all Europe agrees to allow them."

DAVID PEREZ, the son of Juan Perez, a Spaniard, settled at Naples, was born in 1711, and brought up in the conservatorio of Santa Maria di Loreto, in that city, under Antonio Gallo and Francesco Mancini (t). His progress in composition was rapid, and discovered an uncommon genius. When he quitted the conservatorio, his first performance was at Palermo in Sicily, where he was appointed maestro di capella of the cathedral in that city, at a considerable salary, the half of which he was permitted to enjoy, not only after he quitted Sicily, but even Italy, to the time of his death.

He composed his first operas for the theatre at Palermo, from 1741 to 1748, and then returned to Naples, where his Clemenza di Tito was performed with such great applause at the theatre of San Carlo, as to extend his fame to Rome, whither he was invited the next year to compose for the theatre delle Dame. Here he produced Semiramide and Farnace; and for other cities in Italy La Didone Abbandonata, Zenobia, and Alessandro nell' Indie.

In 1752, he went to Portugal, where he was engaged in the service of King Joseph. His first opera at Lisbon, Demofonte, was received with very great applause. Gizziello was the principal soprano, and the celebrated Raaf the tenor (u). It was besides rendered magnificent in the performance by a powerful orchestra and decorations that were extremely splendid. But the new theatre of his Portuguese Majesty, which was opened on the Queen's birthday, March 31st, 1755, surpassed, in magnitude and decorations, all that modern times can boast. On this occasion Perez new set

(t) According to Barbella, his chief instrument was the violin, upon which in his youth he had great execution: fu suonatore difficilissimo di violino.

(u) Gizziello had a salary from the court of Lisbon, amounting to £.4000 sterling.

the opera of Alessandro nell' Indie, in which opera a troop of horse appeared on the stage, with a Macedonian phalanx. One of the King's riding-masters rode Bucephalus, to a march which Perez composed in the Manege, to the grand pas of a beautiful horse; the whole far exceeding all that Farinelli had attempted to introduce in a grand theatre under his direction at Madrid, for the fitting out of which he had unlimited powers. Besides these splendid decorations, his Portuguese Majesty had assembled together the greatest fingers then existing (x); so that the lyric productions of Perez had every advantage which a most captivating and perfect execution could give them.

The operas by which he acquired the greatest fame in Portugal were Demetrio and Solimano, with which, as they were to be alternately performed with the operas of Vologeso and Enea in Latio that Jomelli had been requested by his most faithful Majesty to compose for his theatre, were produced with a degree of exertion and emulation, which rendered him superior to himself. Jomelli on this occasion was chiefly admired for the ingenious and learned texture of the instrumental parts; and Perez for the elegance and grace of his melodies, and expression of the words.

His Music for the church, of which a specimen has been printed in England (y), is grave, ingenious, and expressive.

But though Perez has composed a Te Deum, which is greatly esteemed at Lisbon, and his Lezione prima per il Giovedì santo, mentioned above, has considerable merit, yet it appears on examining his scores, that this master had not, like Jomelli, much exercised his pen in the composition of fugues or learned counterpoint for the church, to the perfection of which, genius alone can contribute but little, without the assistance of great study and experience.

There is, however, an original spirit and elegance in all his productions; in which, if any defect appears, it is the want of symmetry in the phraseology of his melodies, in which there may sometimes be found what the French call phrases manquées, and contre-temps, to which critical ears, in modern times, are much less accustomed than formerly. An ear for measure, and an ear for

(x) See a list of them, page 395, note (i).

(y) Matutino de i Morti, published by Bremner, in score.

harmony and the accuracy of tones, seem to be totally different gifts of nature; and it frequently happens that a person who dances perfectly well in time, knows not one tune or tone from another.

Perez, like Handel, was corpulent and gourmand, a propensity which has been supposed to have somewhat shortened his days. After living much admired, beloved, and respected, twenty-seven years in Portugal, where he was maestro di capella to his most faithful Majesty, and master to the royal family, at a salary exceeding £. 2000 per annum, he died extremely regretted at the age of sixty-seven (a). His remains were deposited in the church of the Italian Barbadindros, and a solemn dirge of his own composition was performed at his funeral, by a concourse of the best musicians in Lisbon.

After the recent loss of Jomelli, Perez, Ciccio di Majo, Genaro Manna, Cafaro, Sabbatini, Sacchini, and Traetta, the Neapolitan school of counterpoint is by no means left destitute of able professors, being still in possession of Piccini, Paisiello, Guglielmi, Alessandri, Anfossi, Latilla, Cocchi, Fischietti, Cimarora, Mortellari, Monopoli, Sala, and Tarchi, who, by their genius and abilities, have rendered their names dear to all true lovers of Music, and who, it is hoped, will long enjoy their well-earned fame, before they become objects of history to some future annalist, zealous for the honour of the musical art. Besides these masters, whose names are well known to the rest of Europe, there are many young dramatic composers of the Neapolitan school in different parts of Italy, whose works have not yet penetrated into other countries, such as: Andreozzi, Amiconi, Astaritta, Caruso, Curcio, Fabrizi, Franceschini, Marinelli, Monti, Perillo, Platone, Ponzio, Rava, Rispoli, Tritta, Valentini, and Zangorella. These noviciates, these candidates for a place in the temple of Fame, will some of them, doubtless, be crowned with success, and enrolled among their illustrious predecessors.

(a) Like Handel, he was likewise blind, during the latter years of his life; but after this calamity, when confined to his bed frequently dictated without an instrument compositions in parts to an amanuensis. According to the account of his very intimate friend, Gerard De Vifine, Esq. a gentleman long resident at Lisbon, and well enabled to appreciate his merit, from whose information most of these particulars are derived, he sung in an exquisite taste, particularly arie di cantabile, or airs of a pathetic kind.

C H A P. IX.

Opera Composers employed at ROME, and Tracts published in Italy on the Theory and Practice of Music, during the present Century.

NO dramas seem to have been composed expressly for the Roman theatres, during the first eleven years of the present century, by any other masters than the two Scarlattis, and Gasparini, except one opera by Bencini, and one oratorio by Ciccioni in 1708. Caldara began his career at Rome with Amadori, in 1711. In 1712, Orlandini and Polaroli; 1715, Predieri; 1718, Mancini and Porpora; and in 1721, Bononcini set his opera of Crispo for that city. About this time the Scarlattis and Gasparini seem to have retired. In 1723, Vivaldi and Micheli were first employed there; and in 1724, Vinci's name appears for the first time. The same year Tigrane was set by three different composers: the first act by Micheli, second by Vivaldi, and third by Romaldi. The first operas of Falconi and Sarro were likewise performed at Rome this year. In 1726, Leo and Albinoni; 1727, Costanza; 1728, Feo and Broschi; 1729, Auletta and Fischietti; 1731, Araijs, Giacomelli and Caballone; 1732, Giaj, Porta, and Hasse; 1734, Vassieri; 1735, Ciampi, Duni, and Pergolesi; 1737, Latilla and Rinaldo di Capua, who are still living; 1738, Arena and Logroscino; 1739, Terradellas; 1740, Jomelli; 1741, Bernasconi and Lampugnani; 1742, Manna and Selliti; 1743, Conti and Cocchi; 1747, Abos and Buranello; 1749, Perez; 1752, Sabatini; 1753, Pampani and Aurisicchio; 1755, Garzia, Conforto, and Scolari; 1756, Gluck; 1757, Eurichelli and Traetta; 1758, Piccini; 1759, Monopoli and Ciccio di Majo; 1761, Orgitano; 1763, Guglielmi; 1764, Sacchini and Bertoni; 1766, Sarti, Franchi, and Souza; 1768, Borghi; 1769, Anfossi and Monza; 1770, Gasman; 1771, Zanetti; 1772, Paesello; 1773, Gazaniga; 1775, Masi; 1776, Iberger, Mortellari, Cimarosa, and Marcello di Capua; 1777, Borroni, Ottani, Caruso; 1778, Salieri and Bianchi; 1780, Pitticchio, Curzio, Monti, Tarchi, and Cavi; 1781, Alessandria sandri and Merandi; 1783, Cherubini and Rust; 1784, Mareschalchi and Marinelli; 1786, Tritta, Giuf. Giordani, Albertini, Zingarelli, Giuliani, Amiconi, and Fabrizj; 1788, Manfredini, Bernardini, and Platone. A Roman audience being more fastidious than any other in Italy, Rome is regarded as the post of honour for musicians. This dry list, therefore, of mere names and dates, will at least inform the reader how quick and constant has been the succession of masters who have worked their way thither during the present century, by first distinguishing themselves elsewhere.

Of theoretical tracts and didactic treatises upon Music, that have been written in Italy during the present century, I shall only be able to furnish my readers with a mere list, not having room at present for a minute and critical account of them. Indeed, their number bears no proportion to the practical works and excellent compositions with which that country has furnished all Europe.

In 1703, GASPARINI published a small but useful tract, entitled L'Armonico pratico al Cimbalo, of which a fifth edition was printed at Venice 1764. This work is chiefly confined to accompaniment (b).

On the Art of SINGING, del Canto figurato, TOSI published a tract at Bologna 1723 (c); and MANCINI another at Vienna 1774, which are excellent.

On the subject of DRAMATIC MUSIC, or the OPERA, QUADRIO has treated largely, but not with much intelligence or taste, in his Storia d' Ogni Poesia; ALGAROTTI has written an essay: Saggio dell' Opera in Musica; PLANELLI, a treatise: Trattato dell' Opera, 1772; NAPOLI SIGNORELLI, an excellent critical history: Storia critica de' Teatri, 1783; and ARTEAGA on the revolutions of the musical theatre: Revoluzioni del Teatro Musicale, 1783, and much enlarged in 1785. This is an eloquent writer who loves poetry better than Music.

(b) The republication of this elementary tract so lately as 1754, says M. de la Borde, Tom. III. p. 344, "proves that harmony makes a very slow progress in Italy, Gasparini not being arrived at the Regle de l' Octave." But did the French themselves, or any other people follow [that rule, or the fundamental base, when Gasparini's book was published? And does the counterpoint of Durante, Jomelli, Galuppi, Piccini, or Sacchini, manifest a want of rules or knowledge of harmony?

(c) Tosi's treatise was well translated into English by Galliard in 1742.

TARTINI, the principal Italian Theorist of the present century, published in 1754 his Trattato di Musica; and in 1767, his Dissertazione de' principj dell' Armonia Musicale contenuta nel Diatonico genere. Tartini's system has been confuted in the scientific part; and yet, however defective he may be in his calculations as a geometrician, there are frequently to be found in his writings such admirable ideas, traits of modulation, and curious harmony, as are invaluable to practical musicians. If, therefore, instead of wandering in the mazes of conjecture, and calculating, unscientifically, which every dry mathematician can discover, he had given us a well-digested practical treatise on composition, what a treasure it would have been to the musical world!

In 1761, PADRE PAOLUCCI published a work, in two volumes folio, called L'Arte pratica di Contrappunto; the design of which was to teach composition by examples from the most classical masters of harmony, which the editor has illustrated with a learned commentary. A plan similar to this was published by P. Martini in his Saggio di Contrappunto.

In 1767, Musica Ragionata, by Testore. This author builds his instructions on Rameau's principles.

No HISTORY OF MUSIC has been attempted in Italy since Bontempi's in 1695, except that of PADRE MARTINI, which has been left unfinished. This learned father began his work on so large a scale, that, though the chief part of his life seems to have been dedicated to it, only three volumes were published before his decease, in 1783. The first volume, which is wholly confined to Hebrew Music, appeared in 1757. The second and third volumes, which treat of the Music of the ancient Greeks, in 1770 and in 1781. In 1774, this profound master of harmony published his Saggio di Contrappunto, a work which has been so frequently cited and praised in the course of this history, that no further account of it seems necessary here.

In 1774, EXIMENO, a Spanish Jesuit, published at Rome a work entitled Dell' Origine e delle Regole della Musica, in which, too confident of his own powers, he imagined himself capable, with four years study only, intuitively to frame a better system of counterpoint than that upon which so many great musicians had been formed. Possessed of eloquence, fire, and a lively imagination, his book has been called in Italy, “a whimsical romance upon the art of Music, in which is discovered a rage for pulling down, without the power of rebuilding (d).” The author has certainly, with shrewdness and accuracy, started several difficulties, and pointed out imperfections in the theory and practice of Music, as well as in the particular systems of Tartini and Rameau; but his own resources and experience are totally insufficient to the task of correcting the errors of the old system, or forming a new one that is more perfect. He has more eloquence of language than science in Music. His reasoning is ingenious and specious, even when his data are false; but his examples of composition are below contempt; and yet, they are courageously given as models for students, superior to those of the old great masters of harmony.

In 1779, PADRE VALLOTTI published at Padua the first book of a treatise entitled Della Scienza Teorica e Pratica della moderna Musica. This first book is purely theoretical. The author promises three other books, the publication of which has not come to my knowledge. Book second is to contain the practical elements of Music; the third, the precepts of counterpoint; and the fourth, rules of accompaniment.

In 1782, letters were published at Milan by ZANOTTI, P. MARTINI, and P. SACCHI, upon the division of time in Music, dancing, and poetry; on the succession of fifths in counterpoint, and on the rules of accompaniment. A quarto pamphlet.

The same year was published at Venice, in folio, a treatise on “the Science of Sounds and of Harmony: La Scienza de’ Suoni, e dell’ Armonia,” chiefly intended to explain the phenomena of sound, as far as they may be useful to the practice of counterpoint, by the Abate GIUSEPPE PIZZATI. This author gives an account of modern discoveries in harmonics, of the systems of Rameau and Tartini, and the laws of harmony, in their present extent.

(d) Bizzarro Romanzo di Musica, con cui vuol distruggere senza poter poi rifabbricare. Elogij Italiani, Tom. VIII.

IV. The progress, from the time of Ferdinand II. to Charles VI.
 to have had an invariable partiality for the Italian language and more. I copied and Joseph during the beginning of the precent century, and the Italian composers Ziani, Conti, and the two
Of the Progress of Music in GERMANY, during the present Century.

THE materials for this chapter, which I collected in my German tour, have been so much augmented since, by the acquisition of subsequent publications and a constant intercourse with the natives of that country, that an entire volume would be insufficient to contain them. But to do justice, individually, to all the great musical professors that Germany has produced during the period which I have now to describe, would occupy much more space in my work than it is in my power to allow. Indeed, the curiosity and wants of the generality of my readers will probably be less pressing about foreigners, whose names and talents have hardly penetrated into our country, than about such as tradition has celebrated, or acquaintance endeared. It is therefore hoped, that omissions of minute details, or deep researches, concerning the Music of every other country but our own, will be excused.

It has been already related that operas, either in Italian or German, were established, in the principal cities of the empire, during the latter end of the last century. At Hamburg, operas in the German language continued to be performed till about the year 1738 of the present century. Though the chief part of these dramas were set to Music by Keiser, yet other composers were sometimes employed. It was here that the Muse of Handel first took wing, in the year 1704, when his German opera of Almira was first performed. Mattheson, Telemann, and others, contributed to the entertainment of the city of Hamburg, where six operas were sometimes produced in a year; of which a list is given in Marpurg's Historical and Critical Essays (e).

(e) Historisch-Kritische Beyträge.

The Emperors, from the time of Ferdinand II. to Charles VI. seem to have had an invariable partiality for the Italian language and Music. Leopold and Joseph, during the beginning of the present century, had the Italian composers Ziani, Conti, and the two Bononcini's in their service; and soon after the accession of Charles the Sixth, the lyric poets Pariati and Apostolo Zeno were severally honoured with the title of imperial laureat.

On the birth of an arch-duchess, 1724, an opera was exhibited at Vienna with uncommon magnificence and splendor. The performers were all persons of high rank, and his imperial Majesty himself accompanied the voices on the harpsichord, as principal director. The opera called Eurystheus, written by Apostolo Zeno, was set by Caldara. A minute account of that performance was inserted in the Daily Courant, May 30th of this year, with the names of all the illustrious performers, vocal and instrumental. Caldara is said to have trembled for the fate of his Music from the execution of dilettanti only; but was delighted, says the account, when he heard how well all the parts were performed. There were seven singers, and twenty-two instrumental performers. The dancers even were persons of the highest rank, among whom were two arch-duchesses.

The Emperor was so pleased, that after the third representation of this opera, he made a lottery for the performers, with prizes of five hundred, one thousand, and two thousand florins value, in jewels, gold repeating watches, &c. The arch-duchess Maria Theresa, afterwards Queen of Hungary and Empress, sung the principal part on the stage in this drama. It was her boast to Faustina many years after.

In 1729, the admirable Metastasio was invited to VIENNA, where he continued to fill the place of imperial laureat till his decease in 1782. Most of the operas and oratorios which this poet wrote for Vienna, were set to Music by Caldara. However, between the year 1702 and 1729, several dramas were set by the learned contrapuntist and imperial maestro di capella, Fuchs.

From

From the death of the Emperor Charles VI. in 1740, few serious operas seem to have been performed at Vienna till after the peace of Paris, 1763. In 1764, the year in which the present Emperor was crowned King of the Romans, GLUCK was the composer, and Guadagni the principal singer. It was in this year that a species of dramatic Music, different from that which then reigned in Italy, was attempted by Gluck in his famous opera of ORFEO, which, with Gaudagni's admirable action, succeeded so well, that it was soon after attempted in other parts of Europe, particularly at Parma and Paris. This is not the place to discuss its merit; I shall here only observe, that the simplifying dramatic Music in Gluck's manner, in favour of the poet, at the expence of the composer and singer, is certainly very rational, where an opera is performed in the language of the country, and the singers have no great abilities to display, as in France; but in England, where we have frequently singers of uncommon talents, and where so small a part of an opera audience understands Italian, by abridging the symphonies, and prohibiting divisions and final cadences, in favour of an unintelligible drama, we should lose more than we should gain.

In 1766, we find in the list of musicians at Vienna the following names, which have since acquired celebrity all over Europe: Christopher Wagenseil, Leopold Hofmann, Charles Ditters, and Joseph Haydn.

In 1769, Alceste, Gluck's second opera upon the reformed plan, written by Calfabigi, author of Orfeo, was performed at Vienna with still more applause and admiration than the first. In 1771, this opera and Paride, Gluck's third drama upon the new, or rather old French construction, with better Music, in which Millico was the principal singer, afforded the audience such pleasure, as seemed in 1772, when I was at Vienna, to have impressed the lovers of Music in the imperial capital with a partiality for that species of dramatic Music, which was not likely to be soon removed.

No serious operas were, however, performed, after this period, till the summer of 1785, when their favour was revived by the great talents of Signor Marchesini, who performed in Sarti's elegant and graceful opera of Giulio Sabino.

Italian.

Italian operas were established in a very magnificent manner at DRESDEN in 1718. Handel went thither from England in 1719, to engage singers for the Royal Academy of Music; and Telemann tells us in his life, written by himself and inserted in Mattheson's Ehren-Pforte, or "Triumphal Arch," that he heard two operas there, during this time, composed by Lotti, and performed by Senesino, Berfelli, Guicciardi, and the Santa Stelli, Lotti's wife, with the Durastanti, then called the countess, and the Tesi. Here he likewise heard, for the first time, the famous performer on the violin, Veracini.

In 1754, the opera orchestra at Dresden, under the direction of the famous Hasse, was regarded as the most judiciously arranged, and the best disciplined, in Europe (f). In 1756, the singers were Monticelli, Anibali, and Amorevoli, with the Faustina, the Negri, and the Todeschini. However, in 1766, most of these performers, except Anibali and Amorevoli, were dispersed or deceased. Hasse was, indeed, still nominally principal maestro di capella, and the list of the band was numerous, and contained the names of great musicians: among whom were Neruda, an excellent composer, as well as performer on the violin, two Berozzi's, father and son, with Fischer on the hautbois, Stötzl on the flute, Weiss the famous lutenist, and August and Binder on the harpsichord. Naumann, the Elector of Saxony's maestro di capella, at present, was now just nominated assistant composer, and was in Italy on his travels. But the horrors of war long rendered this court unable to cherish the arts of peace, nor has it yet recovered its former splendor.

The late Electress Dowager of Saxony, when her time was no longer occupied by cares of state, applying herself wholly to the study of the fine arts, and travelling into Italy, not only wrote two serious dramas in the Italian language: Talestri and Il Trionfo della Fedeltà, but set them to Music. This princess had learned to sing at an early period of her life of Porpora, and been taught the principles of composition by Hasse, and both sung and wrote in such a manner as did honour to those great masters, as well as her own genius and application.

(f) See Rousseau's Dictionnaire de la Musique, art. Orchestra.

Comic operas are again revived at Dresden, but there has been no serious musical drama attempted there since the siege of that city by the late King of Prussia.

Music, according to Telemann, was extremely honoured and cherished at BERLIN in the beginning of the present century, at which time he heard two operas of John Bononcini performed there. His friends contrived to secrete him in the room during the exhibition with great difficulty, as the performers chiefly consisted of persons of high birth: a princess, afterwards married at Hesse Cassel, sung, and the Queen Sophia Charlotte herself accompanied her, while the orchestra swarmed with great professors, among whom were Attilio Ariosti, the two Bononcini's, Antonio and John, with Fedeli, and Conti.

From the death of Frederic I. 1713, till the year 1742, there were no operas performed in this capital. But after the accession of his late Majesty, in 1740, the musical establishment of the court at Berlin was the most splendid and constant of any in Germany. Of this establishment, however, as well as that of many other courts in the empire, so many particulars have been inserted in my German Tour, that to avoid repetition and to save room, I am obliged to refer my readers to that publication. But before I quit Berlin, it seems necessary to mention, that in the year 1754, besides the composers Graun and Agricola, his late Majesty's opera establishment consisted of fifty performers vocal and instrumental, among whom Carestini and the Astrua were the principal singers, and among the instrumental performers were the concert-master, Graun, the two Benda's, Emanuel Bach, Baron the lutenist, and Quantz on the German-flute. Though there was a succession of principal singers from Italy, among whom were Monticelli, Salimbeni, Mazzanti, Amadori, Porporino, and Concialini; the composers and instrumental performers were constantly the same, except Em. Bach, who in 1767, on the death of Telemann, was appointed music-director at Hamburg.

Graun,

Graun, the opera composer, dying in 1759, was succeeded by Agricola, soon after whose decease, in 1774, his place was supplied by Mr. Reichardt, his Prussian Majesty's maestro di capella, at Berlin.

The court of MUNICH has at all times patronised the art of Music, and had great professors in its service. And operas have been supported there with great splendor during the present century, particularly by the late Elector, who was not only an excellent performer on the viol da gamba, but a good composer.

At the court of MANHEIM, about the year 1759, the band of the Elector Palatine was regarded as the most complete and best disciplined in Europe; and the symphonies that were produced by the maestro di capella, Holtzbaur, the elder Stamitz, Filtz, Canabich, Toeski, and Fräntzel, became the favourite full-pieces of every concert, and supplanted concertos and opera overtures, being more spirited than the one, and more solid than the other. / Though these symphonies seemed at first to be little more than an improvement of the opera overtures of Jomelli, yet, by the fire and genius of Stamitz, they were exalted into a new species of composition, at which there was an outcry, as usual, against innovation, by those who wish to keep Music stationary. / The late Mr. Avison attributed the corruption and decay of Music to the torrent of modern symphonies with which we were overwhelmed from foreign countries. But though I can readily subscribe to many of the opinions of that ingenious writer, we differ so widely on this subject, that it has long seemed to me as if the variety, taste, spirit, and new effects produced by contrast and the use of crescendo and diminuendo in these symphonies, had been of more service to instrumental Music in a few years, than all the dull and servile imitations of Corelli, Geminiani, and Handel, had been in half a century. /

The musical dramas of STUTTGARD, by the excellence of the composition, and magnificence of the spectacle, was long celebrated throughout Europe; particularly those set by Jomelli, who resided at the court of Würtemberg from 1757 to 1769. During this time, he seems to have occasioned a revolution in the taste of

Contrast

2
Munich
518

the greatest part of Germany; but Germany and Jomelli were of mutual service to each other: the one perhaps wanted grace, and the other solidity. Jomelli on his arrival at Stutgard composed in his first manner, which was thin and artless; but finding that the Germans delighted in rich harmony and contrivance, he met them half way, and by a mixture of styles, both were improved and more generally admired.

When Dresden was in its glory, serious operas were frequently performed at LEIPSIK, during the fair, by the best musicians and to the greatest personages in Germany. At present the comic operas of Mr. Hiller, in the language of the country, and without recitative, are the favourite amusements of that city (g). The airs of these burlettas have been long in general use and favour among the unlearned lovers of Music throughout Germany.

Operas are frequently performed in the Italian language at BRUNSWICK, where a good taste has been long established by the elegant and expressive productions of Messrs. G. Benda, Schwanberger, and Fleischer.

To this general and summary account of the local establishment of lyric theatres in Germany, I shall add a list of the great opera composers which that country has produced during the present century. At the head of these must be placed HANDEL, whose Italian operas alone, exclusive of his German operas, oratorios, and other works, amounted to thirty-nine; HASSE more than a hundred; GRAUN twenty-seven; and GLUCK, who was a dramatic composer more than forty years, in his two styles must have composed at least fifty (b). After these, the German composers whose works have been performed in Italy, and equally admired with those of the best masters of that country, may be enumerated JOHN CHRISTIAN BACH, GASMAN, and MISLIWECEK. MOZART composed an opera for Milan at twelve years old; and NAUMANN, the present

(g) Every part of Europe, except Italy, seems unanimous in banishing recitative from their comic operas; indeed, every nation has melodies of its own, but there is no recitative, except the Italian, which is fit for dramatic purposes.

(b) Agricola, the successor of Graun, as opera composer at Berlin, was an able musician, but his works, neither in number nor excellence, bear any proportion to the great masters just mentioned.

maestro di capella at Dresden, worked his way through Italy at an early period of his life; as did SCHUSTER, the second maestro di capella at Turin and Dresden; and the Abbé STERKEL, who has published so many works for the piano forte, which are admirable in point of taste, as well as the celebrated PLEYEL, have each of them composed an opera for Naples. Besides these, Mr. REICHARDT, the chapel-master at Berlin, who is now gone to Italy; RUST, the Music director at Dessau; and GRESNICH, have distinguished themselves as composers of Italian dramas; and in the Indice de' Teatri, there are many names of Germans, who, in some way or other, have acquired a place in that annual publication among opera composers.

Having furnished my readers with a list of the vocal composers which Germany has produced during the present century, I shall proceed to the instrumental, among whom, however, many of the masters already mentioned must have an honourable place.

Telemann, Handel, Sebastian Bach, the concert-master Graun, Emanuel Bach, Kirnberger, Francis and George Benda, Quantz, Mützel, Holtzbaur, and J. Stamitz. The rest, who are many of them living, I shall name alphabetically: Abel, John Christian Bach, Cannabich, Cramer, Ditters, Eckard, Eichner, Filtz, Fischer, Fröntzl, Graaf, Haydn, Hofmann, Kœfler, Lidl. Mozart, Pleyel, Rosetti, Schobert, Schroeter, Schwindl, Ch. Stamitz, Toeski, Vanhal, and Wagenfeil.

Besides these, there have been during the present century, and still are, many excellent composers in Germany, whose names are little known in England: as Kuhnau, Heinechen, Schmidt, Krieger, the elder Fasch, John Gaspar Fischer, whom Marpurg calls the Couperin of Germany; Janitsch, Hoeckh, Neruda, and Krause, composers for violins, all much admired in their day; Nichelman, Schaffrath, Rolle Music director at Magdeburg, Fasch junior, Wolf, Zelenka, Graupner, Stölzel, Homilius, all old masters much esteemed in their own country. Among the younger instrumental composers, of whose works we know but little, the chapel-master Reichardt, Schultz, and Ernst Benda, the son of George Benda of Brunswick, merit a distinguished place.

It

It has been already observed that Music being taught with reading and writing in common schools in Germany, gives an opportunity to the inhabitants, during youth, of discovering and cultivating genius wherever it subsists. And to this advantage we must add the great number of books of instruction and criticism on the subject of Music, which have been published during the present century chiefly in the German language, and which must greatly contribute to make a musician of every reader who has ears, and critics of all who have understandings.

Of the principal of these books I shall give some account in chronological order.

The imperial maestro di capella, FUCHS, appears as a theorist in 1701, when he published his Concentum Musico-instrumentalem in 7 Partitas divisum, and dedicated the work to Joseph I. King of the Romans. In 1725, he published his Gradus ad Parnassum, sive Manuductio ad Compositionem Musicæ, &c. This work, which is esteemed the best practical treatise on composition which Germany can boast, was translated into German and published at Leipzig in 1742 by Mitzler (i).

In 1727, BARON published an Historical Treatise on the Lute, in which he inserted anecdotes of various kinds, which procured him readers not only among the few lutenists then remaining, but among lovers of Music in general (k).

In 1728, HEINICHEN, whom Marpurg calls the Rameau of Germany, published a treatise on Accompaniment and Composition, which is very much admired for its clearness and science (l).

In 1732 was published Walther's excellent Musicalisches Lexicon. Of all the books that I have consulted for information concerning musicians and their works, I have never met with more satisfaction than from this lexicon; which, though compressed into a moderate-sized octavo, is so ample and accurate, that I have seldom been disappointed or deceived. This little volume contains, not only all the technica of ancient and modern Music, but biography, as far as names, dates, and works, of almost every eminent musician that has existed in ancient and modern times, till the year in which the book was published. The author's information, of course, concerning Germany, is the most ample, but Italy and France have had a considerable share of attention. A continuation of this work to the present time, would be a great acquisition to professors and lovers of Music and musical history. M. Marpurg of Berlin, and M. Hiller of Leipzig, have made considerable additions to it for Germany in their writings of twenty or thirty years ago, and other books have since been published, whence sufficient materials may be acquired to render a new edition complete for every country.

(i) It was likewise translated into Italian and published at Carpi, 1761. by Manfredi, with a letter of recommendation by Piccini, who styles Fuchs: Tedesco pieno di senso Italiano.

(k) Historisch-Theoretisch und Practische Untersuchung des Instruments der Laute.

(l) Von dem General-Bass in der Composition.

MITZLER's Musical Library, published at Leipzig from 1736 to 1739, is a scientific and useful work, though written in a dry style.

MATTHESON's best musical writings are his Critica Musica, 1722; Complete Chapel-Master, 1738; and his Ehrenpforte, or Glory of Music, literally, Triumphal Arch, 1740 (m). Mattheson, with all his pedantry and want of taste, was the first popular writer on the subject of Music in Germany; the rest were scientifically dry and didactic; but as taste improved both in Music and literature, better writers sprung up. Among the first of these was JOHN ADOLPHUS SCHEIBEN, chapel-master to the King of Denmark, who, in 1737, began a periodical work called Der Critische Musikus, or the Critical Musician, which he continued to the year 1741. This work, which was collected into one thick volume in octavo 1745, and printed at Leipzig, contains much musical criticism, as well as many characters and anecdotes of the great musicians who had then distinguished themselves throughout Europe.

The arts, perhaps, are enjoyed in their infancy with more enthusiasm than in a more mature state, when criticism has intimidated the artist, and frequent perfection rendered his judges more severe.

(m) This work contains the lives of many of them written by themselves, at the request of the editor.

From the year 1742, when the late King of Prussia fixed the musical establishments of his opera and court, so many eminent musicians were engaged in his service, that Berlin seems to have given the law to the rest of Germany, not merely from the great number of excellent composers and performers within its precincts, but theoretical and critical writers. The first, the most voluminous and most enlightened of these, was FRED. WILLIAM MARPURG, whose coup d'essai, as a writer, was a periodical work called the musical Critic on the Spree, 1749. Then followed his Art of Playing the Harpsichord, in three parts, published from 1750 to 1755. After which, A Treatise upon Fugue and Counterpoint, in German 1753, and in French 1756. This is the best book of the kind that is extant, except Padre Martini's Saggio di Contrappunto, which, for vocal fugues, is perhaps superior; but for instrumental, M. Marpurg's work is still more useful. The historical part, however, is scanty and inaccurate: for in the enumeration of organists of different countries, though M. Marpurg, who had been in France and civilly treated there, is very grateful, yet he mentions no English composer of any kind but the feeble and flimsy Festing, who though a worthy man and much esteemed by his friends, was far from a great player or good composer. Among organists he just mentions Stanley and Keeble; but of Handel's sublime oratorio choruses and manner of playing the organ he is wholly silent; nor does he ever seem to have heard of our great organists Roseingrave, Magnus, J. James, Kelway, or Worgan, who in 1756 was an excellent extempore fughist. And the examples of canon and fugue are too indiscriminately given to serve as models of excellence to young students. Indeed, M. Marpurg was so ingenuous as to confess to me, at Berlin, that he had injured his work by partiality to friends, whose productions he had frequently cited, against his judgment (n). In 1754, M. Marpurg

(n) About this time (1756) fugues began to lose their favour, even in Germany, where their reign had been long and glorious; but Rousseau's Lettre sur la Musique Française, and the beautiful melody, taste, expression, and effects of theatrical compositions, so much cultivated in Italy and in all the German courts, brought about a general revolution in Music, which Vinci, Hasse, and Porpora began, and Pergolesi finished.

began.

began the publication of his Historical and critical Essays towards the Advancement of Music; this work was closed in 1762, and consists of five volumes octavo. These essays, with his Critical Letters on the Art of Music, from 1760 to 1762, called the attention of Germany to musical criticism; which Hiller's weekly essays on the same subject continued from 1764 to 1770. The chief of M. Marpurg's works, theoretical and practical, which are very numerous, were published between 1749 and 1763, about which time he was appointed by the King of Prussia, secretary of affize. After this he devoted his whole time to political calculations, except what he bestowed on musical ratios in an Essay on Temperament, to which he added an appendix on Rameau's and Kirnberger's rules for accompaniment, or thorough-bass, 1770, octavo.

In 1752, QUANTZ, who had the honour of being the late King of Prussia's master on the German-flute, published in German and French an excellent treatise on the art of playing that instrument^(o); a work not only useful to flute-players, but to every kind of musician. His counsel to young students in Music are built upon good sense and experience; and though his genius for composition was not original, he was a keen observer of the beauties and defects of others, both in composition and performance. His advantages in hearing at Dresden, in the most flourishing time of that court, the greatest performers then living, and afterwards travelling through Europe for improvement, with an acute understanding and an insatiable thirst for knowledge, enabled him to embellish his instructions with anecdotes and observations, which, notwithstanding the vicissitudes of taste and style, are still extremely valuable.

The original, great, and learned C. P. EM. BACH, in 1753, when his reputation was at its acme as a composer and performer, published the first part of an essay on the true art of playing the harpsichord. The second part of this admirable work did not appear till 1762. The instructions and compositions given in illustration of his doctrines are truly worthy of this great musician.

(o) Essai d'une Methode pour apprendre à jouer de la Flute traversiere. Versuch einer Anweisung die Flöte zu spielen. Berlin.

In 1756, LEOPOLD MOZART, father of the present eminent musician of that name, published a treatise on playing the violin (p). This work is very well digested, and useful; and though Geminiani's art of playing the violin was published in England eight years sooner, it does not appear that any materials for this work have been drawn from that source.

In 1757, AGRICOLA, composer to the King of Prussia, published an excellent translation of Tosi's Arte del Canto figurato, or Art of Singing, with additions and notes. This is still regarded as the best book on the subject, in German, as the original is in Italian.

These, and innumerable other musical tracts and treatises, about this time, with endless controversies between the authors and severe treatment of each other, made musical people in the northern parts of Germany much more wise and fastidious, perhaps, than happy. Of late years the monthly and annual publications of musical critics, of different musical sects and principles, are carried on with great spirit (q).

It is difficult to reconcile it with the present religious tranquility of Germany, and progress of human reason; but there seems an unwillingness in the inhabitants of the protestant states of Germany to allow due praise, even to the musical works and opinions of the Catholics. And, on the contrary, the Catholics appear equally unwilling to listen to the musical strains of the Protestants. Thus the compositions of the Bachs, Grauns, and Bendas, are little known at Vienna; and at Berlin or Hamburg, those of Wagenfeil, Hofmann, Ditters, Gluck, Haydn, Vanhal, and Pleyel, are not only less played and approved than at Vienna or Munich, but infinitely less than in France, Spain, Italy, or England. Messrs.

(p) Versuch einer gründlichen Violin schule, Augsburg, quarto.

(q) Germany had in 1773, at least thirty reviews for different branches of literature, to which have been since added innumerable works of criticism on musical productions: as Reichardt's Musicalisches Kunst magazin, or Magazine for the musical Art; Cramer's Magazin der Musik; Forkel's

Musicalisch-kritische Bibliothek, and Musical Almanack, with an Almanack for Music and Painting, &c. &c. What Hudibras says of reformers and religious disputants, seems applicable to these tuneful discussions in Germany:

“As if their Music were intended

“For nothing else but to be mended.”

Mattheson and Marpurg, who have written so much and so well on the Music of most other parts of Germany, hardly seem to have remembered that there is such a place as Vienna; and yet, in that city, there have been long employed the best lyric poets, composers, and singers, that could be found in Europe. Pariati, Apostolo Zeno, and Metastasio to write; Bononcini, Conti, and Caldara to compose; and Faustina, Farinelli, and Monticelli to sing. There seems to be a mutual rivalry between the German Protestants and Catholics still subsisting since the long religious wars in that country, which, though diminished by political arrangements and philosophy, is still lurking in the hearts and habits of the several inhabitants. The musicians of each country encourage these prejudices on a principle of self-defence; and envy and hatred in others, is but emulation in them. But the same kind of rivalry appears in every country: in our own, it is observable between university and university, college and college, class and class, and even between individual and individual of the same class. And if such discord reigns in the mansions of science and philosophy, there is little reason to expect that the interested and unenlightened members of other professions and communities should be possessed of more wisdom and candor, or be more exempt from human weakness, than their betters.

The founders of styles, and authors of revolutions in the Music of Germany, during the present century, seem to have been the following: Keiser and Handel, at the beginning of the century, seem to have had no formidable rivals among their countrymen. However, about the year 1740, Haffé and Graun acquired the favour of the public by a new style. Gluck, John Christian Bach, Misliwecek, and Gassman, were next in favour; and at present Schwanberger, Naumann, Reichardt, Schuster, Seydelmann, Rust, and Grefnich, are in possession of most of the German theatres, where operas are performed in Italian.

In organ-playing and composition, Handel and Sebastian Bach seem not only to have surpassed their cotemporaries, but to have established a style for that instrument which is still respected and imitated imitated by the greatest organists in Germany. The harpsichord Music of these great masters gave way, about the middle of the century, to the more elegant and expressive compositions of C. P. Emanuel Bach, who was soon imitated so universally in Germany by writers for keyed-instruments, that there have been few works published for them since, which are not strongly tinged with his style; those of Wagenfeil, Schobert, and Schultz excepted; but Geo. Benda, C. Fasch, Fleischer, Ernst Benda, Reichardt, &c. &c. are strong Bachists.

For violins, after Telemann, the concert-master Graun, Fr. Benda, Neruda, Janitsch, were in favour through Prussia and Saxony; while only Hofmann, Schwindl, and Wagenfeil were heard at Vienna; Holtzbaur, J. Stamitz, Filtz, Cannabich, Toeski, and Fräntzl, at Mannheim; and Bach and Abel in London. But in less than ten years all these have been superseded by Haydn, Ditters, and Vanhal. At present Rosetti, Mozart, and Pleyel share with them the public favour; indeed, there has lately been a rage for the Music of Pleyel, which has diminished the attention of amateurs and the public to all other violin Music. But whether this ingenious and engaging composer does not draw faster from the fountain of his invention than it will long bear, and whether his imitations of Haydn, and too constant use of semitones, and coquetry in ralentandos and pauses will not be soon construed into affectation, I know not; but it has already been remarked by critical observers, that his fancy, though at first so fertile, is not so inexhaustible, but that he frequently repeats himself, and does not sufficiently disdain the mixture of common passages with his own elegant ideas.

The great German composers for the church, about 1773, were classed, by an excellent critic of that country (r), in the following order: Fuchs, Sebastian Bach, the elder Fasch, Stölzel, and Telemann. To these he joins Haffé and Graun; but observes, that the Homer and Virgil of church Music is HANDEL; yet confesses, that the style of good church Music came from Italy. I am but little acquainted with the church Music of Fuchs, except what is inserted in his Gradus ad Parnassum, and P. Martini's Saggio di Contrappunto; but M. Marpurg says (s), that his masses and motets are full of exquisite fugues. Sebastian Bach set innumerable cantatas for the church, besides the Sanctus three times, with accompaniments, excellent in harmony and expression; Kyrie cum Gloria six times, all for four voices with instruments; with a Credo for five voices with accompaniments, of which I am in possession of the score, which is one of the most clear, correct, and masterly, I have ever seen. Of J. Fr. Fasch and Stölzel's compositions, I have little knowledge, except from tradition; but according to the report of excellent judges, who are well acquainted with them, they have great merit. Telemann set more spiritual cantatas, or anthems, than Alessandro Scarlatti secular. As he lived to the great age of eighty-eight, and was more than forty years music-director, he annually composed, ex officio, a Passionsmusik, or Music for Passion-week, from 1721 till his death in 1767. And besides these, he left behind him thirty-two choral compositions for the induction of preachers at Hamburg; thirty-three annual anthems performed before the chief magistrate; twenty compositions for royal occasions of jubilation; four funeral anthems; ten oratorios, &c. &c. Hasse, besides his innumerable operas, masses, and motets, had, in 1769, composed eleven oratorios. Graun's cantatas, or anthems, for Passion-week, among which is Der tod Jesu, or Death of Christ, are excellent in melody, harmony, taste, and learning. His Te Deum for the victory obtained by the King of Prussia at Prague, 1757, is well known throughout Europe.

(r) Versuch einer Ausserlesenen Musikalischen Bibliothek.

The organs of Germany in magnitude, and the organists in abilities, seem unrivalled in any other part of Europe, particularly in the use of the pedals. In Marpurg's Beiträge, or Essays, Vol. III. there is a minute inventory of the organs at Freyberg in Saxony, Halberstadt, Halle in Magdeburg, Königsberg in Prussia, Magdeburg, and Meerane in Saxony, of all which the longest pipe of the manuals is sixteen feet long, and of the pedals thirty-two (t).

(s) Art de la Fugue.

(t) One of the the largest organs in Germany, but which has been omitted in this list, is at Görlitz, in Upper Lusatia.

Among organists of the present century, Handel and Sebastian Bach are the most renowned. Of Handel's performance, there are still many living who can remember the grandeur, science, and perfection; and Sebastian Bach is said, by M. Marpurg (u), to be many great musicians in one: profound in science, fertile in fancy, and in taste easy and natural (x). Among organists of the present time, Albrechtsberger of Vienna is said to play in the true original style, and to make good fugues; William Friedeman Bach, elder son of Sebastian Bach, who died lately, was the best organist in Germany, in style, fancy, and knowledge of harmony; John Christ. Friederich Bach plays in his father's elaborate style. Rittel, organist of Erfert, one of the best scholars of Sebastian Bach, plays extempore fugues, and other movements in three, four, and five parts; and his choral Music is entirely in the rich, learned, and ingenious style of his master (y). Of Binder at Dresden, Dulsick of Czaflau in Bohemia, and Pothoff of Amsterdam, an account has been given elsewhere (z).

Nor shall I satisfy my own mind, or think I have performed my duty as a musical historian, if I close this chapter before I have borne further testimony to the peculiar merit of some of the great musicians already mentioned, but without sufficient discrimination.

Concerning the admirable JOHN ADOLPHUS HASSE, maestro di capella to the court of Saxony, who was the favourite opera composer of Italy and Germany from 1730 to 1755, so much has been said in my German Tour, at a time when he had nearly finished his career, that I have little to add here, except the melancholy

(u) Art de la Fugue.

(x) To this part of the encomium many are unwilling to assent; as this truly great man seems by his works for the organ, of which I am in possession of the chief part, to have been constantly in search of what was new and difficult, without the least attention to nature and facility. He was so fond of full harmony, that besides a constant and active use of the pedals, he is said to have put down such keys by a flick in his mouth, as neither hands nor feet could reach. He died at Leipzig, 1754.

(y) Musikalischer Almanac für Deutschland, 1782. Leipzig.

(z) State of Music in Germany, &c. 1772. To this list it seems but justice to add the name of J. GOTTFRIED MOSES, organist of Auerbach, in Voigtland, a professor who has done me the honour of publicly addressing to me a work, entitled Handbuch für Orgel Spieler, or a Manuel for Organ-Players, Part II. and for which I take this public opportunity of thanking this able master of harmony and of his instrument.

record of his death at Venice, in 1784, whither he had retired with his wife Faustina to end his days, soon after the year 1773, when I left him at Vienna.

CH. HEN. GRAUN, the idol of the Berlin school, besides his numerous operas, which continued to be performed almost exclusively during the life of the late King of Prussia, composed masses and spiritual cantatas innumerable. He likewise composed a considerable number of harpsichord concertos for princess Amelia of Prussia, which are graceful and pleasing in melody, artful in the disposition of the parts, excellent in harmony, and yet very easy. This elegant musician, who sung as well as he composed, died in 1759; and when Fr. Benda carried the news of his death to the King of Prussia, then in Dresden, his Majesty shed tears (a), and said, "we shall never hear such another singer again;" which proves, says M. Reichardt, author of the anecdote (b), that the King's first affliction was the loss of his singing, not composition, though he knew its worth.

Of the Chevalier GLUCK, the merit is well known to all Europe, and his peculiar claims to applause as a dramatic composer have been so fully stated in my German Tour, and will again be discussed in the next chapter, that I shall only acquaint my reader here, that after returning to Vienna from Paris, and being disabled from writing by a paralytic stroke in 1784, he only lingered in a helpless state till last autumn 1787, when he died at the age of seventy-three.

Of the illustrious musical family of BACH I have frequently had occasion for panegyric. The great Sebastian Bach, music-director at Leipzig, no less celebrated for his performance on the organ and compositions for that instrument, than for being the father of four sons, all great musicians in different branches of the art: William Friedemann, lately deceased, the greatest organ-player in Germany, particularly in the use of pedals. C. Ph. Emanuel, music-director at Hamburg, has been long regarded as the greatest composer and performer on keyed-instruments in Europe. John Christopher Frederic, concert-master at Bückeburg, an eminent composer and performer on keyed-instruments. And John Christian Bach, the late celebrated opera composer and symphonist, whose merit is well known throughout Europe. Kernberger, in an advertisement of his master Sebastian Bach's chants, of which he was lately editor, calls him the greatest master of harmony in any age or country; and says that these chants are the greatest specimens of German art. M. Reichardt, in his Magazine, still goes farther, and says that no composer of any nation, not even the deepest Italian, exhausted every possibility of harmony so much as S. Bach. And adds, "if he had been possessed of the simplicity, clearness, and feeling of Handel, he would have been a greater man."

(a) The tale "drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek." Milton.

(b) Musicalisches Kunstmagazin.

If Sebastian Bach and his admirable son Emanuel, instead of being musical-directors in commercial cities, had been fortunately employed to compose for the stage and public of great capitals, such as Naples, Paris, or London, and for performers of the first class, they would doubtless have simplified their style more to the level of their judges; the one would have sacrificed all unmeaning art and contrivance, and the other been less fantastical and recherché, and both, by writing in a style more popular, and generally intelligible and pleasing, would have extended their fame, and been indisputably the greatest musicians of the present century.

Emanuel Bach, in his life, written at my request, by himself, has some excellent reflexions on his own style, which he formed and polished by hearing the greatest performers, vocal and instrumental, of his youth, who visited his father, or were employed in the theatre at Berlin. When the critics, says he, are disposed to judge impartially, which seldom happens, they are frequently too severe on works that come under their lash, from not knowing the circumstances that gave them birth, or remembering the author's original intention. But how seldom are critics found to possess feeling, science, probity, and courage? qualities without which no one should set up for a sovereign judge. It is a melancholy truth, that musical criticism, which ought to be useful to the art, is in Germany a trade, commonly carried on by dry, malignant, and stupid writers. He then declares that of all his works those for the clavichord or piano forte are the chief in which he has indulged his own feelings and ideas. His principal wish has been to play and compose in the most vocal manner possible, notwithstanding the great defect of all keyed-instruments, except the organ, in not sustaining their tone. But to make a harpsichord or piano forte sing, is not easily accomplished; as the ear must not be tired by too thin a harmony, nor stunned by too full and noisy an accompaniment. In his opinion Music ought to touch the heart, and he never found that this could be effected by running, rattling, drumming, or arpeggios.
the

If Haydn ever looked up to any great master as a model, it seems to have been C. P. Em. Bach: the bold modulation, rests, pauses, free use of semitones, and unexpected flights of Haydn, remind us frequently of Bach's early works more than of any other composer. But in writing for violins he has surpassed his model in facility and invention; freaks, whim, and even buffoonery, appear natural to Haydn, which in the works of his imitators seem downright caprice and affectation. Em. Bach used to be censured for his extraneous modulation, crudities, and difficulties; but, like the hard words of Dr. Johnson, to which the public by degrees became reconciled, every German composer takes the same liberties now as Bach, and every English writer uses Johnson's language with impunity.

GEO. CHR. WAGENSEIL, chamber-composer to the Emperor, if living, must have completed his hundredth year, having been born in 1688 (c). From the spirited compositions of this master for the harpsichord, before the piano forte was brought to any perfection in our country, the lovers of Music received great pleasure, about thirty years ago. The Germans long allowed them to be lively and easy, but those attached to the more refined and expressive style of Emanuel Bach thought them too trifling.

Of FR. BENDA, first violin to the King of Prussia, a very sincere eulogium has been inserted elsewhere (d); I shall only add here,

(c) He was living in 1784.

(d) German Tour, Vol. II.

that

that besides symphonies, violin concertos, and trios, he has published eight sets of solos for that instrument, which are extremely admired for their good taste and truly cantabile style.

His brother GEO. BENDA, many years in the service of the court of Gotha, published, in 1757, a very elegant set of sonatas for the harpsichord, in the style of Emanuel Bach, and in 1780 and 1781 two collections of harpsichord pieces full of taste and pleasing passages; but besides these and several German comic operas, he composed in 1778 Ariadne in Naxos and Medea, two works which he calls Duodrames, upon a new plan, of which the hint was perhaps suggested by Rousseau's Pygmalion, which M. Benda has likewise set. The author has manifested great abilities and feeling in the expressive and picturesque symphonic composition with which he has told the story and painted the distress of Ariadne, when abandoned by Theseus in the island of Naxos. This is done wholly without singing. The narrative part is spoken in blank verse, and the several passions and sentiments are seconded and highly coloured in fragments of symphony, like those of accompanied recitative of the most select, impassioned, and exquisite kind.

SCHOBERT is well entitled to a niche in an English history of Music, his pieces for the harpsichord having been for many years the delight of all those who could play or hear them. His first works were published at Strasburg about 1764; soon after this period he went to Paris, and was engaged in the service of the prince of Conti. About the year 1770, he and the chief part of his family were poisoned by eating faux champignons, or what we call toad-stools, taking them for mushrooms. In 1766, I was the first who brought his works to England from Paris. His style never pleased in Germany so much as in England and France. Those of Emanuel Bach's party allowed him to be a man of genius, but spoiled by his affectation of a new and extraordinary style, accusing him of too frequently repeating himself. The truth is, the spirit and fire of his pieces require not only a strong hand but a harpsichord, to give them all their force and effect. They are too rapid, and have too many notes for clavichords or piano fortes, which supply the place of harpsichords in Germany. The novelty and merit of Schobert's compositions seem to consist in the introduction of the symphonic, or modern overture style, upon the harpsichord, and by light and shade, alternate agitation and tranquillity, imitating the effects of an orchestra. The general use of piano fortes, for which the present compositions for keyed-instruments are chiefly written, has more contributed to lessen the favour of Schobert's pieces, than their want of merit.
and

Of the same school, with less spirit and originality, is JOHN FRIED. EDELMAN, born at Strasburg, 1749.

EICHNER, who was in this country about twelve years ago, and died at Potzdam in 1778, introduced a style between that of Schobert and the present; with less fire than Schobert, and more taste and expression. He was accused by the critics of his own country of being too modern.

There are many great German musicians dispersed throughout Europe, whose merit is little known in England, or even in their native land; among these is ECKARD, who has been fifty years at Paris. This musician has published but little; yet by what has appeared, it is manifest that he is a man of genius and a great master of his instrument.

KERNBERGER, of Berlin, lately deceased, was a scholar of Seb. Bach, and possessed of great musical learning (e). His knowledge of counterpoint, and of all the laws and subtilties of canon and fugue, were indisputable. But in his compositions he is often dry and crude, and perpetually striving at new passages and effects, with which his invention did not very liberally supply him.

ROLLE, of Magdeburg, likewise lately deceased, was an excellent composer for the church, as well as author of pieces for the organ and harpsichord of great merit. His oratorio of Thirsa and her Sons is full of good taste, new passages, pleasing effects, and pathos.

Of FR. GOTTLOB FLEISCHER, of Brunswick, born 1722, all the Music I have seen is excellent. His harpsichord-pieces are in a good taste, and full of grace and fancy; and his German comic opera of the Oracle, composed in 1771, is more in the best modern

(e) He is said by Reichardt frequently to have corrected Rameau, in his work style of Italy, than any Music of that kind and period that I have seen.

ERNST WILLIAM WOLF, chapel-master at Weimar, has not only composed a great number of favourite German comic operas, but excellent pieces for the harpsichord; and, in 1782, published an Easter Cantata, or anthem in score, of which the Music is admirable, though the airs are perhaps a little too dramatic for the church.

The trios and symphonies of SCHWINDL, which were thought so pleasing and excellent, before the Vienna school was known, seem to have been wholly laid aside in our country, since the departure of Giardini with whom they were in high favour. But even twenty years ago, though they were admired by dilettanti in Germany, professors, who allowed the author to have genius, denied him taste and correctness.

The spirited, natural, and unaffected symphonies of VANHAL, seem to have preceded those of Haydn, at least in England. The quartets and other productions for violins by this excellent composer certainly deserve a place among the first productions, in which unity of melody, pleasing harmony, and a free and manly style are constantly preserved.

I am now happily arrived at that part of my narrative where it is necessary to speak of HAYDN! the admirable and matchless HAYDN! from whose productions I have received more pleasure late in my life, when tired of most other Music, than I ever received in the most ignorant and rapturous part of my youth, when every thing was new, and the disposition to be pleased undiminished by criticism or satiety.

It having been reported in 1778, that Haydn was dead, I took the liberty of applying to Sir Robert Keith, his Majesty's minister plenipotentiary at the imperial court, for information concerning him; who not only contradicted the report, but condescended to honour me with the following particulars, which his German secretary had procured from the best authority.

JOSEPH HAYDN, maestro di capella to his serene highness prince Esterhazy, was born at Rhorau, in Lower Austria, in 1733.

VOL. IV.

4 A

His

Grays
1789

His father, a wheelwright by trade, played upon the harp without the least knowledge of Music, which, however, excited the attention of his son, and first gave birth to his passion for Music. In his early childhood he used to sing to his father's harp the simple tunes which he was able to play, and being sent to a small school in the neighbourhood, he there began to learn Music regularly; after which he was placed under Reuter, maestro di capella of the cathedral at Vienna; and, having a voice of great compass, was received into the choir, where he was well taught, not only to sing, but to play on the harpsichord and violin. At the age of eighteen, on the breaking of his voice, he was dismissed from the cathedral. After this, he supported himself during eight years as well as he could by his talents, and began to study more seriously than ever. He read the works of Mattheson, Heinichen, and others, on the theory of Music; and for the practice, studied with particularly attention the pieces of Emanuel Bach. At length he met with Porpora, who was at this time in Vienna, and, during five months, was so happy as to receive his counsel and instructions in singing and the composition of vocal Music. In 1759, he was received into the service of Count Marzin as director of his Music, whence, in 1761, he passed to the palace of prince Esterhazy, to whose service he has been constantly attached ever since.

The first time I meet with his name in the German catalogues of Music, is in that of Breitkopf of Leipzig, 1763, to a Divertimento à Cembalo, 3 Concerti à Cembalo, 6 Trios, 8 Quadros or Quartets, and 6 Symphonies in four and eight parts. The chief of his early Music was for the chamber. He is said at Vienna to have composed before 1782, a hundred and twenty-four pieces for the bariton, for the use of his prince, who is partial to that instrument, and a great performer upon it (f). Besides his numerous pieces for instruments, he has composed many operas for the Esterhazy theatre, and church Music that has established his reputation as a deep contrapuntist. His Stabat Mater has been performed and printed in England, but his oratorio of Il Ritorno di Tobia, composed in 1775 for the benefit of the widows of musicians, has been annually performed at Vienna ever since, and is as high in favour there, as Handel's Messiah in England. His instrumental Passione, in parts, is among his latest and most exquisite productions. It entirely consists of slow movements, on the subject of the last seven sentences of our Saviour, as recorded in the Evangelists. These strains are so truly impassioned and full of heart-felt grief and dignified sorrow, that though the movements are all slow, the subjects, keys, and effects are so new and so different, that a real lover of Music will feel no lassitude, or wish for lighter strains to stimulate attention.

(f) This is the same instrument as Lidl played, described above.

His innumerable symphonies, quartets, and other instrumental pieces, which are so original and so difficult, have the advantage of being rehearsed and performed at Esterhazy under his own direction, by a band of his own forming, who have apartments in the palace and practice from morning to night, in the same room, according to Fischer's account, like the students in the conservatorios of Naples. Ideas so new and so varied were not at first so universally admired in Germany as at present. The critics in the northern parts of the empire were up in arms. And a friend at Hamburg wrote me word in 1772, that "the genius, fine ideas, and fancy of Haydn, Ditters, and Filtz, were praised, but their mixture of serious and comic was disliked, particularly as there is more of the latter than the former in their works; and as for rules, they knew but little of them." This is a censure which the admirable Haydn has long since silenced: for he is now as much respected by professors for his science as invention. Indeed, his compositions are in general so new to the player and hearer, that they are equally unable, at first, to keep pace with his inspiration. But it may be laid down as an axiom in Music, that "whatever is easy is old, and what the hand, eye, and ear are accustomed to;

(g) The extent of Haydn's fame may be imagined from his being made the hero of a poem called The Art of Music, in Spanish, and printed at Madrid ten years ago.

private and, on the contrary, what is new is of course difficult, and not only scholars but professors have it to learn. The first exclamation of an embarrassed performer and a bewildered hearer is, that the Music is very odd, or very comical; but the queerness and comicality cease, when, by frequent repetition, the performer and hearer are at their ease. There is a general cheerfulness and good humour in Haydn's allegros, which exhilarate every hearer. But his adagios are often so sublime in ideas and the harmony in which they are clad, that though played by inarticulate instruments, they have a more pathetic effect on my feelings, than the finest opera air united with the most exquisite poetry. He has likewise movements that are sportive, folatres, and even grotesque, for the sake of variety; but they are only the entre-mets, or rather intermezzi, between the serious business of his other movements.

GRETRY, of Liege, is claimed by the Germans, but this fertile and agreeable composer will have a place in the next chapter.

NAUMANN goes on writing, in what seems to me an Italian style, too feeble and placid for those who admire the originality and force of Piccini and Paesello.

MOZART, who astonished all Europe by his premature talents during infancy, is now no less the wonder of the musical world for his fertility and knowledge, as a composer.

CHARLES STAMITZ, the son of the great Stamitz of Mannheim, has all the fire of his father, and has kept pace with the times without the servile imitation of any style.

KOZELUCH, is an admirable young composer of Vienna, whose works were first made known in England by the neat and accurate execution of Mademoiselle Paradis, the blind performer on the harpsichord, in 1785. And his productions have since greatly increased in number and in favour. They are in general excellent, abounding with solidity, good taste, correct harmony; and the imitations of Haydn are less frequent than in any other master of that school.

The Abbé STERKEL has not travelled through Italy unprofitably; his harpsichord pieces, though not very learned or consonant to harmonical rules, are full of spirit, taste, and pleasing passages; and he has not only collected all the vocal flowers of the greatest opera singers of the present times, but scattered them liberally through his works. His violin accompaniments generally consist of passages of effect, and such as give importance to the player. Indeed, his pieces, though not very original, are less tinged with Bachism, or Haydnism, than those of his countrymen who have not visited Italy. And though less solid and less his own property, than Kozeluch's, yet they are more easy to execute, and more intelligible to unlearned hearers.

to

SCHULTZ, of Berlin, is a nervous and excellent composer, as well as an elegant writer on Music (b).

And REICHARDT is an animated and rapid writer and composer, a great admirer of Handel, and a patriotic and decisive critic.

HERSCHEL, master of the King's band at Hanover, and brother of the great astronomer, is an excellent instrumental composer, in a more serious and simple style than the present; more resembling that of Abel than Haydn.

HILLER, of Leipzig, the favourite composer of German comic operas, is likewise a candid critic, and an useful writer upon Music.

The music-director of Göttingen, FORKEL, is a composer, voluminous musical critic, and historian (i).

Professor CRAMER, of Keil, a dilettante, began to publish at Hamburg, in 1783, a Musical Magazine.

Professor ESCHENBURG, of Brunswick, the celebrated translator of Shakspeare into German, Brown's Dissertation on the Rise, &c. of Music and Poetry, Webb on the same subject, and the oratorio of (b) He is author of the musical articles in the second part of Sultzzer's Theory of the fine Arts.

(i) I am sorry that the third volume of this author's General History of Music which is to be confined chiefly to the Music of Germany, was not published before this chapter was written: as it would probably have saved me as much trouble in seeking, selecting, and arranging the materials, as my 11th vol. seems to have saved him; as far as he has hitherto advanced in his work; which from the great resemblance of its plan to that of my own, I can hardly praise with decency.

Judas Maccabæus, has done me the honour to translate the Dissertation on the Music of the Ancients, prefixed to the first volume of this work, and my Account of the Commemoration of Handel.

ABEL, and the German musicians who have long resided in England, will be reserved for the last chapter concerning miscellaneous matters and the general state of Music in our own country.

German Dilettanti.

Among these his late Majesty the KING OF PRUSSIA is entitled to the first place in talents, as well as rank. This heroic and accomplished prince having had Quantz early in life for his master on the German-flute and in composition, played no other pieces than his own and those of his master, which were never allowed to be printed. His Majesty during more than forty years of his busy reign, when not in the field, allotted four hours a day to the study, practice, and performance of Music. All the German masters allowed him the first place among dilettanti composers, as well as performers on the flute. Fischer, however, who was some time in his service before he first came to England, did not seem to like his musical productions, thinking them, even then, somewhat dry and old-fashioned. This prince had certainly great professors in his service, though he never was partial to Emanuel Bach, the greatest of them all. His Majesty, besides a great number of pieces for the flute, and some for the harpsichord, composed sometimes for the voice; particularly in the pastoral opera of Galatea & Alcides, in 1747, of which the overture and recitatives were Graun's, and the airs by the King jointly with Quantz and Nichelmann. Sometimes, the day before performance, his Majesty would send a new song to the maestro di capella to be introduced in an opera, and this was universally believed to be his own production in all its parts. During the last years of his life, according to his chapel-master, Reichardt, his Prussian Majesty having lost some of his front teeth, not only discontinued the practice of the flute, but his evening concerts, and became totally indifferent to Music: a proof that that his Majesty's chief pleasure in the art was derived from his own performance.

To the late ELECTOR of BAVARIA and his sister the late ELECTRIC DOWAGER of SAXONY, I have already paid my respects; yet it is but justice to the memory of that prince to say, that upon a late examination of the score of an entire mass for four voices, with instrumental accompaniments, of his composition, of which his serene highness honoured me with a copy, I find the design and composition much superior to the generality of dilettante productions.

PRINCE LOBKOWITZ, and his most amiable and accomplished niece, the COUNTESS THUN, as well as Mademoiselle Martinetz, were justly ranked among dilettanti of the first class at Vienna, in 1772.

The late syndic of the state of Hamburg, SCHUBACK, the worthy and ingenious imitator of Handel, is well entitled to a distinguished place among dilettanti, for his oratorio called the Disciples at Emaus, printed in score, 1778.

BEECKE, captain of dragoons in the regiment of prince Frederic of Würtemberg at Vienna, has been a composer and publisher more than twenty years. His pieces for the piano-forte are much admired at Vienna.

BAUMGARTEN, an officer in the Prussian service, has new set Zemire et Azor, in German; Andromeda, a Monodrame, and the Musti's Tomb, a comic opera, 1777.

The principal printers, publishers, and venders of manuscript Music in Germany are BREITKOPF, of Leipfic, who annually prints catalogues of new publications in types; and besides a general catalogue, with the prices marked of printed and manuscript Music, ever since the year 1762, he has distributed Theme-catalogues, in which the subject of each piece is exhibited in notes, so that a musical collector is enabled to discover whether he is already in possession of any of the works specified in his list of new Music.

The

The HUMMELS, of Amsterdam and Berlin, are considerable engravers of Music.

WESTPHAL and Co. of Hamburg, whose catalogues contain all the musical publications of France, Italy, England, Germany, Denmark, and Sweden, engraved, types, and manuscript.

HAFNER, of Nuremberg, engraves Music on copper, in a more neat manner than most other publishers.

ARTARIA, of Vienna, has lately opened an extensive commerce in the sale of Music of the Austrian school, neatly engraved; which, in the year 1772, when I was in Germany, could only be obtained in manuscript.

And now, neither justice nor candour will permit me to quit Germany and its numerous great musicians, without totally disavowing the opinion of another person, which was inconsiderately inserted in the first edition of my German Tour, before I was able to examine its truth: for I am now more than ever convinced, that this opinion, which accused Germany of want of genius, was unjust, and founded on prejudice and ignorance of Teutonic discoveries and achievements in the whole circle of arts and sciences. There can be no physical cause assigned for want of genius in a whole people on any part of the globe, within the temperate zone. And to pronounce, that an empire extending over at least a twelfth part of Europe, and whose inhabitants amount to a seventh part of the people to be found in that quarter of the globe, should be deficient in genius, was not only unjust, but inconsistent and absurd; particularly in the book of a man who during his whole life has been an enthusiastic admirer of German musicians, from Handel and Haffé, to Bach and Haydn. So far therefore from letting a second-hand prejudice warp my judgment or influence my opinions in writing my General History, I have long been keeping double guard over my pen and my principles, having been as angry with myself as the most patriotic German can be, for ever having given admission to such a reflection.

C H A P. XI.

Of the Music of FRANCE during the Present Century.

MUSIC, during this period, seems to have been patronised in France with as much zeal as in Italy or Germany, though perhaps with less effect upon its cultivation. But the long and pertinacious attachment to the style of Lulli and his imitators in vocal compositions, to the exclusion of those improvements which were making in the art in other parts of Europe, during the first fifty years of this century, have doubtless more impeded its progress, than want of genius in this active and lively people, or defects in their language, to which Rousseau and others have ascribed the imperfections of their Music.

The names of the serious opera composers in France between Lulli and Rameau are now easier to be found than their works; their panegyrics are not suffered to die, whatever may be the fate of their Music.

COLASSE, the scholar and immediate successor of Lulli, in 1687, finished the opera of Achille & Polyxene, of which only the first act could be found among his master's papers. Between this period and 1706, he furnished the Academie Royale with eight entire operas.

CHARPENTIER, DEMARETS, CAMPRA, COSTE, and DETOUCHES, are all enrolled among the French opera composers, who began to distinguish themselves soon after the death of Lulli. These were followed by BERTIN, in 1706; MOURET, 1714; MONTECLAIRE, 1716; FRANCOEUR, and REBEL, who composed operas in conjunction from 1725 to 1760, as our Beaumont and Fletcher did plays; by BLAMONT in 1731, and by BRISSAC in 1733, the same year as that in which Rameau produced his first opera:

The lyric theatre at Paris, after the decease of Lulli, was conducted by his son-in-law, FRANCINE, who obtained a patent for ten years, upon condition that he paid a pension of 10,000 livres a year to the widow and children of Lulli. In 1698, Francine entered into partnership with DUMONT, and obtained a new patent for ten years more. In 1704, the patentees had incurred a debt of 380,780 livres; after this, the patent was transferred to Guyenet, and, in evil hour, from him to others; for not one of all the entrepreneurs and projectors who have embarked in this hazardous undertaking, from the time of Lulli to the present, seem to have escaped ruin.

The government of an opera, says M. de la Borde (k), is a painful and embarrassing employment. It is necessary that the director of so complicated a machine should know how to manage all the springs, remove every obstacle to their motion, gratify the taste and sometimes the caprice of the fickle public, unite in one interest a crowd of different rival talents, excite emulation without jealousy, distribute rewards with justice and delicacy, censure and punish with address, limit the unbounded demands of some by flattery, check the independence of others by apparent concessions, and try to establish in the interior government of this republic as much harmony as reigns in the orchestra. It is manifest that nothing but the most subtle, artful, and pliant character can hope to accomplish such Herculean labours.

But though the revolutions in the opera government have been so numerous since the death of its first legislator, Lulli, Music remained stationary for near a century, in spite of the several attempts that were made in order to stimulate activity and enterprize.

In 1702, the publication of a pamphlet entitled Paralele des Italiens et des François en ce qui regarde la Musique et les Opera, by the Abbé RAGUENET, a man of taste and intelligence, who had resided some time at Rome, gave birth to a long, but ineffectual controversy, concerning the degrees of perfection, and superiority of French and Italian Music. The book was licensed by Fontenelle, who said in his testimony that "he thought it would be very agreeable to the public, provided they were capable of equity." This declaration, however, did not prevent Freneuse, the continuator of Bonnet's Histoire de la Musique, from attacking the author and Italian Music, in a most furious manner, treating both with equal contempt and obloquy.

(k) Tom. III. p. 486.

The French, after this period, seem to have enjoyed their lyric sommeils in great comfort and tranquillity till 1752; when the performance of Pergolesi's Serva Padrona at Paris, by a company of burletta fingers from Italy, set the musical republic in a flame which has not yet been extinguished.

There had, indeed, been a sensation excited, that was rather turbulent, and tending to a civil war, on the first appearance of Rameau as a dramatic composer in 1733, who by new harmonies and accompaniments had given offence to the true believers in the worship of Lulli; but this soon subsided, and the nation not only heard his compositions with rapture, but revered him as "a theorist, to whom Music was as much indebted as physics and philosophy to Newton."

Minutely to discuss the merits of this musician in the practice and theory of his art would occupy more pages in my book than I have now to spare. I shall, however, confess the effect his compositions and writings have had on myself, in spite of early prejudices against the vocal Music of France in general, and still more against its execution at the serious opera.

JOHN PHILIP RAMEAU, composer to the King of France and Chevalier de St. Michel, was born at Dijon 1683. He went early in his life to Italy, and at his return was appointed organist at Clermont en Auvergne, where his Traité de la Musique was written, in 1722. He was afterwards elected organist of St. Croix de la Bretonnerie at Paris. Here his time was chiefly employed in teaching; however, he published harpsichord lessons and several other theoretical works, without distinguishing himself much as a vocal composer, till the year 1733, when, at fifty years of age, he produced his first opera of Hippolite & Aricie. The Music of this drama excited professional envy and national discord. Party rage was now as violent between the admirers of Lulli and Rameau, as in England between the friends of Bononcini and Handel, or, in modern times, at Paris, between the Gluckists and the Piccinists.

When the French, during the last century, were so contented with the Music of Lulli, it was nearly as good as that of other countries, and better patronised and supported by the most splendid prince in Europe. But this nation so frequently accused of more volatility and caprice than their neighbours, have manifested a steady persevering constancy to their Music, which the strongest ridicule and contempt of other nations could never vanquish.

Rameau only answered his antagonists by new productions which were still more successful; and, at length, he was acknowledged by his countrymen to be not only superior to all competition at Paris, but sole monarch of the musical world. From 1733 to 1760 he composed twenty-one operas, of which the names and dates are annually published in the Spēctacles de Paris, and in many other periodical works.

Rameau's style of composition, which continued in favour almost unmolested for upwards of forty years, though formed upon that of Lulli, is more rich in harmony and varied in melody. The genre, however displeasing to all ears but those of France, which had been nursed in it, was carried by the learning and genius of Rameau to its acme of perfection; and when that is atchieved in any style, it becomes the business of subsequent composers to invent or adopt another, in which something is still left to be done, besides servile imitation.

The opera of Castor and Pollux having been long regarded in France as the master-piece of this composer, I shall here insert a few remarks upon it, that have been made on a recent examination.

The overture is the best of this author, upon Lulli's plan (1).

(1) "The overtures of Lulli," says M. D'Alembert, "are all cast in the same mould; yet, insipid as they are, they have been the invariable models of all other overtures for sixty years; during which time, there has been but one overture heard in our operas, if even that can be called one." Melanges de Litt. Tom. IV. p. 457.

The opening symphony is beautiful; but why the same melody was not applied, in the same measure, to the poetry, I know not, unless the versification required a change of time; but, in that case, why write the symphony on a subject that would not suit the words? But those eternal changes in the measure, which tease and disappoint the ear of all that are used to other Music, is general in serious French operas, and seem as much the fault of the poet as musician. It is, however, wonderful, that this defect was not sooner discovered. The over-charged tenderness of Rameau's Music appears in all his slow movements, which are in one style, and generally in triple time. This master perpetually discovers himself to be a great harmonist; but inured to a bad taste and style of composition, as well as to bad singing, he has only augmented the defects of his predecessors, and rendered what was rude and clumsy in Lulli, still more offensive, by endeavours at sweetness or high seasoning. The appoggiaturas, or leaning notes, being so frequently incorporated in the harmony, renders it crude, and the hanging on every note, as if unwilling to relinquish it, checks and impedes the motion of the air, and gives it a slow and languid effect, however lively the theme on which it is composed. Every passage in such melody resembles a French heroic verse:

"Each is an Alexandrine, through the song,

"That like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along."

The opening of the second act: Que tout gemisse, is very fine, and the pathos well applied; but the subsequent air, which is cast in an admirable mould, is spoiled by frequent and unnecessary changes of measure; and yet in spite of these defects, and the vocal outrages of Mademoiselle Arnould, I was more pleased and affected by this scene, than any other I ever heard at the French serious opera. The march, which has few appoggiaturas in it, is like other Christian Music.

The prelude tendre, at the opening of the third act, abounds with too many of these drags, which being equally harsh to the ear and injurious to pulsation, seem to prevent the performer from ever falling on his feet; and bar eleventh, the chord of the superfluous fifth fifth, which makes all nature shudder, except our Gallic neighbours, is here continued so long, that it distorts the countenance of every other hearer, like biera picra. The major minuet, page 121, after so long and tiresome a minority, is rich in harmony and graceful in melody. The voice is worse used by the composer than the most insignificant instrument. For after several symphonies that are extremely promising, and the ear has been made to expect a continuation of the prefatory strain, nothing is given to the vocal part but broken accents and dislocated measures. In the chaconne, which is admirable, the measure is well marked and well accented. This must long have preceded Jomelli's favourite chaconne, and have served as a model to him, Theller, and others, in composing this species of dance. More genius and invention appear in the dances of Rameau than elsewhere, because in them, there is a necessity for motion, measure, and symmetry of phrase. And it may with truth be said, that nothing in Lulli's operas was imitated or adopted by the rest of Europe, but the style of his overtures, or in Rameau's, but the dances.

After frequent perusals and consultations of Rameau's theoretical works, and a long acquaintance with the writings of his learned commentator D' Alembert, and panegyrists the Abbé Rouffier, M. de la Borde, &c. if any one were to ask me to point out what was the discovery or invention upon which his system was founded, I should find it a difficult task.

The base to a common chord has been known ever since the first attempts at counterpoint; and it only seems as if Rameau had given new names to old and well-known combinations, when he calls the key-note, with $\frac{5}{3}$, Generateur, Basse-fondamentale. But the Italians, ever since the time of Zarlino, have distinguished this lowest sound by called it the first base, 1mo. basso; and the other parts of the chord when made the base, basso rivoltato, or 2do. basso. But Broffard in his Musical Dictionary, published 1702, in defining Trias harmonica, or the three sounds of a common chord in its first state, calls the under-note basse, or son fondamental; and afterwards remarks that among the three sounds that compose the Triade bar-

harmonique, the gravest is called basis, or sonus fundamentalis. And what has Rameau told us more, except that that the harmoniques produced by a string or pipe, which he does not pretend to have first discovered, are precisely the third and fifth in question. This is the practical principle of the fundamental base; the theoretic was surely known, of harmonical, arithmetical, and geometrical proportion and ratios of sound, with which so many books have been ostentatiously filled ever since the time of Boethius.

The Abbé Rouffier, his most learned apostle and able champion, candidly confessed in his first work, that “the system of a fundamental base ought not to be regarded as one of those principles which precedes the consequences to be deduced from it.” Le mérite de cette découverte consiste, à avoir réduit en un système simple, commode, et facile à saisir, toutes les opérations des grands maîtres de l’harmonie. Traité des Accords, 1764.

Rameau’s system, as compressed and arranged by D’Alembert (m), is perhaps the shortest, clearest, and best digested, that is extant; and yet, from the geometric precision with which it has been drawn up by that able mathematician, many explanatory notes and examples are wanting to render Rameau’s doctrine intelligible to musical students in the first stages of their application; and even after that, the work, to be rendered a complete theory, would require many additions of late discoveries and improvements, both in the theory and practice of harmony (n).

About the year 1760, the System of a Fundamental Base, by Rameau, gave occasion to much discussion in Germany. By some it was adopted there as well as in Italy, by others disputed. It seems, however, as if this system, ingenious as it is, were somewhat over-rated by French theorists, who would persuade the world that all Music not composed on Rameau’s principles should be thrown into the flames—Jusqu’ à mon système, says Rameau him-

(m) Elémens de Mus. Theor. et Prat. suivans les Principes de Rameau, 1752 and 1762.

(n) Many opinions concerning melody, taste, and even harmony, which were current forty or fifty years ago, would now only excite contempt and laughter. IMAGINA-TION, which had been manacled by narrow rules, formed on Gothic productions, at length broke loose and liberated, flutters and flies about from flower to flower, sipping like the bee its native food wherever it can be found.

self; and M. de la Borde says, that "Music since the revival of arts was abandoned to the ear, caprice, and conjecture of composers, and was equally in want of unerring rules in theory and practice—Rameau appeared, and chaos was no more. He was at once Descartes and Newton, having been of as much use to Music as both those great men to philosophy." But were Corelli, Geminiani, Handel, Bach, the Scarlattis, Leo, Caldara, Durante, Jomelli, Perez, &c. such incorrect harmonists as to merit annihilation because they never heard of Rameau or his system? Indeed, it may be further asked, what good Music has been composed, even in France, in consequence of Rameau giving a new name to the base of a common chord, or chord of the seventh? The Italians still call the lowest sound of Music in parts the base, whether fundamental or derivative; but do the French imagine that the great composers above-mentioned, and the little composers who need not be mentioned, were ignorant whence every supposed base was derived? The great harmonists of the sixteenth century seldom used any other than fundamental bases. And the fundamental base to the hexachords has always been the key-note, and the fifth above and fifth below, just as Rameau has given it in his theoretic tracts.

But though the several merits of this musician have been too much magnified by partizans and patriots in France, and too much depreciated by the abettors of other systems and other styles, as well as patriots of other countries, yet Rameau was a great man; nor can the professor of any art or science mount to the summit of fame, and be elected by his countrymen supreme dictator in his particular faculty, without a large portion of genius and abilities.

The successful revival of his opera of Castor and Pollux in 1754, after the victory obtained by his friends over the Italian burletta singers who had raised such disturbance by their performance of Pergolesi's intermezzo, the Serva Padrona, was regarded as the most glorious event of his life. The partizans for the national honour could never hear it often enough. "This beautiful opera," says M. de la Borde, without any diminution in the applause or pleasure of the audience, supported a hundred representations, charming at once the soul, heart, mind, eyes, ears, and imagination of all Paris (o)."
[charming

From this æra to the time of his death, in 1767, at eighty-four years of age, Rameau's glory was complete. The Royal Academy of Music, who all regarded themselves as his children, performed a solemn service in the church of the Oratory, at his funeral. And M. Philidor had a mass performed at the church of the Carmelites, in honour of a man whose talents he so much revered.

The cotemporary and subsequent composers of operas with Rameau, of the old school, were MONDONVILLE, from 1742 to 1758; BERTON, from 1755 to 1775 (p); AUVERGNE, from 1752 to 1773; and TRIAL, from 1765 to 1771.

In 1752, a troop of Italian burletta singers having been engaged to perform at Rouen, the Academie Royale de Musique, which presides over all provincial operas as well as those of the capital, refused to let them appear at Rouen, before they had performed at Paris. In August they exhibited, at the Opera-house, in the Servant Padrona of Pergolesi, which was performed between the acts of Lulli's opera of Acis & Galatea, as an intermezzo, its original use. This performance made so many proselytes to Italian Music, that the friends of Rameau and the national opera took the alarm. Innumerable pamphlets were written on both sides, and among the rest, the celebrated Lettre sur la Musique Française, by Rousseau. There was too much good sense, taste, and reason in this letter for it to be read with indifference; it was abused, but never answered. The author was burnt in effigy at the Opera-house door. And while it was read by all the rest of Europe as an excellent piece of musical criticism, full of new ideas and views concerning dramatic Music, it was held in execration by the adherents to the ancient style of opera Music, and has been lately called "a wretched performance, dictated by spleen, bad taste, want of judg-

(o) Essai sur la Musique, Tom. III. p. 465.

(p) This master was not only a composer of new operas, but a reviver of the operas of Lulli and other old masters, which he retouched with equal tenderness for their reputation, and respect for modern improvements in the drama.

ment, and inconstitence," by a writer (q) who, on some occasions, seems to know better, and to have ideas of good Music, more worthy of a master of harmony and the present state of the art in every part of Europe (r).

In 1753, Rousseau's Devin du Village was first performed at the great Opera-house as an Intermede, and being composed in a familiar pleasing ballad style, neither entirely French nor Italian, and sung in the language of the country, was universally applauded. The same year Pergolesi's Stabat Mater was performed at the Concert Spirituel, which convinced many reasonable Frenchmen that their church Music was not so perfect as they had imagined it. Caffarelli was this year sent for express from Naples by Marshal Richelieu, to gratify the curiosity of the Dauphiness, a princess of the house of Saxony, who had expressed a wish to hear him. After fulfilling the object of his journey, and performing once at the Concert Spirituel, this singer returned to Naples without building towns or softening rocks in France.

And all these attempts at Italian Music, after the first fermentation subsided, only made the return to the ancient national psalmodic strains more welcome to patriotic ears, when the operas of Lulli and Rameau were revived, which they now were, with universal applause. And the driving away the buffoons, as the Italian comic singers are called in France, is recorded in all the periodical publications concerning the theatres in 1754, with great triumph. In the Spectacles de Paris, they were compared to noxious vapours which infect the air. The opera of Titon & Aurore of Mondonville, and the Castor & Pollux of Rameau, tranquillised les esprits.

In 1755, the motets à grand chœur of La Lande and Mondon-

(q) M. de la Borde, Tom. I. p. 412.

(r) It is not my wish to be thought an implicit believer in the paradoxes of Rousseau. When he says that the French have no Music, nor ever, from the nature of their language, can have any, and if they have, tant pis pour eux, I regard it more as a sarcastic bon mot, than a truth which will admit of demonstration. But all he has said of French recitative, false expression, want of measure and melody, is so true, that the most reasonable part of the nation have long since given up these points, and only wish to preserve their language in the lyric theatre, and to graft upon it the Music of Italy; which by no means seems impracticable, if with the melody of Italy the singing of that country could likewise be adopted.

ville were in great favour at the Concert Spirituel, and no profane mixture of Italian Music was heard there, except the performance of the two celebrated Bezozzi on the hautbois and bassoon, which there were a few so wicked as to admire, de bon cœur.

This year was performed at Paris Noverre's celebrated ballet, called Les Fêtes Chinoises, which was afterwards attempted in England to the great destruction of Mr. Garrick's dramatic plans and property.

In 1758, DUNI, an Italian composer of Parma, began first to adapt the melody of his own country to French words, for the comic opera. And about 1761, PHILIDOR and MONSIGNY had the address to betray the French into a love for Italian melody, or at least a melody resembling that of the burletta operas of Italy then in circulation. In 1764 and 1765, I was at Paris, and if the singing had been less national, should have been very much pleased with the Music of the Theatre Italien, particularly in Rosé et Colas, Anette et Lubin, Le Roi et le Fermier, Le Maréchal Ferrant, Le Sorcier, and Isabelle et Gertrude, in all which the singing of Caillet, as well as the acting, were such as vanquished all prejudice against French singing in general. All these were produced previous to GRETRY's arrival at Paris 1768, who brought with him all the taste of Italy, which, however, in compliance with the language and national taste of France, he has been frequently obliged to sacrifice, in order to please his protectors and judges.

In 1770, I visited Paris again expressly to listen critically to the reigning Music of that capital; and though the comic opera was in possession of many new and pleasing dramas that were well written and admirably set, the serious opera had not advanced a step towards perfection, or even variety, in five years time, if the opera of Ernelinde, by Philidor, be excepted, in which that ingenious composer quitted the ancient opera style of his country, accelerated the recitatives, and terminated his scenes with many excellent airs, à l'Italienne (s).

(s) The first run of Ernelinde was not very considerable, but it has since been revived with more applause than it received during its first performance.

The year 1774 was rendered remarkable in the annals of French Music, by the arrival of the Chevalier GLUCK at Paris, whose operas, by his conforming to the genius of the French language, and flattering the ancient national taste, were received with acclamation. He began his career in this capital by his celebrated opera of Orphée, of which the reputation was already established; and this was followed by Iphigénie, taken from one of Racine's best tragedies, which had all the success that may be imagined from the force of his genius applied to a favourite drama, set in the style of their favourite composers, Lulli and Rameau.

In his opera of Cythere Assiégée, 1775, where more delicacy and tenderness, than force, were required in the composition, he was not so successful. Nor was his Alceste, the year following, received with the same rapture as at Vienna. Indeed, his Armide, in 1777, did not quite fulfil the ideas of grace, tenderness, and pathos, which some of the scenes required, and auditors accustomed to Italian Music expected: however, his operas were excellent preparations for a better style of composition than the French had been used to; as the recitative was more rapid and the airs more marked, than in Lulli and Rameau: there was likewise more energy, fire, and variety of movement, in his airs in general, and infinitely more force and effect in his expression of grief, fear, remorse, vengeance, and all the violent passions.

Gluck's Music is so truly dramatic, that the airs and scenes, which have the greatest effect on the stage, are cold, or rude, in a concert. The situation, context, and interest, gradually excited in the audience, give them their force and energy.

Indeed, he seems so much the national musician of France, that since the best days of Rameau, no dramatic composer has excited so much enthusiasm, or had his pieces so frequently performed (t). And the French, who feel very enthusiastically whatever Music they like, heard with great rapture the operas of Gluck, which even the enemies of his genre, allowed to have great merit of a

(t) It has lately been said in the Journal de Paris, that each of his pieces had supported two or three hundred representations.

certain kind ; but though there is much real genius and intrinsic worth in the dramatic compositions of this master, the congeniality of his style with that of their old national favourites, Lulli and Rameau, was no small merit with the friends of that Music. The almost universal cry at Paris was now, that he had recovered the dramatic Music of the ancient Greeks ; that there was no other worth hearing ; that he was the only musician in Europe who knew how to express the passions : these and other encomiums preparatory to his apotheosis, were uttered and published in the journals and newspapers of Paris, accompanied with constant and contemptuous censures of Italian Music, when Piccini arrived. This admirable composer, the delight and pride of Naples, as Gluck of Vienna, had no sooner erected his standard in France, than all the friends of Italian Music, of Rousseau's doctrines, and of the plan, if not the language, of Metastasio's dramas, enlisted in his service. A furious war broke out, all Paris was on the Qui vive ? No door was opened to a visitor, without this question being asked previous to his admission : Monsieur ! estes vous PICCINISTE ou GLUCKISTE ?—These disputes, and those of musical critics, and rival artists throughout the kingdom, seem to me to have soured and diminished the pleasure arising from Music in proportion as the art has advanced to perfection. When every phrase or passage in a musical composition is to be analysed and dissected during performance, all pleasure and enthusiasm vanish, and the whole becomes a piece of cold mechanism. It is certainly necessary for professors to study and make themselves well acquainted with the fundamental rules of their art ; but I would advise true lovers of Music to listen more than talk, and give way to their feelings, nor lose the pleasure which melody, harmony, and expression ought to give, in idle enquiries into the nature and accuracy of their auricular sensations.

NICOLA PICCINI, born in 1728, may be ranked among the most fertile, spirited, and original composers that the Neapolitan school has produced. An invincible passion for Music frustrated the intentions of his father, who designed him for the church.

He

He practised in secret, and was discovered by accident to have made a considerable progress in the art, before his father could be prevailed on to let him have a master. In 1742, he was placed in the conservatorio of St. Onofrio, under Leo, and after his death under Durante. Piccini spent twelve years in study before he quitted the conservatorio in 1754, and began his career at the Florentine theatre in Naples with a comic opera called, Le Donne Dispettose; and the next year, Le Gelosie, and Il Curioso del suo Proprio Danno, of all which the success increased in a duplicate ratio. At length, in 1756, he set the serious opera of Zenobia, for the great theatre of San Carlo, which was crowned with still greater success than his comic operas. In 1758, he composed Alessandro nell' Indie, for Rome; and after this, every theatre in Italy was eager to engage him. In 1760, his celebrated comic opera of the Buona Figliuolo had a success that no musical drama could boast before. It was no sooner heard at Rome than copies were multiplied, and there was no musical theatre in Europe where this burletta was not frequently performed, in some language or other, during many years. In 1761, he composed six operas, three serious and three comic, for different theatres of Italy; and was at once applauded in Turin, Reggio, Bologna, Venice, Rome, and Naples. Sacchini assured me, in 1776, that Piccini had composed at least three hundred operas, thirteen of which were produced in seven months. On his arrival at Paris, he received many mortifications before his reputation was firmly established, from the partizans of the old French Music, as well as the friends of Gluck. The success of his operas of Roland, Atys, Iphigénie en Tauride, Adele de Ponthieu, Didon, Diane & Endymion, and Penelope, seems to have solved a problem which was long thought insolvable: "Whether the French language was capable of receiving Italian melody?"

In 1783, the opera of Renaud was set by Sacchini for the French theatre, and in 1784, Chimene and Dardanus. La Colonie and L'Olimpiade of this graceful and expressive composer, though performed to French words for which they were not originally intended, had made him so many friends in France, that the operas composed expressly for the

the use of that country, in which he had established himself on his leaving England, were heard with willing ears and heart-felt rapture *. Anfosfi, Paefiello, and Salieri, have in their turn been heard at Paris; where, though much of the business of reformation remains to do, yet much has already been done, within these thirty years, by the comic operas of Duni, Philidor, Monsini, and Gretry, as well as by the serious operas of Piccini and Sacchini. Indeed, those of Gluck, though manifestly on the plan of Lulli and Rameau, are greatly superior to both those composers in rhythm and effects. But by comparing the French operas even of Piccini and Sacchini, with the Italian of these excellent masters, I can easily discover a complaisance for the ancient musical taste of France, as well as the fetters of language; and sometimes an imitation of the tour de phrase et de periode in the melody, as well as recitative. But who can blame them for accommodating their strains to the taste of their judges? If good Music and performance are ever heartily felt in France, it must be progressively. Not only Lulli and Rameau must be wholly forgotten, but a totally different style of singing must be adopted and established; otherwise it will be in vain for the greatest composers, with the assistance of the best lyric poets in the universe, to attempt the reformation (u).

A singing-school is now established at Paris, with Piccini for principal master; but if his assistants are not Italians, and the Music upon which they form the voice is not Italian, and set to Italian words, it may be safely predicted, that many ages will elapse before any scholars will be produced that foreigners will hear with pleasure; and that the period is still more distant when the national taste in singing will be so meliorated by their performance, as to escape censure from the rest of Europe.

* Oedipe a Colone, left unfinished by Sacchini, was brought on the stage in 1787, with the greatest success.

(u) Even M. Chabanon, a good musician and enthusiastic admirer of good composition, flatters the French with telling them, that "an Italian either in swelling or in aspirating a tone is guilty of an exaggeration, which is offensive to French ears." And, in the next page, "that the French manner of singing, more sober and more mitigated than the Italian, preserves every charm of that Music (Piccini's) reputed foreign." De la Musique, p. 88, edition of 1785. There are many new, ingenious, and excellent reflexions in this tract; but it is not difficult to discover, that this elegant writer has heard but few Italian singers of the first class.

In 1778, a spirited and enterprising director of the opera, M. de Visme du Valguay, gave the nation an opportunity of hearing the Music of Italy, performed by the natives of that country, in their own language, which was the most likely expedient to bring about a speedy reformation in the vocal art; but though Piccini, Sacchini, Anfossi, and Paesello, were the composers, and the celebrated tenor Caribaldi, and the Chiavacci, and Baglione, the principal singers, the plan did not succeed, and they were dismissed the next year, with patriotic triumph, not sorrow.

Many of the instrumental composers and performers of France, during the present century, have been celebrated in other countries. M. Marpurg in his Musical Essays, published at Berlin, gives a list in 1755 of thirty-three eminent organists and harpsichord players then living, who had likewise distinguished themselves as composers: at the head of these were Calviere, D' Aquin, Rameau, Clairembault, D' Agincourt, and Couperin. And the harpsichord pieces of Rameau, Mondonville, and Duphy, with the violin solos of Le Clair, were printed in England, about thirty years ago, and in general use and favour. And in more modern times, the names and merit of Philidor, Duport, and Hülmandel, are well known in our country. But the number of practical musicians, natives of France who have distinguished themselves during the present century, in different parts of that kingdom, is very considerable. Of these, the several talents have been so lately displayed with patriotic zeal by M. de la Borde, in his Essai sur la Musique, that I shall refer my curious readers to that entertaining work. I shall, however, mention at least the names of the most remarkable, to facilitate farther enquiry.

BERNIER, scholar of Caldara, is regarded by M. de la Borde, as one of the greatest contrapuntists and fughists that ever existed. He died in 1734.

MARCHAND was one of the greatest organ-players in Europe, during the early part of the present century. Rameau, his friend and most formidable rival, frequently declared, that the greatest pleasure of his life was hearing Marchand perform; that no one could could be compared to him in the management of a fugue; and that he believed no musician ever equalled him in extempore playing (*). This musician died 1732.

CALVIÈRE is ranked by his countrymen among the greatest organists that ever existed, and one whose facility in playing extempore fugues on the most whimsical and difficult subjects, was truly wonderful.

The younger BOUSSET is celebrated among French organists, who were followed by the lovers of Music wherever they played.

The great COUPERIN, who died in 1733, was not only an admirable organist, but, in the style of the times, an excellent composer for keyed-instruments. His instructions for fingering, in his Art de Toucher le Clavecin, are still good; though his pieces are so crowded and deformed by beats, trills, and shakes, that no plain note was left to enable the hearer of them to judge whether the tone of the instrument on which they were played was good or bad.

BALBASTRE, an excellent organist of Rameau's school, is still living. His organ concertos, at the Concert Spirituel, were long the delight of Paris.

Among the violin performers of France, during the present century, Le Claire, Guignon, and Gavignié, are the most celebrated. The compositions of Le Claire manifest original genius, as well as knowledge of harmony, and of his particular instrument. Le Claire, in returning at night from Paris to a small country house, to which he had retreated after being tired of the great world, was murdered in 1764, without its ever being known by whom, or for what.

BLAVET was long regarded as one of the best performers on the German-flute in Europe. This celebrated musician, who was born in 1700, at the age of sixty-eight, died under an operation for the stone.

At present RAULT is the favourite performer on the flute at

(*) The Germans relate a story, which no French writer has confirmed: that Marchand, being at Dresden, challenged to a trial of skill all the organists of Germany, which none but Sebastian Bach ventured to accept. It was an honour, says M. Marpurg, for Pompey to be only defeated by Cæsar, and to Marchand to have no superior but Bach.

Paris; and BLAISE, who set the comic opera of Isabel et Gertrude, and CUGNIER, are the principal bassoons.

Among genuine French composers not yet mentioned, is GOSSEC, who, in 1784, was appointed director-general of the new Royal School of Singing. His panegyrist, M. de la Borde, says, that "all the foreign composers upon earth will never make Frenchmen forget the beautiful productions of Philidor and Gossec; of which, when the violent admirers of the new style, le nouveau genre, are come to their senses, they will be obliged to confess the worth." According to this zealous defender of the principles of Rameau, Gossec is the better musician for having had no master, and being of no school. He has composed for the serious and comic opera; but his symphonies performed at the Concert Spirituel, his mass for the dead, and his oratorios, have placed him at the head of the best composers of France.

To the fertile and pleasing composer, GRETRY, who was born at Liege in 1743, though not a native of France, as he has been more than twenty years settled in that kingdom, where, in all the musical vicissitudes of its capital, he has been the constant favourite of the public, an honourable niche seems due in this chapter. This admirable master had his musical education in Italy, and at the age of seventeen he distinguished himself at Rome by the composition of an intermezzo, called Le Vende Miatrice. Sacchini used to say, that he remembered him at Naples, where he regarded him as a young man of genius, who wrote as much in the style of that school as any of the natives of Italy; but when he heard his comic operas at Paris, many years after, he did not find that he was much improved, by composing to French words, and for French singers. However, from the small number of good composers in France, compared with those in every great city of Italy, he has enjoyed an unrivalled fame in his present station, which no composer is sure of at Venice, Rome, or Naples. He has, at least, improved the French taste as much as they have corrupted his; they have met him half way, and perhaps the genius of the language, style of singing, and national prejudices, if he had been inflexible, could not have admitted a nearer approximation.

This inventive composer has produced, since his arrival in France, more than thirty comic operas for the Theatre Italien, and six or seven musical dramas, serious and comic, for the great Operahouse, or Academie Royale de Musique, of which Zemire et Azor, and Richard Cœur de Lion, have been translated, and successfully brought on the English stage.

Among Italian composers, whose works are in present favour at Paris, is ANTONIO SALIERI, maestro di capella to the Emperor; a young composer, born in the Venetian state, and the scholar first of Pescetti, and, after his decease, of Gasman. He has set operas in Italian, German, and French; but has chiefly distinguished himself at Vienna, where he set thirteen operas mostly comic, before he returned to Italy, where he composed for five or six different theatres. In 1784, he set Les Danaïdes, a serious opera for the Academie Royale de Musique at Paris, which had great applause, even in competition with the operas of Gluck, Piccini, and Sacchini. Since that period he has produced for the same theatre, Les Horaces, and Tarare; this last has had a very uncommon success.

The number of musical treatises, tracts, systems, essays, critical dissertations, and pamphlets, published in France, during the present century, is too considerable for even a complete list of them to be inserted here. With the titles and principles of the chief that have come to my knowledge, I shall, however, terminate this chapter.

BROSSARD'S Musical Dictionary was first published in 1702, and translated into English by Grassineau 1740, but not called a translation, which it ought to have been; though the English editor ingenuously confesses himself to be much indebted to the learning and materials of Brossard's work, which is more than plagiarists always do on such occasions.

In 1705, a Treatise on the Rules of Composition was published by MASSON, which went through several editions, and was regarded as a classical work till Rameau's treatise appeared, in 1722.

In 1710, AFFILARD published Easy Rules for Singing at Sight, in which the time of the airs is regulated by a chronometre, or pendulum.

In 1743 and 1751, ROMIEU, of Montpellier, published what he called A new Discovery of the grave Harmonics, meaning the third sound, resulting from the coincident vibrations of two acute simultaneous sounds; a phenomenon which Tartini had discovered in 1714, and upon which he afterwards built his system, or Trattato di Musica, published in 1754.

In 1752, BETHISY published a treatise entitled an Explanation of the Theory and Practice of Music according to the new Discoveries. The author has availed himself of Rameau's principles, but not so implicitly as a true believer should have done.

The same year, D'ALEMBERT published Elements of Music, upon the principles of Rameau, a well-digested and excellent epitome of Rameau's doctrines.

In 1753, SERRE, of Geneva, published very ingenious Essays upon the Principles of Harmony; and in 1763, Observations upon the same Subject. These tracts contain many curious discussions and critical remarks, on disputable points in the theory and practice of harmony, which will both entertain and instruct a musical student.

In 1756, was published, BLAINVILLE's History of Music; a work for which the author's materials seem to have been so scanty, that he was reduced to fill two-thirds of his thin quarto volume, with an indigested treatise on composition.

1759. The Composer's Guide, by GIANOTTI, built on Rameau's system of the fundamental base. The author of this work having been long in the practice of explaining this system to his scholars, has drawn it up in a clear and intelligible manner.

The same year, the Abbé MORELET published a small pamphlet on Musical Expression and Imitation, which is full of ingenious ideas, and written with elegance.

1764. A Theory of Music, by BALLIERE of Rouen, built on the harmonics, and the disputed and unsafe basis of the column of air in a French-horn when caused to sound. Several of the intervals of this instrument and the trumpet, are so false in practice, that though they are expressed by the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, they do not all correspond with musical proportions. JAMARD, in his Recherches sur la Theorie de la Musique, 1769, extends this theory, till, by multiples, he arrives at the acute and inappreciable scale of birds.

The same year was published by the learned and accurate theorist, the Abbé ROUSSIER, A Treatise upon Chords and their Succession. In 1765, Observations upon different Points of Harmony; 1770, a Memoir concerning the Music of the Ancients; and 1776, Practical Harmony, or Examples for his Treatise upon Chords. All this profound writer's treatises are built upon the principles of Rameau, but Rameau sublimed. The Abbé's favourite discovery and systematic principle is the TRIPLE PROGRESSION, upon which he endeavours to prove that the musical systems of the Egyptians, Greeks, and Chinese, were founded. By triple progression is meant a series of perfect fifths, so that the word temperament equally disturbs his system and his temper. It is to be feared that the good Abbé in this particular, and in his principles in general, is too rigid and inflexible a theorist for the fanciful melody and licentious modulation of modern composers.

Our countryman, Salmon's proposal for reducing all Music to one clef (y), has frequently been revived in France without the least allusion to him or his work; which are both so much out of the question, that the French writers have frequently disputed among themselves the right to the invention. And so late as January 1786, a proposal was published in the Journal de Paris, for adopting a single clef, as a new discovery.

DUBREUIL published in 1767, a Manuel Harmonique, or Table of practical Chords, according to the regle de l'octave, which M. de la Borde condemns as inaccurate and deficient in variety; but with due deference to this author and his friend the Abbé Rouffier, I must say, that this rule for accompanying the scale in the base, ascending and descending, with a few exceptions easy to retain, comprehends the harmony of almost all the good compositions that have been produced within these thirty years.

(y) See Vol. III. p. 473.

In

In 1768, ROUSSEAU's lively and instructive Musical Dictionary was published; and as he gave no quarter in it to French Music, the admirers and defenders of that Music have treated his opinions with equal severity. It is, however, the business of true critics not only to point out the errors of a work, but, if it has any, the merit. There may be mistakes in Rousseau's Dictionary; but are there no good articles, no marks of refined taste, and nice observation in speaking of dramatic Music? No short, clear, and happy definitions of musical technica? And is every thing he has said of French Music thought so absurd and paradoxical at present, even in France, as it was thirty years ago? The Abbé Rouffier and his disciple M. de la Borde, who treat as absurd and stupid whatever seems unfavourable to their doctrines, were awed perhaps by the thunder of Rousseau's eloquence, while alive; but no sooner were they sure that the lion was dead, than they plucked up a courage, and boldly attacked him at all points.

The feuds in France between the Gluckists and Piccinists, not only gave birth to daily verbal disputes, but literary. The contention was not left to the decision of youth and beauty in the theatre, but the partizans of each Music had the venerable assistance of learning and science. I have read, and tried to read, many tracts and brochures that were produced on the occasion, but was pleased with none so much, as with M. MARMONTEL's Essai sur les Revolutions de la Musique Française 1778, and M. CHABANON's Dissertation sur la Musique considérée en elle-meme, et dans ses Rapports avec la Parole, les Langues, la Poésie, et le Theatre, 1785, in which these learned academicians and elegant writers have attacked and defended different sides with all that reason and eloquence can offer; but, at last, it will probably be found, that sense, habit, and prejudice, will not leave the decision to cold reason or warm eloquence, but insist upon having a vote on the occasion.

La Poétique de la Musique, par M. le Conte DE LA CEPÉDE, 1785, contains many excellent reflexions and precepts for a young composer of lyric dramas, particularly French, from which the author draws all the illustrations of his principles.

I must not close this chapter without making my acknowledgments

ments to M. DE LA BORDE, author of the Essai sur la Musique, published at Paris 1780, in four volumes quarto; a work to which I have so often referred, and which contains such an ample and curious collection of materials, as nothing but a long and unwearied diligence could amass. It has, however, frequently given me much concern to see the spirit of system operate so strongly on the author, as to affect both his candour and consistence. The critique upon musical writers in the third volume, seems only a vehicle for general censure of all that have not subscribed to the fundamental base of Rameau, the triple progression of the Abbé Rouffier, and praise of all that have. There is no middle state, no Music or musical merit of any kind, theoretical or practical, unsanctioned by these dogmas. But will M. de la Borde venture to assert, or can he even believe, that till the publication of Rameau's Système de la Basse fondamentale, and the Abbé Rouffier's Memoire sur la Musique des Anciens, there was no good Music in the world, or that all which has been produced since, by innumerable great masters in several parts of Europe, who never studied or heard of either, is execrable? That there is great method and merit in the systems of both these theorists, no candid judges of the subject will deny; and perhaps there are few who will not grant that the principles of harmony have not been formed into a code, equally luminous and useful to students, by any other writers, and yet will not shut their ears to all Music not built upon their principles. The inconsistency of individually praising Italian composers in such glowing terms, and yet seizing every opportunity to censure and sneer at Italians and foreigners in general, proves the work to have been compiled by persons of different principles. What a coil is made (Vol. III. p. 690) about a sharp fifth used merely as an appoggiatura, or note of taste, with which the base or harmony has nothing to do, and which, therefore, has no effect on the modulation! And yet M. de la Borde can bear the quinte superflue, and have patience to give a rule for its use in composition! Can any one sincerely praise the compositions of Piccini, Sacchini, and Paisiello, who is disgusted by those happy licences, in which the very soul of Italian Music consists?

M. de

M. de la Borde gives us his musical creed in pretty plain terms, tom. III. p. 639, in answer to a remark of M. Jamard, who expresses his surprize, that “the Italians without any formal system, compose better Music than the French, who are in possession of the true principles of harmony.” This M. de la Borde is so far from granting, that, on the contrary, he is certain the French Music, with respect to counterpoint, is infinitely superior to the Italian; and that the Italians surpass the French in nothing but dramatic Music, which is not like other Music, subservient to the laws of counterpoint!—“We will allow,” continues he, “that the Italians are superior to us in melody; but they in return must grant, that with respect to harmony we write in a manner superior to them in correctness, purity, and elegance.” What! superior to Leo, Feo, Durante, Abos, Jomelli, Caffaro, and Manna? But neither melody nor harmony, alone, can constitute good Music, which consists in the union of both; and melody without harmony, or harmony without melody, is as imperfect as a man with one arm, or one leg, to whom nature has originally given two.

With respect to all the feuds and contentions lately occasioned by Music in France, they seem to have annihilated the former disposition of the inhabitants to receive delight from such Music as their country afforded. There are at present certainly too many critics, and too few candid hearers in France as well as elsewhere. I have seen French and German soi-disant connoisseurs listen to the most exquisite musical performance with the same sans-froid as an anatomist attends a dissection. It is all analysis, calculation, and parallel; they are to be wise, not pleased. Happy the people, however imperfect their Music, if it gives them pleasure! But when it is an eternal object of dispute; when each man, like Nebuchadnezzar, sets up his own peculiar idol, which every individual is to fall down and worship, or be thrown into the fiery furnace of his hatred and contempt, the blessing is converted into a curse.

C H A P. XII.

General State of Music in ENGLAND during the Present Century.

MUSIC has at all times been called in to the assistance of the weak plays and unattractive actors of our national theatres; and incidental songs, and singing between the acts, have been found so alluring, that when there was no plan formed for exhibiting musical dramas, singers have been engaged at considerable salaries, expressly for that purpose.

Before the present century, the art of singing, indeed, seems to have been little cultivated among us, by either sex, beyond what concerned time and tune. The honourable Roger North, in his manuscript Memoirs of Music, speaks of the younger Banister as an excellent singing-master; but the players, who sung Purcell's songs on the stage, seem to have had nothing but voice and action to recommend them: such as Bowen, Harris, Freeman, and Pate, among the men; and among the women, Mrs. Davies, Miss Shore, afterwards wife to Colley Cibber, Mrs. Cross, Miss Champion, and Mrs. Bracegirdle. It was, however, a powerful recommendation to a song, during the last century, to say that it had been performed at the play-house. How different from modern times! Church Music, by the gay and fastidious frequenters of the opera, before, as well as after it has been heard, is pronounced to be old-fashioned, and play-house Music vulgar. Till the reign of Queen Anne, indeed, the gentlemen of the Chapel Royal were occasionally allowed to sing on the stage; but that Princess thinking the practice indecent, prohibited its continuance. There are few instances of vocal performers, especially female, being brought on our stage, but by accident. The fear of seduction, profligacy, and the world's opinion, deters parents from educating their children with a view to a profession, which nothing but uncommon success and prudence, can render honourable in the eyes of the most serious part of the nation. The generality of female singers, therefore, having every thing to learn after leisure for study is no longer in their power, usually remain ignorant of the principles of their art, and so totally dependent on a master, as to be obliged to perpetuate that apprenticeship, which ought to have been served before they set up for themselves.

At the beginning of this century, Weldon and Banister were the composers at Drury-lane, and Eccles at Lincoln's-Inn Fields. JOHN ECCLES was a popular and ingenious composer for the stage; and during the reign of Queen Anne, his entries, and play-house tunes and dances, were very much esteemed, as well as incidental songs to several plays, which, after the death of Purcell, were the next in favour of any by our own countrymen. "A soldier and a sailor," in Congreve's Love for Love, and a rope-dancing tune, with two or three catches, have the stamp of original merit. About the year 1730, he was appointed master of the King's band, and set the odes till the time of his death, in 1735, when he was succeeded by Dr. Greene.

In 1701, Acis and Galatea, a masque written by Motteaux, and set by Eccles, was performed at Drury-lane, in which Mr. Hughs, Mr. Leveridge, Mrs. Lindsey, and Mrs. Champion, were the singers. This musical drama was likewise frequently performed in 1702 and 1703 at Lincoln's-Inn Fields.

In 1702, The Judgment of Paris, written by Congreve, and set by Daniel Purcell, brother of Henry, was performed at Drury-lane. This Music had been composed in 1699, on occasion of an advertisement in the London Gazette, N^o 3585, acquainting musical composers, that "several persons of quality having, for the encouragement of Music, advanced two hundred guineas, to be distributed in four prizes: the first of one hundred, the second of fifty, the third of thirty, and the fourth of twenty guineas, to such masters as should be adjudged to compose the best;" those who intended to become candidates were referred to Jacob Tonson, at Grays-Inn-Gate, for further information. Weldon obtained the first prize, Eccles the second, Dan. Purcell the third, and Godfrey Finger, the best musician perhaps among the candidates, the fourth. Dan. Purcell was a wicked punster, and no less wicked composer. His right to the first title is recorded in Joe Miller, and to the second, in the score of his Judgment of Paris, which he printed, it should seem, to convince the world how righteously he had been judged. Indeed, he seems to have had little other merit than that of being brother to Henry Purcell, whose Music of all kinds was now in the highest favour throughout the kingdom.

In 1703, Mrs. Champion, the singer, performed a piece upon the harpsichord at her benefit in Lincoln's-Inn play-house; the first feat of the kind that was announced in the newspapers; and this year Mrs. Tofts, whose performance was afterwards so much admired in the first operas, sung several Italian and English songs at a subscription concert in the same theatre.

In 1704, Weldon's Judgment of Paris was brought on the stage at Drury-lane, in which Mrs. Tofts performed the part of Pallas. There was this year a benefit concert at York-buildings for Corbet, who was afterwards the leader at the opera. The singers at this concert were Mrs. Lindsey, and Messrs. Hudson, Hughs, and Laroon.

Margarita, who the preceding year had sung at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, began this year to sing, between the acts, at Drury-lane, songs composed by her master, Greber. And Godfried Pepusch, from Berlin, had a concert by seven young musicians whom he had brought over; the Music composed by John Christian Pepusch, his brother, afterwards Dr. Pepusch.

The first attempt at an opera in the Italian manner, was the most important musical event of the year 1705 (x). And to the account of the following year already given, nothing remains to be added, but the appearance of two new singers at Drury-lane, RAMONDON and HOLCOMB, who afterwards become considerable favourites. Holcomb, who had been brought up in Salisbury Cathedral, was called the boy, as long as his treble voice continued. He afterwards quitted the stage and taught singing, for which, by a constant attendance at the Italian opera, he qualified himself in a manner superior to most Englishmen of his time.

(x) See above, p. 198.

In the original edition of the Tatler, N^o 101, for September 29th, 1709, a performance of Music was advertised at Stationers-hall, for the benefit of Mr. Turner, consisting of songs for one, two, and three voices, besides several full-pieces of Music for trumpets, hautbois, violins, &c. by Mr. Dean, Mr. Manship, and others. But what renders this concert worth mentioning here, is, that in the advertisement a solo of the famous Arcangelo Corelli was promised to be performed by Mr. Dean. This is the first time that I have seen such a promise in the newspapers (y). Corelli's solos, though published at Rome in 1700, had not yet been printed in England.

About this time, the names of two foreign musicians, Pepusch and Galliard, appear so frequently in theatrical advertisements, that it seems necessary to give some account of them.

JOHN CHRISTOPHER PEPUSCH was born in 1667 at Berlin, and had made so great a progress in Music at the age of fourteen, that he was sent for to court, where he gave such proofs of his abilities that he was appointed to teach the prince, father of the late King of Prussia. He remained at Berlin till he was about twenty, when he went into Holland, where he first began to publish his compositions; but after continuing there about a year, he came to England soon after the Revolution. His first employment in London was playing the tenor in the band at Drury-lane play-house; but having convinced the managers that he deserved a better place, he was advanced to the harpsichord, about 1700. In 1707, he had acquired English sufficient to adapt Motteaux's translation of the Italian opera of Thomyris to airs of Scarlatti and Bononcini, and to new set the recitatives. In 1709 and 1710 several of his works were advertised in the first edition of the Tatlers, particularly a set of sonatas for a flute and base, and his first book of cantatas. In 1713, he obtained, at the same time as Crofts, the degree of doctor of Music at the university of Oxford. And soon after this, upon the establishment of a choral chapel at Cannons, he was employed by the Duke of Chandos, as maestro di

(y) The price of admission to this concert was 2s. 6d.

capella ;

capella; in which capacity he composed anthems and morning and evening services, which are still preserved in the Academy of Ancient Music. In 1715, he composed the masque of Venus and Adonis, written by Cibber; and in 1716 The Death of Dido, by Booth, both for Drury-lane. These pieces, though not very successful, were more frequently performed than any of his original dramatic compositions. In 1723, he published an ode for St. Cecilia's Day, which he had set for the concert in York-buildings. And about the year 1724, Dr. Berkeley, dean of Londonderry, afterwards bishop of Cloyne, having formed a plan for erecting a college in one of the Summer Isles, or Bermudas, among the several persons of distinguished abilities whom he had engaged to accompany him thither, fixed on Dr. Pepusch. But having embarked with his associates for the intended settlement, the ship was wrecked, and the undertaking frustrated.

Being returned to England after this accident, Dr. Pepusch married Margarita de l' Epine, who had quitted the stage, where she had acquired a fortune that was estimated at £. 10,000. These possessions however, did not incline the doctor to relax in his musical studies or pursuits. He had always been a diligent collector of ancient Music and musical tracts, and he was now enabled to gratify this passion without imprudence. He still continued to compose for the playhouse in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and had the Squire of Alsatia for his benefit there in 1726, "with singing by Mrs. Chambers, also singing in Italian and English by Mrs. Forsyth, Mrs. Davies, and Mrs. Grimaldi, being the first time of their respective appearances on the stage." Soon after, he was very judiciously chosen by Gay, to help him to select the tunes for the Beggar's Opera, for which he composed an original overture upon the subject of one of the tunes (I'm like a skiff), and furnished the wild, rude, and often vulgar melodies, with bases so excellent, than no sound contrapuntist will ever attempt to alter them.

After this period, he composed but little, applying himself chiefly to the theory of Music, and explaining the mysteries of composition to young professors. He had always been extremely anxious for the the prosperity of the Academy of Ancient Music, of which he was one of the first founders, and continued very active in its service to the time of his death. As a consequence of his musical erudition and zeal for the advancement of his art, he published in 1731, a correct edition of a short Treatise on Harmony, which the late Earl of Abercorn is supposed to have assisted him in putting into English (y). This work contains many elementary rules of composition that are practical and useful; but it likewise contains many prejudices and exploded doctrines, which, to revive, would shackle genius and throw the art back into Gothic times.

In 1737, he was appointed organist of the Charter-house, which afforded him a tranquil retreat well suited to his time of life and love of study; and here he was visited and consulted as an oracle, not only by young musical students, to whom he was always kind and communicative, but by every master who modestly supposed he had still something to learn (z). Here he greatly augmented his library, which consisted of musical curiosities, theoretical and practical, of all kinds.

In 1739, he lost a son, his only child, upon whose genius and disposition there was every reason to found the greatest expectations; and in 1740, Mrs. Pepusch died; after which, his time seems to have been chiefly devoted to the study of the genera and systems of the ancient Greek Music, concerning which he presented a paper to the Royal Society in 1746 (a), and was soon after elected a member of that learned body.

From this period till the year 1752, when he died at the age of eighty-five, he persisted in the study of Greek Music; and having dispatched the Genera, was trying to illustrate the doctrines and prejudices of Isaac Vossius concerning the Rhythmus of the

(y) This nobleman had so long studied composition under Dr. Pepusch, and so frequently conversed with him on the subject, that he was supposed more able to explain his principles in English than the doctor himself. The first edition of this small tract appeared without the plates or the consent of the author.

(z) In one of my visits to this venerable master, very early in my life, he gave me a short lesson which made so deep an impression, that I long endeavoured to practise it. "When I was a young man, said he, I determined never to go to bed at night, till I knew something that I did not know in the morning."

(a) No. 481. and Martin's Abridg. Vol. X.

ancients, but left no papers behind him on the subject, that were either useful or intelligible to those who had the possession of them after his decease.

This profound musician was buried in the chapel of the Charter-house, where a tablet was placed, and inscribed to his memory, by his friends and associates of the Academy of Ancient Music.

As a practical musician, though so excellent a harmonist, he was possessed of so little invention, that few of his compositions were ever in general use and favour, except one of his twelve cantatas, Alexis, and his airs for two flutes or violins, consisting of simple easy themes or grounds with variations, each part echoing the other in common divisions for the improvement of the hand. Indeed, though only one cantata of the two books he published was ever much noticed, there is considerable harmonical merit in them all; the recitatives are in general good, and the counterpoint perfectly correct and masterly. The fifth cantata of the second book seems much superior to the rest: the first air would admit of modern taste and expression, the harmony is rich, and the parts are well arranged; and the second air, with a trumpet accompaniment, is spirited, and if sung by a powerful and cultivated voice, would have a good effect. But these cantatas are by no means in the style of Alex. Scarlatti, as has been suggested; they rather resemble the cantatas of Gasparini, whose melodies were simple and modulation timid, than the original cantilena and extraneous modulation of Scarlatti. Among all the publications of Pepusch, the most useful to musical students was, perhaps, his correct edition of Corelli's Sonatas and Concertos in score, published in 1732.

He treated all other Music in which there was fancy or invention with sovereign contempt (b). Nor is it true, as has been asserted, that "he readily acquiesced in Handel's superior merit."

(b) About the year 1746, I was so fortunate, at the late Dr. Arne's, as to be introduced to his acquaintance, of which from his great reputation for science, I was very ambitious. The first time I had the honour to play to him, I ventured to attempt a very difficult lesson of Scarlatti; and when I had done, he both flattered and frightened me extremely, by saying: "pray young man play me that bagatelle again." What a great man must this be, thought I, who calls a lesson that has cost me such immense labour to execute, a bagatelle! But it was neither a fugue nor a canon.

Handel

Handel despised the pedantry of Pepusch, and Pepusch, in return, constantly refused to join in the general chorus of Handel's praise (c).

The sole ambition of Pepusch, during the last years of his life, seems to have been the obtaining the reputation of a profound theorist, perfectly skilled in the Music of the ancients; and attaching himself to the mathematician De Moivre and Geo. Lewis Scot, who helped him to calculate ratios and construe the Greek writers on Music, he bewildered himself and some of his scholars with the Greek genera, scales, diagrams, geometrical, arithmetical, and harmonical proportions, surd quantities, apotomes, lemmas, and every thing concerning ancient harmonics, that was dark, unintelligible, and foreign to common and useful practice (d). But with all his pedantry and ideal admiration of the Music of the ancients, he certainly had read more books on the theory of modern Music, and examined more curious compositions, than any of the musicians of his time; and though totally devoid of fancy and invention, he was able to correct the productions of his cotemporaries, and to assign reasons for whatever had been done by the greatest masters who preceded him. But when he is called the most learned musician of his time it should be said, in the Music of the sixteenth century. Indeed, he had at last such a partiality for musical mysteries, and a spirit so truly antiquarian, that he allowed no composition to be Music but what was old and obscure. Yet, though he fettered the genius of his scholars by antiquated rules, he knew the mechanical laws of harmony so well, that in glancing his eye over a score, he could by a stroke of his pen, smooth the wildest and most incoherent notes into melody, and make them submissive to harmony; instantly seeing the superfluous or deficient notes, and suggesting a base from which there was no appeal.

(c) After playing a lesson of Handel to him at the Charter-house, in the year 1747, I was sufficiently young and ignorant of the world, to ask him, how he liked that master's works? When all the answer I could obtain from him, to my silly question, was that he thought him "a good practical musician."

(d) In his attempts at calculation, the old French mathematician, De Moivre, used to call him a stupid German dog, who could neither count four, nor understand any one that did. And Mr. Scot, who helped him to construe the Greek theorists, used to say that he had very little Latin and less Greek; as I have been assured by Dr. Pepusch's scholar and friend, the late Sir John Turner, who had these opinions from De Moivre and Scot themselves.

His admirable library, the most curious and complete in scarce musical authors, theoretical and practical, was dispersed after his death. He bequeathed a considerable part of his best books and manuscripts to Kelner, an old German friend, who played the double-bass in the theatres and concerts of the time; some to Travers, and these and the rest were at last sold, dispersed, and embezzled, in a manner difficult to describe or understand.

JOHN ERNEST GALLIARD, a native of Zell, came over in the suite of Prince George of Denmark; his instrument was the haut-bois, which he played in public, perhaps for the last time, in accompanying Mrs. Barbier in a song at his benefit in Lincoln's-Inn Fields play-house, 1722. He seems to have studied our language on his arrival in this country with considerable diligence and success: for in 1712 he was chosen by Hughes to set his opera of Calypso & Telemachus, for the Queen's theatre in the Haymarket (e). And he afterwards not only composed cantatas written by Hughes and Congreve, but the Music of many entertainments and pantomimes for Lincoln's-Inn Fields and Covent-garden; and in 1742, published an admirable translation of Tosi's Art of Singing. But in 1709, it is not probable that he could have been the translator of Ragueneau's Parallele des Fran. et des Ital. as has been imagined, the English of which is even superior to that of the translation of Tosi. He was constantly attached to Rich, both at Lincoln's-Inn Fields and Covent-garden, and composed for no other theatres; though his hunting song in the Royal Chace: "With early horn," was long the delight of every play-house and public place in the kingdom. Beard and Lowe hardly ever appeared on the stage, without being called upon to sing it.

In 1728, he published, by subscription, his Music to the Hymn of Adam and Eve from Milton. This is extremely well set in the grave and learned style of his master Steffani. The recitative is still in the more ancient style of Italy, in which there are formal closes, terminated with a shake, instead of the more colloquial cadence of modern recitation. At his last benefit, in 1746, among his other compositions that were performed on the occasion, there was a piece for twenty-four bassoons and four double-bases ! This worthy musician, who died in 1749, was certainly an excellent contrapuntist ; but with respect to his compositions in general, I must say, that I never saw more correctness or less originality in any author that I have examined, of the present century, Dr. Pepusch always excepted.

(e) See above, p. 232.

The year 1714 was rendered an important period to the progress of the violin in this country, by the arrival of Geminiani and Veracini ; as the abilities of these masters confirmed the sovereignty of that instrument over all others, in our theatres and concerts. The compositions and performance of Nicola Mattei had polished and refined our ears, and made them fit and eager for the sonatas of Corelli ; and many of our young nobility and gentry who travelled to Italy during his life, were ambitious of hearing and taking lessons of this great master on the violin, which became so much in favour, that the English were said to have stripped Italy, not only of many of its best pictures and statues, but of all its valuable violins. And the favourite instrument upon which Corelli himself had played, was brought hither soon after his death by Corbet, an Englishman, and remained many years in the possession of a gentleman at Newcastle, at whose decease it was purchased by the late Mr. Avison for Giardini, whose property it still continues.

VERACINI, who was now regarded as the greatest violinist in Europe (f), performed symphonies between the acts, at the opera, immediately after his arrival, and in April had a benefit concert at Hickford's room. His compositions, however, were too wild and flighty for the taste of the English at this time, when they regarded the sonatas of Corelli as models of simplicity, grace, and elegance in melody, and of correctness and purity in harmony. Indeed, no instrumental Music was heard with equal delight by the ignorant and the learned, or imitated more closely by subsequent composers for violins. His solos and concertos still extended his fame, and were thought inimitable, till the arrival of Geminiani, who though (f) See Vol. III. p. 567.

Corelli had been one of his masters, and of whom he always spoke with reverence, yet, gifted with a more powerful hand, a bolder modulation, and a less symmetric style, he intrepidly stepped forth and convinced the musical world that Corelli had left his disciples a demesne that was still capable of higher cultivation and improvement. And as we are greatly indebted to this master for the improved state of the violin before the arrival of Giardini in this country, and indeed for the advancement of instrumental Music in general, during the early part of this century, we must here stop and pay our respects to him.

FRANCESCO GEMINIANI, a native of Lucca, was born about the year 1666. He received his first instructions on the violin of Carlo Ambrogio Lonati, of Milan, commonly called Il Gobbo, a celebrated performer on that instrument, who set the opera of Ariberto & Flavio, for Venice, in 1684. After this, he studied counterpoint under Ales. Scarlatti at Rome, where he became a disciple of Corelli on the violin; and having finished his studies there, he went to Naples, where from the reputation of his performance at Rome, he was placed at the head of the orchestra; but, according to the elder Barbella, he was soon discovered to be so wild and unsteady a timist, that instead of regulating and conducting the band, he threw it into confusion; as none of the performers were able to follow him in his tempo rubato, and other unexpected accelerations and relaxations of measure. After this discovery, the younger Barbella assured me, that his father, who well remembered his arrival at Naples, said he was never trusted with a better part than the tenor, during his residence in that city.

In 1716, he published in London his first work, dedicated to Baron Kilmansegge, consisting of Twelve Solos for the Violin (g), which though few could play, yet all the professors allowed them to be still more masterly and elaborate than those of Corelli. In 1726, he formed Corelli's first six solos into concertos, and soon

(g) These seem to have been previously published at Amsterdam, by Le Cene, of which edition I am in possession of a copy, beautifully engraved on copper.

after, the last six. He likewise selected six of his sonatas for the same purpose, and imitating his style in composing additional parts to them, manifested how much he respected the originals. It was not till the year 1732 that Geminiani published his first six concertos, which he called his Opera seconda, and dedicated to the Duchess of Marlborough. Soon after this, his Opera terza, or second set of concertos, appeared, which established his character, and placed him at the head of all the masters then living, in this species of composition.

His second set of solos, commonly called his French solos, either from their style or their having been composed and engraved in France, was published in 1739. These were admired more than played; as about this time it became more than ever the fashion for public solo-players to perform only their own compositions, and others were unable to execute them. His third set of concertos, which appeared about the year 1741, was so laboured, difficult, and fantastical, as never to be played, to my knowledge, in either public place or private concert.

His long-promised work, with the title of Guida Armonica, published in 1742, appeared too late; for though there are many combinations, modulations, and cadences, that would open the mind and enrich the memory of a young student in harmony, he promised too much (b); and his authority in the kingdom was diminished by new Music and new performers, as well as by his own frequent change of sentiment: setting up at one time as a model of perfection, what he would despise and condemn at another.

His Treatise on Good Taste, and Rules for Playing in Good Taste, did not appear till about 1747; but that was too soon for the present times. Indeed a treatise on good taste in dress, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, would now be as useful to a tailor or millener, as the rules of taste in Music, forty years ago, to a modern musician.

(b) The original title runs thus: "Guida Armonica o Dizionario Armonico, being a sure guide to harmony and modulation, in which are exhibited the various combinations of sounds, progressions of harmony, ligatures, and cadences, real and deceptive." It was a kind of mill, in which good Music was to be ground with little trouble and no genius; as good sense and science by the Laputan machine, in Gulliver's Travels.

In 1748, he published his Art of Playing the Violin, which was a very useful work in its day; the shifts and examples of different difficulties, and uses of the bow, being infinitely superior to those in any other book of the kind, or indeed oral instruction, which the nation could boast, till the arrival of Giardini (i).

His composition called the Enchanted Forest, in which he endeavoured by mere sound to represent to the imagination of an audience all the events in the episode of the thirteenth book of Tasso's Jerusalem, was published about 1756; but Music has never had the power, without vocal articulation, to narrate, or instruct; it can excite, paint, and soothe our passions; but is utterly incapable of reasoning, or conversing, to any reasonable purpose (k).

Besides these practical and theoretical works, he published two books of Harpsichord Pieces, that are rendered impracticable by crowded harmony and multiplied notes; and two books upon the Art of Accompaniment, which are only intelligible to those who no longer want such assistance; and if practised, would be intolerable to fingers and solo-players, who wish to be heard through the tinkling of a harpsichord.

Geminiani was seldom heard in public during his long residence in England. His compositions, scholars, and the presents he received from the great, whenever he could be prevailed upon to play at their houses, were his chief support. In 1731, he advertised a Weekly Consort of Musick, to be carried on at Hickford's room, by subscription, and at which he played the first violin himself (l). In 1741, he had a benefit concert at the little theatre in the Haymarket, by command of their Royal Highnesses the late Prince

(i) Geminiani, however, was certainly mistaken in laying it down as a rule, that "no two notes on the same string, in shifting, should be played with the same finger;" as beautiful expressions and effects are produced by great players, in shifting, suddenly, from a low note to a high, with the same finger on the same string.

(k) That truly great musician, Emanuel Bach, some years ago, attempted, in a duet, to carry on a disputation between two persons of different principles; but with all his powers of invention, melody, and modulation, the opinions of the disputants remained as obscure and unintelligible, as the warbling of larks and linnets.

(l) This concert was advertised to be carried on the next year by Arrigoni and San Martini, "in the same manner as by Signor Geminiani, who had declined the undertaking; the first violin by Signor Carbonelli."

and Princess of Wales. And in 1749, a Concerto Spirituale, during Lent, at Drury-lane theatre; in which he led the band, and played a concerto, from the fifth solo of his fourth opera, and the tenth solo of the same set. The unsteady manner in which he led seemed to confirm the Neapolitan account of his being a bad mental arithmetician, or calculator of time (m). After this, he went to Paris, where he continued till 1755, when he returned to England, and published a new edition of his two first sets of concertos (n). In 1761, he went to Ireland, to visit his scholar Dubourg, master of the King's band in that kingdom, who always treated him with great respect and affection. It is supposed that his death was accelerated there the next year, by the loss of an elaborate Treatise on Music, which he had been many years compiling, and which, by the treachery of a female servant, was conveyed out of his room, and could never be recovered. Surviving this loss but a short time, he died at Dublin, September 17th, 1762, at the great age of ninety-six.

Geminiani, with all his harmonical abilities, was so circumscribed in his invention, that he was obliged to have recourse to all the arts of musical cookery, not to call it quackery, for materials to publish. In his younger days, when imagination is most fertile, sixteen years elapsed between the publication of his first book of solos and his first six concertos. Indeed, during that period, he achieved what a plodding contrapuntist of inferior abilities might have done as well: he transformed Corelli's solos and six of his sonatas into concertos, by multiplying notes, and loading, and deforming, I think, those melodies, that were more graceful and pleasing in their light original dress. After the publication of his second set of solos, his productions seem to have been the offspring of whim, caprice, expedients, and an unprincipled change of style

(m) I was present at this performance, but remember nothing of the band being obliged to stop in the middle of a piece, as has been said. There was part of a very fine mass, by Negri, performed; which, with all the inaccuracy of execution, which the want of more rehearsing occasioned, was much applauded.

(n) This edition was prepared from a score which I had made for my own improvement, and of which, upon Geminiani complaining, in 1750, that he had lost his original, I was much flattered by his acceptance.

and

and taste, which neither pleased the public, nor contributed to his own honour or profit. One day he would set up French Music against all other; the next English, Scots, Irish—any thing but the best compositions of Italy or Handel. It is well known how much he preferred the character of a picture-dealer, without the necessary knowledge or taste in painting, as very good judges asserted, to that of a composer of Music, by which he had subsisted and acquired all his fame and importance. It is to be feared that a propensity towards chicane and cunning, which gratifies some dispositions more by outwitting mankind, than excelling them in virtue and talents, operated a little upon Geminiani; whose musical decisions ceasing to be irrevocable in England, determined him to try his hand at buying cheap and selling dear; imposing upon grosser ignorance with false names, and passing off copies for originals. As a musician, he was certainly a great master of harmony, and very useful to our country in his day; but though he had more variety of modulation, and more skill in diversifying his parts than Corelli, his melody was even inferior, and there is frequently an irregularity in his measures and phraseology, and a confusion in the effect of the whole, from the too great business and dissimilitude of the several parts, which gives to each of his compositions the effect of a rhapsody or extemporaneous flight, rather than a polished and regular production (o).

In 1715, Mr. MATTHEW DUBOURG, had a benefit concert at twelve years old, at the great room in James-street (p); and the same year, and at the same place, a benefit concert is advertised for Signor CASTRUCCI, lately come from Italy with the Earl of Burlington; this was the beginning of two performers who afterwards became very eminent professors.

From the year 1717 to 1720, there were no Italian operas at the King's theatre; and at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and Drury-lane, the attempts at musical dramas in English were but feeble, and (o) His sixth concerto of the second set is always to be excepted, which is the most pleasing and perfect composition of the kind, within my knowledge.

(p) He is said to have played, standing upon a joint-stool, a solo, at Birton the small-coal man's concert, much earlier

their

their success seems to have been proportioned to their merit. At this time French Comedies, in the Italian manner, were performed in the Hay-market very peaceably, and very frequently honoured with the presence of his Majesty George I. and the Royal Family; it was at these that Mademoiselle Violante performed her feats on the rope.

In 1720, the year in which the Royal Academy of Music was formed, and operas were supported with unusual liberality and splendor, there seem to have been more musical performances elsewhere, than at any other period. In the Daily Courant, the only vehicle at this time for such intelligence, the following exhibitions were announced: February 2d, a benefit play for Mrs. Turner Robinson, at Drury-lane, with new entertainments of singing between every act. The 10th, a consort for Signor Castrucci, at York-buildings, in which he played several concertos and solos of his own composition. 15th, a consort of vocal and instrumental Music, at ditto, for the benefit of Mrs. Dennis, the vocal by herself, who before had never performed in public. 23d, a consort at Hickford's room in James-street near the Hay-market, for the benefit of William Douglass, commonly called the Black Prince; singing by Mrs. Fletcher; solo and concerto by Mr. Dubourg; solo and concerto by Mr. Kytch on the German-flute and hautbois. 27th, a consort for Mr. Dubourg. April 8th, during Lent, the same performer had a consort at Drury-lane play-house, in which he played several concertos and solos of his own composition. May 21st, at the desire of several gentlemen and ladies, Mr. Grano performed on the trumpet and German-flute (p). May 31st, a consort for Mr. Aubert. June 16th another, at Hickford's room, for Castrucci, the first violin of the opera (q). September 1st, a benefit consort, at ditto, for Signor Francesco Scarlatti, brother of the famous Alessandro Scarlatti, in which the greatest part of the (p) This was a kind of mungrel dilettante, who during many years condescended to make concerts and give lessons, en professeur, always insinuating that it was merely for the pleasure of amusing the public and instructing individuals. Grano's trumpet march was long used by the guards.

(q) Till the year 1715, this station had been occupied by Corbet, an Englishman, who had been in Italy during the life of Corelli, and returned thither a second time, when he quitted the opera.

Music was of his own composition. A sermon is advertised that was preached in the cathedral of Hereford, at the anniversary meeting of the three choirs of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford, September 7th. And at the annual feast of the sons of the clergy December 8th, Purcell's Te Deum and Jubilate, with an anthem composed by Mr. Greene, were vocally and instrumentally performed at St. Paul's.

This will give the reader an idea of the miscellaneous performances and general state of practical Music in our country, to which I shall only add a short record of the first appearance of such new performers as afterwards became eminent, and of such exhibitions as were remarkable for their singularity.

In 1722, a new species of entertainment was advertised at the Opera-house, called a Ridotto: "it was opened with twenty-four select songs, which lasted about two hours; after which the company passed over a bridge, from the pit to the stage, where a duke and duchess led up the ball: the hours were the same as at a masquerade (r)." The songs were selected from the late operas, and performed by Senesino, Baldassarri, Mrs. Anastasia Robinson, and Salvai.

This and the preceding year Mrs. Sarah Ottey frequently performs solos at concerts on three several instruments: harpsichord, base-viol, and violin.

In February, there was a benefit concert for Mr. Thomson, the first editor of a collection of Scots tunes in England. To this collection, for which there was a very large subscription, may be ascribed the subsequent favour of these national melodies, south of the Tweed. After this concert, "at the desire of several persons of quality, was performed a Scottish song."

In Castrucci's advertisement for his benefit concert this year, in which he styles himself first violin of the opera, he promises a particular concerto with an echo; adding that, "as he has for the space of six years had the honour to serve the English nobility, he hopes they will favour him this last time, being to return the ensuing summer to Rome, his native country."

(r) Freeholder's Journal, February 14th.

CARBONELLI, who had not been long in England, had this year for his benefit at Drury-lane, and at play-house prices, "an entertainment of Music," in which he seems to have mustered all the forces which London could then supply, that were not employed in the opera. The bill of fare is so minutely given in the advertisement, that I shall transcribe it from the Daily Courant, as an instance of the musical dainties then in season. Act I. A new concerto for two trumpets; composed and performed by Grano and others; a new concerto by Albinoni, just brought over; song by Mrs. Barbier; concerto composed by Signor Carbonelli. Act II. A concerto with two hautbois and two flutes, composed by Dieupart; a concerto on the base-violin by Pippo; song, Mrs. Barbier; by desire, the eighth concerto of Arcangelo Corelli. Act III. Concerto by Carbonelli; solo on the arch-lute by Signor Vebar; song, Mrs. Barbier; a new concerto on the little flute, composed by Woodcock, and performed by Baston; solo, Signor Carbonelli; and for finale, a concerto on two trumpets by Grano, &c. (s).

WILLIAM BABEL, organist of Allhallows, Bread-street, seems to have been the first, in this country at least, who thinned, simplified, and divested the Music of keyed-instruments of the crowded and complicated harmony, with which, from the convenience of the clavier, and passion for full and elaborate Music, it had been embarrassed from its earliest cultivation. This author acquired great celebrity by wire-drawing the favourite songs of the opera of Rinaldo, and others of the same period, into showy and brilliant lessons, which by mere rapidity of finger in playing single sounds, without the assistance of taste, expression, harmony, or modulation, enabled the performer to astonish ignorance, and acquire the reputation of a great player at a small expence. There is no instrument so favourable to such frothy and unmeaning Music as the

(s) This performer frequently played solos on the trumpet, German-flute, and common-flute, the same night; as the young Burke Thumoth did, soon after, on the trumpet, flute, and harpsichord.

harpsichord. Arpeggios, which lie under the fingers, and running up and down the scales of easy keys with velocity, are not difficult, on an instrument of which neither the tone nor tuning depends on the player; as neither his breath nor bow-hand is requisite to give existence or sweetness to its sounds. And Mr. Babel by avoiding its chief difficulties of full harmony, and dissimilar motion of the parts, at once gratified idleness and vanity. I remember well in the early part of my life being a dupe to the glare and glitter of this kind of tinsel; this poussiere dans les yeux, which Mr. Felton continued, and other dealers in notes, et rien que des notes, till Jozzi, the singer, by his neat and elegant manner of executing the brilliant, graceful, and pleasing lessons of Alberti, rendered them the objects of imitation. At length, on the arrival of the late Mr. Bach, and construction of piano-fortes in this country, the performers on keyed-instruments were obliged wholly to change their ground; and instead of surprising by the seeming labour and dexterity of execution, had the real and more useful difficulties of taste, expression, and light and shade, to encounter. Babel, who was one of his Majesty George the First's private Music, died about the year 1722.

The most memorable musical events of 1723, were the arrival of the admirable GIUSEPPE SAN MARTINI, whose performance on the hautbois and compositions were, afterwards, so justly celebrated; and of JOHN CLEGG, no less remarkable for his early excellence on the violin, and insanity.

Martini's first public performance in England was at a benefit concert for Signor Piero, at the little theatre in the Haymarket, where he is called "an Italian master just arrived." A concert at the same place was advertised soon after, "by particular desire of several ladies of quality, for the benefit of John Clegg, a youth of nine years of age, lately arrived from Ireland, with several solos and concertos by the youth; particularly a concerto of Vivaldi. The principal violin by the youth."

In 1724, MICH. CHRIST. FESTING performs a concerto and solo of his own composition, at a benefit concert for Prince Douglas, which is the first time his name occurs in the newspapers.

In March this year, Corbett, the first leader of the opera, being returned from Italy a second time, advertises by subscription at the little theatre in the Haymarket, "an entertainment of Music, with variety of new concertos for violins, hautbois, trumpets, German-flutes, and French-horns; with several pieces by Mr. Corbett on a particular new instrument never heard in England."

This year were published three cantatas by Geo. Hayden, organist of Bermondsey, which were long in great favour with the lovers of pure English Music. And, indeed, they seem the best which had been produced since Purcell's time. His two-part song: "As I saw fair Clora," and several other single songs by this obscure musician, enjoyed a lasting fame at clubs and festive meetings.

These are the chief musical transactions, exclusive of the Opera, till the accession of King George II. 1727, when the public was informed in the newspapers of the times, that the famous Mr. Handel was appointed to compose the anthem for the coronation. October the 6th, it was rehearsed at Westminster-Abbey, and justly admired.

San Martini's first publication in England was advertised the same day; consisting of "Twelve Sonatas for two Flutes and a Base, being exceeding fine Harmony."

The Beggar's Opera, which came out the latter end of this year, forms a memorable epoch in our national Music: for though not a single new air was composed for this pasticcio in our vulgar tongue, it has proved the best opera to the patentees of our play-houses that ever was brought on the stage. The morality and the Music are equally intelligible and acceptable to the galleries; and a favourite singer can always fill the rest of the house.

In 1728, MATTHEW DUBOURG, whose performance and conduct had acquired him many friends, was appointed composer and master of the Majesty's band of Music in Ireland (1). This excellent performer, born in 1703, was the natural son of the celebrated

(1) It has been said that this place was offered to Geminiani, who could not accept of it on account of his being a Roman Catholic.

dancing-master Isaac, and had instructions from Geminiani soon after his arrival in England. He resided several years in Ireland after his first appointment; but from the year 1735, when he was taken into the service of the late prince of Wales, he frequently visited England. I saw him at Chester in 1744, and had the pleasure of accompanying him in the fifth solo of Corelli, which he performed in a manner so superior to any one I had then heard, that I was equally astonished and delighted; particularly with the fulness of his tone and spirit of his execution.

It has been erroneously said, that Dubourg was no composer; he was indeed no publisher, but the odes which he set for Ireland, and innumerable solos and concertos which he composed for his own public performance, are now in the possession of one of his disciples, and of some of them the composition is excellent. Dubourg died in London 1767 (x).

Corbett advertises an entertainment of Music, at Hickford's room, in which he was to take leave of the public, by performing his new Bizzarie, which were then printing by subscription, "in all the new gustos of Italy, for all instruments, and places where Music is proper." Soon after this, he advertised for sale, the prices marked on each lot, "his curious study of Music—instruments of all sorts—Stainers, Cremona violins and basses, with the four celebrated violins of Corelli, Gobbo, Torelli, and Nic. Cosimi, deceased, till all are sold, he intending to retire." Though we hear no more of this musician's public performance; yet, in March 1741, he advertises another sale of curious compositions and musical instruments, together with his collection of pictures. Whether purchasers were not found for these effects, or whether he still continued collecting, at his decease, a few years after, he bequeathed to Gresham College the best of his musical instruments, with £.10 a year to a servant to take care of them; and likewise gave to the same college the rest of his personal estate. The views

(x) The late Mr. Redmond Simpson, who married the daughter of Dubourg, had an excellent portrait of him, and another of his father Isaac.

of this worthy professor were, however, frustrated, by the sale and dispersion of his musical instruments and curiosities, which soon after the testator's decease were sold by auction at Mercer's Hall and at his house in Silver-street, Golden-square.

Among the musical phenomena of the time may be mentioned a singular performance of a certain Joachim Frederic Creta, who being in London in 1729, at several concerts "blew the first and second treble on two French-horns, in the same manner as is usually done by two persons." We may set this against the double flutes, the tibiae pares, et impares of antiquity, which however, though long lost, have been lately revived by the musical knowledge and ingenuity of Mr. Sharp.

Another phenomenon of this year was the performance on the harpsichord of little Kuntzen, "a youth of seven years old, just arrived from Germany." This young musician remained in England many years, and continued to improve in proportion to the expectations raised by his early talents. He published before his departure for Lubeck, where his father was organist, a book of lessons which required genius to compose, and hand to execute.

In 1730, Miss RAFTER, afterwards the celebrated Mrs. CLIVE, first appeared on the stage, at Drury-lane, as a singer, at the benefit of HARRY CAREY, who seems to have been her singing-master. The manner in which this benefit was announced in the Daily Post, December 3d, is so singular that I shall transcribe the paragraph for the amusement of my readers. After naming the play, which was Greenwich Park, and the additional entertainments of singing: particularly a dialogue of Purcell by Mr. Carey and Miss Rafter, and a cantata of Mr. Carey's by Miss Rafter, there is an apology from Carey, for the tragedy of half an act not being performed (y); but a promise is made of indemnification by the entertainments between the acts. The editor of the paper then adds: "but at our friend Harry Carey's benefit to-night, the powers of (y) Meaning Chronophotontologos, which was not acted till 1734.

Music, poetry, and painting, assemble in his behalf, he being an admirer of the three sister arts: the body of musicians meet in the Haymarket, whence they march in great order, preceded by a magnificent moving organ, in form of a pageant, accompanied by all the kinds of musical instruments ever in use, from Tubal Cain to this day: a great multitude of booksellers, authors, and printers, form themselves into a body at Temple-bar, whence they march with great decency to Covent-garden, preceded by a little army of printer's devils, with their proper instruments: here the two bodies of Music and poetry are joined by the brothers of the pencil; when, after taking some refreshment at the Bedford Arms, they march in solemn procession to the theatre, amidst an innumerable crowd of spectators."

Poetry and Music, in high antiquity, formed but one profession, and many have been the lamentations of the learned that these sister arts were ever separated. Honest Harry Carey and Jean Jaques Rousseau are the only bards in modern times who have had the address to reconcile and unite them. The Honest Yorkshireman of Carey and the Devin du Village of Rousseau are indisputable proofs that popular strains, at least, if not learned and elegant Music, may be produced by the writer of a dramatic poem. Carey, without musical learning, invented many very pleasing and natural melodies, which neither obscured the sense of the words, nor required much science to hear. But either from the ambition of the singer, or expectations of the audience, Music is not suffered to remain simple long upon the stage; and the more plain and ancient the melodies, the more they are to be embellished by every new performer of them. The tunes in the Beggar's Opera will never appear in their original simple garb again.

This year Miss CÆCILIA YOUNG, a scholar of Signor Geminiani, who now sung in public for the first time, had a benefit concert at Drury-lane play-house, pit and boxes laid together at half a guinea. This lady, afterwards the wife of Dr. Arne, with a good natural voice and fine shake, had been so well taught, that her style of fingering was infinitely superior to that of any other English woman of her time.
her

A paragraph inserted in the London Journal from Dublin, December 11th, celebrates the performance of young Clegg and his sister at a concert. They are called scholars of Bononcini. But the Music he played on the violin was said to be of his own composition. His sister's performance was vocal.

As the Italian opera when prosperous gave birth to several English operas, after the Italian manner, so the prodigious success of the Beggar's Opera produced innumerable musical dramas and ballad farces of the same kind. In 1731, the Village Opera, written by Charles Johnson, consisting of new words to old tunes, was first performed, and seems to have been well received. It was afterwards imitated by Bickerstaff in Love in a Village.

But the favourite dramas of this year were George Barnwell, and the Devil to Pay. In this farce Miss Rafter first acquired celebrity, and after she was Mrs. Clive, to the end of her theatrical life, she never received more applause, or earned it better in any part she acted, than in that of Nell. Her singing, which was intolerable when she meant it to be fine, in ballad farces and songs of humour was, like her comic acting, every thing it should be.

The favourite musicians of our own country at this time were Dubourg, Clegg, Clarke, and Festing, on the violin; Kytch on the hautbois; Jack Festing on the German-flute; Baston on the common-flute; Karba on the bassoon; Valentine Snow on the trumpet; and on the organ, Roseingrave, Greene, Robinson, Magnus, Jack James, and the young blind Stanley, who whenever there was a charity sermon, or new organ to be opened, seems to have been preferred to all others. The favourite play-house singer was Salway, and at concerts, Mountier from Chichester.

As to composition for our national theatres, Pepusch and Galliard seem to have been wholly unrivalled till the year 1732, when new attempts at musical dramas in our own language brought forward two competitors, who were long in possession of the public favour.

favour. These were JOHN FREDERIC LAMPE, and THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE. Lampe, a Saxon, who arrived in England about the year 1726, now first began to be noticed as a composer. February the 25th, the following paragraph was inserted in the Daily Post: "We hear that there is a subscription for a new English opera called Amelia, which will shortly be performed at the new theatre in the Haymarket, by a set of performers who never yet appeared in public." This opera, written by Harry Carey, was first performed March 13th, 1732, in the principal character of which, Miss ARNE, afterwards so celebrated as a tragic actress by the name of Mrs. CIBBER, first appeared on the stage, as a singer. The Music which, according to the advertisement, was "set in the Italian manner," having been much applauded, was soon avowed by Lampe, and Miss Arne's performance interested every hearer.

The success of this opera probably suggested to her brother the idea of a similar attempt. But before an account is given of this performance, it may be necessary to say something of his musical education.

THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE was the son of Arne the celebrated upholsterer, of King's-street, Covent-garden, at whose house the Indian Kings lodged in the reign of Queen Anne, as mentioned in the Spectator, N^o 50. Arne had a good school education, having been sent to Eton by his father, who intended him for the law. But I have been assured by several of his school-fellows, that his love for Music operated upon him too powerfully, even while he was at Eton, for his own peace or that of his companions; for with a miserable cracked common-flute, he used to torment them night and day, when not obliged to attend the school. And he told me himself, that when he left Eton, such was his passion for Music, that he used to avail himself of the privilege of a servant, by borrowing a livery and going into the upper gallery of the opera, which was then appropriated to domestics. At home he had contrived to secrete a spinet in his room, upon which, after muffling the strings with a handkerchief, he used to practise in the night while the rest of the family were asleep; for had his father discovered how he spent his time, he would, probably, have thrown the instrument out of the window, if not the player. This young votary of Apollo was at length obliged to serve a three years clerkship to the law, without ever intending to make it his profession; but even during this servitude, he dedicated every moment he could obtain fairly, or otherwise, to the study of Music. Besides practising on the spinet and studying composition, by himself, he contrived during, his clerkship, to acquire some instructions on the violin, of Festing, upon which instrument he had made so considerable a progress, that soon after he had quitted his legal master, his father accidentally calling at a gentleman's house in the neighbourhood, upon business, found him engaged with company; but sending in his name, he was invited up stairs, where there was a large company and a concert, in which, to his great astonishment, he caught his son in the very act of playing the first fiddle! Finding him more admired for his musical talents than knowledge in the law, he was soon prevailed upon to forgive his unruly passion, and to let him try to turn it to some account. No sooner was the young musician able to practise aloud in his father's house, than he bewitched the whole family. In discovering that his sister was not only fond of Music, but had a very sweet-toned and touching voice, he gave her such instructions as soon enabled her to sing for Lampe, in his opera of Amelia. And finding her so well received in that performance, he soon prepared a new character for her, by setting Addison's opera of Rosamond, in which he employed his younger brother likewise in the character of the Page. This musical drama was first performed March 7th, 1733, at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, where Mrs. Barbier performed the part of the King; Leveridge, Sir Trusty; Page, Master Arne, who had never appeared in public; Messenger, Mr. Corfe; Queen, Mrs. Jones; Grideline, Miss Chambers, and the part of Rosamond by Miss Arne. The opera was performed ten nights successively, and with great applause; the last time, for the benefit of Mr. Arne, jun. the composer. Having succeeded so well in a serious opera, our young musician tried his powers at a burletta, and fixed upon Fielding's Tom Thumb for that purpose, which which under the title of the Tragedy of Tragedies having met with great success in 1731, he now got it transformed into the Opera of Operas, and setting it to Music, "after the Italian manner," had it performed May 31st, at the new theatre in the Hay-market; the part of Tom Thumb by Master Arne, his brother. Princess Amelia and the Duke of Cumberland honoured the second representation with their presence; the prince of Wales, the sixth; the youngest princesses, the eighth; and afterwards it had a considerable run.

Besides Lampe and Arne, there were at this time other candidates for musical fame of the same kind; among these were Mr. John Christ. Smith, who set two English operas for Lincoln's-Inn Fields: Teraminta, and Ulysses; and De Fesch, the oratorio of Judith.

But though the solid and general food for lovers of Music was such as Corelli, Geminiani, and Handel had furnished, yet side-dishes were frequently supplied by others; and in 1733 Mr. Walsh, the purveyor general, offered to performers on the violin, solos by Tartini, De Santis of Naples, Berati, and De Fesch; and to German-flute players, solos by Bononcini, Quantz, Valentini, and Tassarini.

There was no concert now without a solo on the violin by Veracini, or Clegg, nor play at Drury-lane without a concerto on the same instrument by Charke (z). In 1735, CAPORALE, the celebrated performer on the violoncello, arrived in England; and though no deep musician, nor gifted with a very powerful hand, he was always heard with great partiality, from the almost single merit, of a full, sweet, and vocal tone.

In 1736, Mrs. Cibber, who had captivated every hearer of sensibility by her native sweetness of voice and powers of expression, as a singer, first appeared as a tragic actress, in the part of Zara at Drury-lane, where her brother was engaged as composer; and it is difficult to say which of the two received the greatest applause, the actress for her truly interesting person and pathetic voice and manner, or the musician for his natural and pleasing strains, particularly the march, which was encored every night.

(z) Charke was a dancing-master, an actor, parts, and merit, as an actress; but there was nothing in which this ingenious pair exercised their talents more successfully, than in mutually plaguing each other.

This year Mr. BEARD, who had his musical education in the Chapel Royal, first appeared on the stage at Covent-garden, in the dramatic entertainment of the Royal Chace, or Merlin's Cave, and instantly became a favourite of the town, by the performance of Galliard's most agreeable of all hunting songs, "With early horn." And about this time the three Miss Youngs were the favourite English female singers: Cæcilia the eldest, afterwards married to Arne; Isabella, to Lampe; and Esther, to Jones (a). Kelway this year succeeded Weldon as organist of St. Martin's in the Fields; and Keeble of Chichester, and Gladwin, began to distinguish themselves as harpsichord players.

The year 1737 was rendered memorable at Covent-garden theatre by the success of the burlesque opera of the Dragon of Wantley, written by Carey, and set by Lampe, "after the Italian manner." This excellent piece of humour had run twenty-two nights, when it was stopped, with all other public amusements, by the death of her Majesty Queen Caroline, November 20th, but was resumed again on the opening of the theatres in January following, and supported as many representations as the Beggar's Opera had done, ten years before. And if Gay's original intention in writing his musical drama was to ridicule the opera, the execution of his plan was not so happy as that of Carey; in which the mock heroic, tuneful monster, recitative, splendid habits, and style of Music, all conspired to remind the audience of what they had seen and heard at the lyric theatre, more effectually than the most vulgar street tunes could do; and much more innocently than the tricks and transactions of the most abandoned thieves and prostitutes. Lampe's Music to this farcical drama, was not only excellent fifty years ago, but is still modern and in good taste.

About the year 1737, poor Castrucci, Hogarth's enraged musi-

(a) These sisters are all still living.

cian,

cian, was superseded at the Opera-house in favour of Festing, not Clegg, as has been said (b). He had published two books of solos before; and in 1738, he published twelve concertos for violins. He was long thought insane; but though his compositions were too mad for his own age, they are too sober for the present. Among many passages of Corelli and Handel, there are several of his own, which discover him to have been a man of genius, well acquainted with the bow and finger-board of his instrument.

Clegg, by the account of cotemporary professors, seems to have been superior to all performers on the violin in tone and execution, till about the year 1742, when he had so deranged his faculties by intense study and practice, that he was confined in the hospital of Bedlam; where, during intervals of sanity, he was allowed the use of his instrument; and it was long a fashionable, though inhuman amusement, to visit him there, among other lunatics, in hopes of being entertained by his fiddle or his folly!

In 1738, Arne established his reputation as a lyric composer, by the admirable manner in which he set Milton's Comus. In this masque he introduced a light, airy, original, and pleasing melody, wholly different from that of Purcell or Handel, whom all English composers had hitherto either pillaged or imitated. Indeed, the melody of Arne at this time, and of his Vauxhall songs afterwards, forms an æra in English Music; it was so easy, natural, and agreeable to the whole kingdom, that it had an effect upon our national taste; and till a more modern Italian style was introduced in the pasticcio English operas of Messrs. Bickerstaff and Cumberland, it was the standard of all perfection at our theatres and public gardens.

This year the first meeting was advertised in the London Daily Post and General Advertiser, of "the subscribers to a FUND for the support of decayed musicians and their families, at the Crown

(b) Castrucci had such an antipathy to the very name of Festing, that in his most lucid intervals, he instantly lost his temper, if not his reason, on hearing it pronounced. A gentleman, now living, used in polifon- nerie, to address him in conversation, by the name of his rival: "Mr. Festing—I beg your pardon; Mr. Castrucci, I mean," which put him in as great a rage as Hogarth's street musician's on May-day.

and Anchor tavern in the Strand, on Sunday evening, April 19th, at seven o'clock." Another meeting was convened at the same place, May 7th, when the fourteen laws or resolutions, which are still in force, were framed.

In tracing the origin and progress of this admirable institution, which has been since imitated not only at our theatres and at Vienna, as well as in other parts of Europe, but honoured with their Majesties gracious patronage and protection, it appears that Handel, whose works have always been its chief support, performed himself at the first benefit in 1739; when Alexander's Feast was given with several concertos on the organ and other instruments, "particularly a new concerto composed by Mr. Handel on purpose for this occasion (c)."

A concert was this year established at Hickford's room in Brewers-street, which continued, with Festing for leader, till the time of his death. The elder CERVETTO is now first mentioned as just arrived; and this worthy professor, who remained in England till the time of his death, at above a hundred, with Abaco, Lanzetti, Pasqualini, and Caporale, about this time, brought the violoncello into favour, and made us nice judges of that instrument.

About this time, likewise, the city concerts at the Castle and Swan taverns were established, of which Stanley was the chief support and director during many years.

In 1740, March 28th, Handel, though never nearer ruin himself, benevolently gave Acis and Galatea, with his own performance of two new concertos, at Lincoln's-Inn Fields, for the benefit of the Musical Fund. And in 1741, he bestowed on the same charity the performance of his serenata called Parnasso in Festa; in which were introduced concertos and solos, on the hautbois by San Martini, on the German-flute by Wiedeman, on the violin by Clegg, on the bassoon by Miller, and on the violoncello by Caporale.

(c) Daily Post, March 20th, where it is said that Mr. Handel not only gave the house and his performance gratis, but Mr.

Heidegger made a present of £. 20 to defray the other incidental expences.

In the autumn of this year, Handel went to Ireland. I have taken considerable pains to obtain a minute and accurate account of the musical transactions of the great musician, during his residence in that kingdom; and in a particular manner tried to wipe off the national stain, of the oratorio of the Messiah having "met with a cold reception" in England, previous to Handel's departure for Ireland (d); a fact which I am glad to find impossible to ascertain, either by the newspapers of the times, in which all his other public performances sacred and secular are chronologically recorded, or by the testimony of persons still living, who remember the performance of the Messiah in Ireland, and of his oratorios previous to that period in England.

Falkener's Journals, for 1741 and 1742, have been consulted for the advertisements of Handel's performances during his residence in Dublin; and the first time any thing on the subject occurs, is in the paper for December 19th, 1741, when L' Allegro, Il Penseroso, and Il Moderato, are advertised for the 23d. The arrival of Signora Avolio, one of his performers, is mentioned in another paper. But March 27th, 1742, Mr. Handel's new, grand, sacred Oratorio called the MESSIAH was advertised for performance on the 12th of April following. In the paper of the day after performance, it is very much praised, and the admiration of the public is expressed in the warmest terms. After this, Handel had his Acis and Galatea, Esther, Alexander's Feast, the serenata of Hymen, and an Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, said to be newly set to Music, performed. The Messiah was again announced for the 3d of June, and in exactly the same words as before: being called new, grand, &c. This, it was said, would be the last of Mr. Handel's performances during his stay in the kingdom.

An Irish gentleman still living, who was at Dublin when Handel was there, and perfectly remembers his performances, person, and manners, says, that "he was received in that kingdom by people of the first distinction with all possible marks of esteem, as a man, and admiration as a performer and composer of the highest order."

(d) Mem. of the Life of Handel, 1760, p. 131.

order." And adds, "the Messiah, I am thoroughly convinced, was performed in Dublin for the first time, and with the greatest applause. Mrs. Cibber and Signora Avolio were the principal performers. These, with the assistance of the choiristers of St. Patrick's cathedral and Christ-church, formed the vocal band; and Dubourg, with several good instrumental performers, composed a very respectable orchestra. There were many noble families here, with whom Mr. Handel lived in the utmost degree of friendship and familiarity. Mrs. Vernon, a German lady, who came over with King George I. was particularly intimate with him, and at her house I had the pleasure of seeing and conversing with Mr. Handel; who, with his other excellences, was possessed of a great stock of humour; no man ever told a story with more. But it was requisite for the hearer to have a competent knowledge of at least four languages: English, French, Italian, and German; for in his narratives he made use of them all (e)."

Mrs. Arne, who went to Ireland with her husband in 1742, where they staid till 1744, has not the least doubt of the Messiah having been performed there for the first time.

In 1741, Lampe and his wife and sister, with Sullivan the singer, the two Messings, and Jemmy Worfdale, went to Preston Gild, and afterwards to Chester, where they performed the Dragon of Wantley, the Dragoness, Amelia, &c (f).

As I first arrived in London in the year 1744, I am enabled to give the reader an exact account of the general state of Music there at that time and since, from my own memory and knowledge, without consulting books, or trusting to tradition. Of the Italian opera an ample detail has been already given up to the present

(e) It will add great weight to this account, if I venture to say, that I was honoured with it, July 16th, 1788, from Dr. Quin of Dublin; a gentleman whose taste and judgment in Music I as much respected forty years ago, as his professional skill and other acquirements.

(f) I happened to be at Chester school when this company arrived there, and frequently heard them perform. Shuter, then a boy of about twelve or fourteen years old, was a livery servant to Lampe, and a special Pickle, who took off all the performers, and among the rest, Worfdale, so well, in Carey's song of "Young Roger came tapping at Dolley's window," that it was with difficulty he was prevented from breaking his bones.

time,

time, chapter sixth of this volume, and of oratorios, to the death of Handel, in the Sketch of his Life prefixed to the Account of his Commemoration.

Mr. Arne, afterwards Dr. Arne, on his return from Ireland in Autumn 1744, was engaged as composer to Drury-lane play-house, and Mr. Lampe at Covent-garden. At the first, Mr. Gordon, a young man lately arrived from Italy, was the leader of the band; he was remarkably near-sighted, always playing in spectacles. He succeeded Charke, and had a strong hand and tone, well fitted to his situation. At the other theatre, old Wood, the father of the late Mr. Wood of that theatre, and organist of St. Giles's and of Chelsea College, was the leader. Mr. Beard was the principal finger at Covent-garden; and Lowe, who had been in Ireland with Mr. Arne, was engaged at Drury-lane; where Mrs. Arne was likewise engaged as serious finger, while Mrs. Clive was in high favour in the comic style of ballad farces and songs of humour. At Covent-garden the fingers were Mrs. Lampe, and Miss Young, sisters of Mrs. Arne, and all three daughters of Anthony Young, organist of Catherine-Cree-church near the Tower. Such was the state of Music at our national theatres at this period, when Handel, Corelli, and Geminiani, with some introductory Musicks of Purcell, furnished both the bands with all the pieces they ever attempted.

The only subscription concert at the west end of the town at this time, was at Hickford's room or dancing-school, in Brewers-street; and in the city, the Swan and Castle concerts, at which the best performers of the Italian opera were generally employed, as well as the favourite English singers. Frasi and Beard sung at both, and Miss Turner was a favourite at the Swan. Festing, Collet, and Brown were our principal performers at this time on the violin, among the natives; and Veracini, Carbonelli, and Pasquali, among the Italians. Caporale, Pasqualino, and Cervetto, violoncellos. San Martini and his scholar Vincent, hautbois. Wiedeman and Ballicourt, German-flutes. Miller and Hebden, bassoons. Kelway and Stanley, the best organists; Keeble and Gladwin, at Ranelagh and Vauxhall; and little Harry Burges at the harpsichord in Drury-lane, where, for second-music, he often played concertos, generally of his own, as clean and as unmeaning as if set on a barrel. The harpsichord at Covent-garden was played by old Short, organist of St. Sepulchre's church, who was only able to drum thorough-bass.

At this time Jozzi, a castrato, and second singer at the opera, brought over Alberti's Lessons, which he played, printed, and sold, for his own, at a guinea each book; till detected by a gentleman coming from Venice, who had been personally acquainted with Alberti, and was in possession of a manuscript copy in his own hand writing; which, in order to expose the impudence and plagiarism of Jozzi, he gave to Walsh, who printed and sold the eight elegant and graceful lessons of the original composer, for six shillings. Jozzi, though not the author of these charming pieces, which were the first of a style that has been since too much imitated, but never equalled, had the merit of playing them with a neatness and precision that was truly admirable. The harpsichord having neither sostenuto nor expression, maintained its reputation by brilliant execution; and there was an accent, a spring, and smartness in Jozzi's touch, which I had then never heard. Handel's harpsichord lessons and organ concertos, and the two first books of Scarlatti's lessons, were all the good Music for keyed-instruments at that time in the nation; and these were original, difficult, and in a style totally different from those of Alberti. Handel's organ concertos long remained in possession of the first and favourite places, in the private practice and public performance of every organist in the kingdom; and Scarlatti's were not only the pieces with which every young performer displayed his powers of execution, but were the wonder and delight of every hearer who had a spark of enthusiasm about him, and could feel new and bold effects intrepidly produced by the breach of almost all the old and established rules of composition.

The Rev. WILLIAM FELTON, prebendary of Hereford, an imitator of Handel's concertos, who had a neat finger for common divisions, divisions and the rapid multiplication of notes, produced two concertos out of three sets, that were thought worth playing in London. And two of his airs with variations were the pride of every insipient player in town and country. Mr. Kelway, a scholar of Geminiani, kept Scarlatti's best lessons in constant practice, and was at the head of the Scarlatti sect. He had, in his voluntaries on the organ, a masterly wildness, and long supported the character of a great player, in a style quite his own, bold, rapid, and fanciful. With his harpsichord playing I was not acquainted, but have often been assured, that he executed the most difficult lessons of Scarlatti, in a manner peculiarly neat and delicate. As to composition, it is to be lamented that he did not exercise his pen and fancy more early in life, or that he ever attempted it at all: for on the arrival of Bach, and appointment at court, as chamber-musician to the Queen, to whom he dedicated his first publication in this country, Mr. Kelway thought it necessary, as music-master to her Majesty, to publish a book of harpsichord lessons, which are, perhaps, the most crude, awkward, and unpleasant pieces of the kind that have ever been engraved. There is a manifest want of facility and experience, which proves that though he was old in practical Music, he was young in its theory and in composition.

Stanley, however, and all the other organists, adhered to Handel's concertos, or composed for themselves in that style. The lessons of this great master, more complicated and difficult of execution, were vanquished by few, though attempted by many.

About this time, Mr. JOHN WORGAN, since Dr. Worgan, succeeded Mr. Gladwin in playing the organ at Vauxhall Gardens. He then studied the harmony and modulation of Palestrina, and organ fugues of Handel. And with an extempore prelude, alla Palestrina, and one of these fugues, he used every night to preface a concerto of Handel. By constant practice he became a very masterly and learned fughist on the organ, and, as a concerto player, a rival of Stanley. He was first taught by his brother, and afterwards by Roseingrave, till getting acquainted with Geminiani, he swore by no other divinity. His organ playing, though more in the style of Handel than of any other school, is indeed learned and masterly, in a way quite his own. In his youth, he was impressed with a reverence for Domenico Scarlatti by old Roseingrave's account of his wonderful performance on the harpsichord, as well as by his lessons; and afterwards he became a great collector of his pieces, some of which he had been honoured with from Madrid by the author himself. He was the editor of twelve at one time and six at another, that are admirable, though few have now perseverance sufficient to vanquish their peculiar difficulties of execution. He is still in possession of many more, which he has always locked up as Sybil's leaves. Dr. Worgan has composed innumerable songs and concertos for Vauxhall, and several oratorios, in which the choruses are learned and masterly.

Handel at this time "did bestride our musical world like a Colossus." He had done with operas; and after his return from Ireland, applied himself wholly to the composition of sacred Music (f). In 1745, I performed in his band, sometimes on the violin, and sometimes on the tenor, and by attending the rehearsals, generally at his own house in Lower Brook-street, and sometimes at Carlton-house, at the desire of his constant patron the late prince of Wales, father to his present Majesty, I gratified my eager

(f) Chronological list of Handel's oratorios, after his return from Ireland.				Paradise Lost	—	—	1760
Samson	—	—	1743	Rebecca	—	—	1761
Semele	—	—	1744	Nabal	—	—	1764
Sufannah	—	—	—	De Fesch.
Joseph	—	—	—	Judith	—	—	1733
Hercules	—	—	1745	Dr. Greene.
Balthazar	—	—	—	Song of Deborah	—	—	1732
Occasional Oratorio	—	—	1746	Jephtha	—	—	1737
Judas Maccabæus	—	—	—	Force of Truth	—	—	1746
Joshua	—	—	1748	Dr. Arne.
Solomon	—	—	—	Alfred	—	—	1746—1761
Alexander Balus	—	—	—	Judith	—	—	1764—1769
Theodora	—	—	1749	Stanley.
Jephtha	—	—	1751	Zimri	—	—	1760
Triumph of Time and Truth	—	—	1757	Dr. Worgan.
Pasticcios from Handel.				Hannah	—	—	1764
Israel in Babylon, compiled by Toms	1765			Giardini.
Cure of Saul, words by Dr. Brown	1766			Ruth	—	—	1778
Omnipotence, selected by Dr. Arnold and Toms.				Dr. Arnold.
Redemption, adjusted by Dr. Arnold	1786			Cure of Saul, new set	—	—	1767
Oratorios set by Mr. Smith .				Abimeleck, written by Smart	—	—	1768
David's Lamentation over Saul and Jonathan	—	—	1740	Resurrection	—	—	1769
				Prodigal Son	—	—	1773

curiosity

curiosity in seeing and examining the person and manners of so extraordinary a man, as well as in hearing him perform on the organ. He was a blunt and peremptory disciplinarian on these occasions, but had a humour and wit in delivering his instructions, and even in chiding and finding fault, that was peculiar to himself, and extremely diverting to all but those on whom his lash was laid. Francesina, who had sung in the opera with Farinelli and Caffarelli, and again in 1740; now having quitted the opera stage, she constantly attached herself to Handel, was first woman in his oratorios for many years, and Mr. Beard first man. Lowe had sometimes a subordinate part given him; but with the finest tenor voice I ever heard in my life, for want of diligence and cultivation, he never could be safely trusted with any thing better than a ballad, which he constantly learned by his ear; whereas Mr. Beard, with an inferior voice, constantly possessed the favour of the public by his superior conduct, knowledge of Music, and intelligence as an actor. The principal violin at this time was played by CARBONELLI, a plain intelligent performer of Corelli's school (g).

Dr. Greene was now at the head of our cathedral Music, and the King's band. And Mr. Arne and Mr. Boyce were frequently concurrents at the theatres and in each other's way, particularly at Drury-lane. Arne was aspiring, and always regarded Handel as a tyrant and usurper, against whom he frequently rebelled, but with as little effect as Marsyas against Apollo.

The late Mr. Tyers, proprietor of Vauxhall Gardens, who by his taste in laying them out, paintings of Hayman, band of Music, good wines, and cold collations, had attracted much company thither, and rendered it a favourite and delightful place of public amusement in fine weather; in the summer of 1745, added, for the first time, vocal to his instrumental performances; engaging Mrs. Arne, Messrs. Lowe, and the elder Reinhold, to sing. On this occasion the orchestra was enlarged, and Mr. Arne's ballads,

(g) He published twelve solos soon after his arrival, which he dedicated to his patron the Duke of Rutland. They were composed on the model of Corelli's fifth opera, but were well put together, and not totally destitute of invention, as far as his hand and ideas could carry him.

dialogues,

dialogues, duets, and trios, were performed here with great applause, and circulated all over the kingdom. During this first summer, his little dialogue of Colin and Phœbe, written by the late Mr. Moore, author of Fables for the Female Sex, was constantly encored every night for more than three months, successively.

At this time Richard Collet played the first violin. His tone was full, clear, and smooth, and his hand strong; but having neither taste nor knowledge of Music, he always remained an inelegant player. Hebden was sometimes the principal violoncello, and sometimes the bassoon. Valentine Snow, afterwards serjeant trumpet, was justly a favourite here, where his silver sounds in the open air, by having room to expand, never arrived at the ears of the audience in a manner too powerful or piercing. Here Mr. Worgan not only played the organ in an improving manner for many years, but first exercised his genius in composition. RICHARD VINCENT, for more than thirty years the principal hautbois at Covent-garden, was, ab origine, in the Vauxhall band.

RANELAGH had been planned by the late Mr. Lacey, joint patentee of Drury-lane theatre with Mr. Garrick, built, and made a place of public diversion just before my arrival in London. Several experiments were tried in placing the orchestra, in filling it, and in the time of performance, before it was settled as an evening promenade. The orchestra was at first placed in the middle of the Rotunda. The performance was in a morning; and oratorio choruses chiefly furnished the bill of fare. Sir John Barnard complaining to the magistrates, that the young merchants and city apprentices were frequently seduced from their counting-houses and shops by these morning amusements, they were prohibited, and the doors opened at six o'clock in the evening. The performance, however, did not begin till eight o'clock, but was ended at ten.

The late Mr. MICH. CHRIST. FESTING was the leader and chief conductor of the musical establishment here, from the time of my arrival in London till his death. This performer, with a feeble hand, little genius for composition, and but a shallow knowledge in counterpoint, terpoint, by good sense, probity, prudent conduct, and a gentleman-like behaviour, acquired a weight and influence in his profession, at which hardly any musician of his class ever arrived. He led during many years at the opera, at Ranelagh, at the concert at Hickford's room, at the Swan and Castle concerts in the city, and often at Handel's oratorios. Nor was there a benefit concert for any English professor at that time without a solo on the violin by Mr. M. C. Festing; and yet there is not a ripieno player on the violin at the opera now, whose hand and abilities are not superior to those of Festing upon that instrument. Learn hence, ye young professors, that something else is necessary, besides musical talents, to carry you reputably and comfortably through the world!

The first organ-player at Ranelagh was the late Mr. Keeble, and the second the late Mr. Butler. After singing had been introduced at Vauxhall, it was thought necessary, though choruses had been discontinued, to engage Mr. Beard, Frasi, and other favourite singers of the times, to perform single songs between the full pieces. CAPORALE the favourite violoncello player of these times was of the band, as well as MILLAR, the best bassoon during his whole life, that I can remember. PASQUALINO and the elder CERVETTO, the rivals of Caporale at this time, had infinitely more hand, and knowledge of the finger-board, as well as of Music in general; but the tone of both was raw, crude, and uninteresting. The younger Cervetto, when a child, and hardly acquainted with the gammut, had a better tone, and played what he was able to execute, in a manner much more chantant than his father. And, arrived at manhood, his tone and expression were equal to those of the best tenor voices.

Such was the general state of Music in London in 1749, when GIARDINI arrived, whose great hand, taste, and style of playing, were so universally admired, that he had soon not only a great number of scholars on the violin, but taught many ladies of the first rank to sing; and after he had been here a few years, he formed a morning academia, or concert, at his house, composed chiefly of his scholars, vocal and instrumental, who bore a part in the performance. This continued, while he was still augmenting the importance of his instrument and our national partiality for the taste of his country, till the admirable productions and great performers of Germany began to form a Teutonic interest and Germanic body here, which, before Giardini's departure from London, became very formidable rivals to him and his Roman legion.
the

Festing, whose health and favour began to decline in the year 1750, died about 1752, after mortifications of many kinds, the least of which were not those arising from the rapid success and universal applause of Giardini. He was succeeded at Ranelagh and in some of the concerts by Mr. ABRAM BROWN, a performer who had a clear, sprightly, and loud tone, with a strong hand; but, though he had travelled through Italy, he was ignorant of Music, and the pieces he played consisted of notes, et rien que des notes: for he had no soul or sense of expression. He brought over a favourite solo of Tartini (the second in the second set, published by Walsh), with which alone he figured at all concerts, for at least six or seven years, without ever entering into Tartini's true style of playing it, or that of any performer of his school. Mr. Brown, however, had not the mortification either to feel or know his defects; but, on the contrary, was comforted with a full conviction of his superiority.

SAN MARTINI's compositions, indeed, so full of science, originality, and fire, began to be noticed; but they were little known till after the decease of this most accomplished musician.

CHARLES AVISON, organist of Newcastle, was an ingenious man, and an elegant writer upon his art. He visited Italy early in his youth, and at his return having received instructions from Geminiani, a bias in his compositions for violins, and in his Essay on Musical Expression, towards that master, is manifest. Rameau was likewise his model in harpsichord Music, and he over-rated Marcello's Psalms either to depreciate Handel, or forward the subscription he opened for their publication. He succeeded, however, in neither of these designs: Handel is more and more respected, and Marcello is dropped into his right place, among eminent dilettanti.

With

With respect to Avison's own musical productions they want force, correctness, and originality, sufficient to be ranked very high among the works of masters of the first class (b).

As to such elegant private concerts as are now frequently given by the nobility and gentry at their own houses, they were at this time scarcely known. The first I remember were at Lady Brown's, under the direction of Count St. Germain. Her ladyship distinguished herself as a persevering enemy to Handel, and a protectress of foreign musicians in general, of the new Italian style; and was one of the first persons of fashion who had the courage, at the risk of her windows, to have concerts of a Sunday Evening.

The next remarkable Academia, that I remember to have occasioned much curiosity and speculation, was established at the house of Mrs. Fox Lane, afterwards Lady Bingley, on the arrival of Giardini in England. The superior talents of that performer were always warmly patronised by this lady to the time of her death; and not content with admiring him herself, she contrived every means that could be devised to make him the admiration of others. As Giardini was seldom to be heard in public after his first arrival, she invited very select parties of the first people in the kingdom to hear him at her house, for which happiness she did not suffer them to remain ungrateful at his benefit.

When Mingotti arrived in this kingdom, having united her interests with those of Giardini in the conduct and management of the opera, Mrs. Lane espoused her cause with great zeal; entering into the spirit of all her theatrical quarrels as ardently as if they had been her own. With two such performers, the concerts she gave to her choice friends were subjects of envy and obloquy to all those who were unable to obtain admission. At these concerts Mrs. Lane frequently played the harpsichord herself; as did Lady Edgcumbe and the late Lady Milbanke, both admirable performers on that instrument. Lady Rockingham, the Dowager Lady Carlisle, and Miss Pelham, scholars of Giardini, and Mingotti, used to sing: and the difficulty, or rather impossibility, of hearing these professors and illustrious dilettanti any where else, stimulated curiosity so much, that there was no sacrifice or mortification to which fashionable people would not submit, in order to obtain admission. And la padrona della casa lost few opportunities of letting them know the value she set on her invitations, by using them like dogs when they were there. Whenever a benefit was in contemplation for one of her protégés, taking care of the honour of her guests, she obliged them to behave with due gratitude and munificence on the occasion. "Come!" would she often say to her friends, "give me five guineas,"—a demand as implicitly obeyed as if made on the road. Nor had any one, who ever wished to be admitted into such good company again, the courage to ask the occasion of the demand; but patiently waited the lady's pleasure to tell them whether they should be honoured with a ticket for Giardini's or Mingotti's benefit.

(b) The late Dr. William Hayes of Oxford, a man of very considerable abilities in his profession, has pointed out the false composition, as well as false reasoning, of Mr. Avison, in Remarks on his Essay on Musical Expression.

LAMPE, the ingenious composer of the Dragon of Wantley, quitting London in 1749, resided two years at Dublin; and in 1750, went to Edinburgh, where he was settled very much to the satisfaction of the patrons of Music in that city, and of himself; but in July 1751, he was seized with a fever which put an end to his existence, at the age of fifty-nine.

In 1753, PASQUALI, an excellent performer on the violin and a good musician, who came to England about the year 1743, went to Edinburgh; where he had an establishment, and lived much respected as a professor, and beloved as a man, by all who knew him, till the time of his death in 1757.

The ballads of the late Dr. SAMUEL HOWARD, which were long the delight of natural and inexperienced lovers of Music, had the merit of facility; for this honest Englishman, brought up in the Chapel Royal, preferred the style of his own country to that of any other so much, that he never staggered his belief of its being the best in the world, by listening to foreign artists or their productions.

DE FESCH, a German who came to England about the year 1730, was a good contrapuntist and a voluminous composer, but his productions were in general dry and uninteresting.

WIEDE-

WIEDEMANN, who came to England, about the year 1726, was long the principal solo player on the German-flute. He was a good musician; but in his productions, he never broke through the bounds of that mediocrity to which his instrument seems confined.

Content with our former possessions and habits, we went on in the tranquil enjoyment of the productions of Corelli, Geminiani, and Handel, at our national theatres, concerts, and public gardens, till the arrival of Giardini, Bach, and Abel; who soon created schisms, and at length, with the assistance of Fischer, brought about a total revolution in our musical taste.

In 1762, Arne quitted the former style of melody, in which he had so well set Comus, and furnished Vauxhall and the whole kingdom with such songs as had improved and polished our national taste; and when he set the bald translation of Metastasio's opera of Artaserse, he crowded the airs, particularly in the part of Mandane for Miss Brent, with all the Italian divisions and difficulties which had ever been heard at the opera. This drama, by the novelty of the Music to English ears, with the talents of Tenducci, Peretti, and the doctor's scholar Miss Brent, had very great success; and still continues to be represented whenever singers can be found who are possessed of sufficient abilities for its performance. But in setting Artaxerxes, though the melody is less original than that of Comus, Arne had the merit of first adapting many of the best passages of Italy, which all Europe admired, to our own language, and of incorporating them with his own property, and with what was still in favour of former English composers.

The general melody of our countryman, if analyzed, would perhaps appear to be neither Italian nor English, but an agreeable mixture of Italian, English, and Scots. Many of his ballads, indeed, were professed imitations of the Scots style; but in his other songs he frequently dropped into it, perhaps, without design. Arne was never a close imitator of Handel, nor thought, by the votaries of that great musician, to be a sound contrapuntist. However, he had an inward and secret reverence for his abilities, and for those of Geminiani, as well as for the science of Pepusch; but except when he attempted oratorios, theirs was not the merit requisite for him, a popular composer who had different performers and different hearers to write for. In the science of harmony, though he was chiefly self-taught, yet being a man of genius, quick parts, and great penetration in his art, he betrayed no ignorance or want of study in his scores.

The oratorios he produced were so unfortunate, that he was always a loser whenever they were performed. And yet it would be unjust to say that they did not merit a better fate; for though the choruses were much inferior in force to those of Handel, yet the airs were frequently admirable. But besides the great reputation of Handel with whom he had to contend, Arne never was able to have his Music so well performed; as his competitor had always a more numerous and select band, a better organ, which he played himself, and better fingers.

None of this ingenious and pleasing composer's capital productions had full and unequivocal success but Comus and Artaxerxes, at the distance of 24 years from each other. Rosamond, his first musical drama, had a few songs in it that were long in favour, and the Judgment of Paris many; but except when his sister, Miss Arne, afterwards Mrs. Cibber, sung in them, he never gained any thing by either. Thomas and Sally, indeed, as a farce, with very little musical merit, was often acted; and previous to that, Eliza was a little while in favour; but the number of his unfortunate pieces for the stage was prodigious (i); yet none of them were condemned or neglected for want of merit in the Music, but words, of which the doctor was too frequently guilty of being the author (k). Upon the whole, though this composer, who died March 5th, 1778, had formed a new style of his own, there did not appear that fertility of ideas, original grandeur of thought, or those resources upon all occasions which are discoverable in the works of his predecessor, Purcell, both for the church and stage; yet, in secular Music, he must be

(i) The Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green, Fall of Phaeton, King Pepin's Campaign, Don Saverio, Temple of Dulness, Guardian Outwitted; Achilles in Petticoats, &c. &c.

(k) There was certainly at this time a great scarcity of lyric poets. Till Mr. Mason wrote songs, we had few that were fit for any tunes, but such as are used in the Beggar's Opera and ballad farces. But for these, such has been our passion during the present century, that a collection of popular ballads set to every-day Music, which I made a few years ago, amounts to nine volumes in folio!

allowed allowed to have surpassed him in ease, grace, and variety; which is no inconsiderable praise, when it is remembered, that from the death of Purcell to that of Arne, a period of more than fourscore years, no candidate for musical fame among our countrymen had appeared, who was equally admired by the nation at large.

Of near a hundred and fifty musical pieces that have been brought on the stage at our two national theatres within these forty years, thirty of them, at least, were set by Arne.

In 1763, the English pasticcio burletta of Love in a Village, and in 1765 the Summer's Tale, and the Maid of the Mill, betrayed us into a taste for Italian melody, which has been the model of most of our vocal composers in and out of the theatre ever since. The Duenna, another favourite English pasticcio, in 1775, helped us on, and Dr. Arnold, Mr. Dibdin, and Mr. Shield, have very judiciously complied with the reigning taste, and imitated or adopted the opera style in all its vicissitudes.

Mr. LINLEY, and Mr. JACKSON of Exeter, in their elegies at least, have steadfastly adhered to a style of their own, which seems to have been formed upon the melodies of our best old English masters, and those of the last age, that were most worthy of being preserved.

It has been already observed in this chapter, that till the Italian opera was established in this country, little was expected from our singers besides a voice and an ear. Indeed, long after that period, good taste in singing was so little diffused throughout the island, that the great and exquisite performers who came hither from the Continent seem to have made but a small impression on their astonished hearers. Nicolini, Senesino, Bernacchi, Faustina, Cuzzoni, Farinelli, Caffarelli, Carestini, Conti, Monticelli, Mingotti, Elizi, Manzoli, Guarducci, and Guadagni, had no effect upon our national taste; and though a few individuals among the people of fashion, by private instructions from them, and by the best of all lessons, hearing them frequently perform in public, diminished the original sin of our native brogue and vulgar expression; yet as these pupils

pupils could be heard but by few, their power was local, and no more likely to have any general effect upon our national cantilena, than their learning French and Italian upon our general language. It is not difficult, however, to fix the æra of a change in our vocal Music, which seems to have remained stationary for near half a century. It was begun by the compositions and instructions of Dr. Arne, who endeavoured to refine our melody and singing, more from Italian than English models; and was greatly accelerated by the pasticcio English operas above mentioned, as well as by the instructions of Tedeschini, Cocchi, Vento, and Giardini, who were employed about this time to teach several of our play-house singers. Tenducci's performance in Artaxerxes had a rapid effect upon the public taste, and stimulated to imitation all that were possessed of good ears and flexible voices. In later times the scholars of Sacchini, Piozzi, Parsons, and others, with the public concerts, where the best compositions and most exquisite performance of all kinds were constantly heard, completed the revolution; and it may be with truth and certainty affirmed, that our taste and judgment in both, even at the play-houses, differ as much from those of twenty or thirty years ago, as the manners of a civilised people from those of savages.

After the death of Festing, the subscription concert at Hickford's room declined, and another was established by Mrs. Cornely, in Soho-square, where the best performers and the best company were assembled, till Bach and Abel uniting interests, opened a subscription, about 1763, for a weekly concert; and as their own compositions were new and excellent, and the best performers of all kinds which our capital could supply, enlisted under their banners, this concert was better patronised and longer supported than perhaps any one had ever been in this country; having continued for full twenty years with uninterrupted prosperity. The same concert now subsists in a still more flourishing way than ever, under the denomination of the PROFESSIONAL CONCERT, with the advantage of a greater variety of composition than during the regency of Bach and Abel, to whose sole productions the whole performance of each winter was chiefly confined. Fischer, indeed, composed for himself, and in a style so new and fanciful, that in point of invention as well as tone, taste, expression, and neatness of execution, his piece was always regarded as one of the highest treats of the night, and heard with proportionate rapture. Here Cramer, Crofdil, Cervetto, and other eminent professors, established their reputation, and by every new performance, mounted still higher in the favour of the public.

The late EARL OF KELLY, who was possessed of more musical science than any dilettante with whom I was ever acquainted, and who, according to Pinto, before he travelled into Germany, could scarcely tune his fiddle, shut himself up at Manheim with the elder Stamitz, and studied composition and practised the violin with such serious application, that, at his return to England, there was no part of theoretical or practical Music, in which he was not equally versed with the greatest professors of his time. Indeed, he had a strength of hand on the violin, and a genius for composition, with which few professors are gifted.

The late Mr. BURTON, the scholar of Keeble, was an enthusiast in his art; but having in his youth exercised his hand more than his head, he was not a deep or correct contrapuntist. He had, however, in his pieces and manner of playing them a style of his own, to which, from his having been one of the first harpsichord players in our country who attempted expression and light and shade, he excited an interest and attention, which would now perhaps be much more difficult to obtain.

Among English performers on the violoncello, must not be forgotten, the late Messrs. GORDON and PAXTON, whose full and sweet tone, as well as judicious manner of accompanying the voice, placed them very high in the favour of the public, as concert players.

But I shall close my narrative concerning illustrious musicians who have distinguished themselves in our own country, during the present century, and whom death has rendered objects of history, by paying a tribute to a late professor, whose loss not only the lovers of Music in England, but the musical world in general, will long deplore.
of

CHARLES FREDERIC ABEL, a disciple of Sebastian Bach, was in the Electoral King of Poland's famous band at Dresden near ten years; but at length finding that the æconomy to which that court was reduced by the horrors of war rendered his subsistence scanty and precarious, he quitted the service in 1758, and departed from the capital of Saxony with only three dollars in his pocket. He travelled on foot to the next little German province, where he found his talents were not only honoured but rewarded. This success, however, only raised his ambition, and excited a stronger desire to try his fortune elsewhere; he went therefore soon to another court, and still on to a third, remaining only at each long enough to acquire a sufficient sum to defray his expences to a new scene of action; when, at length, he arrived in England, 1759, where his worth was soon discovered and rewarded. The late Duke of York was one of his first and best patrons, till the Queen's band was established, when he was honoured with the title of chamber musician to her Majesty, and an appointment of £. 200 per annum. The concert long carried on by him and his friend the late Mr. Bach was frequently very profitable, and he had as many scholars as he chose to undertake.

His performance on the viol da gamba was in every particular complete and perfect. He had a hand which no difficulties could embarrass; a taste the most refined and delicate; and a judgment so correct and certain, as never to let a single note escape him without meaning. His compositions were easy and elegantly simple, for he used to say, "I do not chuse to be always struggling with difficulties, and playing with all my might. I make my pieces difficult whenever I please, according to my disposition and that of my audience." Yet in nothing was he so superior to himself, and to other musicians, as in writing and playing an adagio; in which the most pleasing, yet learned modulation; the richest harmony; and the most elegant and polished melody were all expressed with such feeling, taste, and science, that no musical production or performance with which I was then acquainted seemed to approach nearer perfection (l).

or

His manner of playing an adagio soon became the model of all our young performers on bowed-instruments: Barthelemon, Cervetto, Cramer, and Crofdil, who may be ranked of his school, were more sparing of notes in a cantabile than, during youth, their great facility of execution would have stimulated them to, if Abel's discretion, taste, and pathetic manner of expressing, I had almost said of breathing, a few notes, had not kept them in order.

Abel's musical science in harmony, modulation, fugue, and canon, which he had acquired under his great master Sebastian Bach, and taste under Haffé and the great singers employed in the performance of his operas at Dresden, had made him so complete a musician, that he soon became the umpire in all musical controversy, and was consulted in difficult and knotty points as an infallible oracle. All lovers of Music lamented that he had not in youth attached himself to an instrument more worthy of his genius, taste, and learning, than the viol da gamba, that remnant of the old chest of viols, which, during the last century, was a necessary appendage to a nobleman or gentleman's family throughout Europe, previous to the admission of violins, tenors, and basses in a private house or public concert. It has been justly observed in an account of Abel, well drawn up, and inserted in the Morning Post, June 22d, 1787, soon after his funeral, that "his favourite instrument was not in general use, and would probably die with him." It was practised longer in Germany than elsewhere; but since the death of the late Elector of Bavaria, who next to Abel was the best performer on the viol da gamba I had ever heard, the instrument seems laid aside (m). The late M. Lidl, indeed, played with exquisite taste and expression upon this ungrateful instrument, with the additional embarrassment of base strings at the back of the neck, with which he accompanied himself, an admirable expedient in a desert, or even in a house, where there is but one musi-

(l) This was written in 1779.

(m) The place of gambist seems now as totally suppressed in the chapels of German princes, as that of lutenist.

cian ; but to be at the trouble of accompanying yourself in a great concert, surrounded by idle performers who could take the trouble off your hands, and leave them more at liberty to execute, express, and embellish the principal melody, seemed at best a work of supererogation. The tone of the instrument will do nothing for itself, and it seems with Music as with agriculture, the more barren and ungrateful the soil, the more art is necessary in its cultivation. And the tones of the viol da gamba are radically so crude and nasal, that nothing but the greatest skill and refinement can make them bearable. A human voice of the same quality would be intolerable.

As Abel's invention was not unbounded, and his exquisite taste and deep science prevented the admission of whatever was not highly polished, there seemed in some of his last productions a languor and monotony, which the fire and fertility of younger symphonists and composers of his own country, made more obvious. His last quartets, of which he did me the honour to make me a present of his original score as a specimen of his science and care in the composition and arrangement of the parts, though not abounding in new melody, are in point of harmony and selection of sounds, models of perfection, and if printed in score, would be excellent studies for young contrapuntists.

Abel, like other great professors of his own country, played on several instruments, besides that to which he had chiefly pointed his attention. On the harpsichord, though he had not a great hand for lessons, he used to modulate, in arpeggio, with infinite variety and knowledge ; and, indeed, when he was in spirits and fancy, I have heard him modulate in private on his six-stringed base with such practical readiness and depth of science, as astonished the late Lord Kelly and Bach, as much as myself. This accomplished musician died in London, June 20th, 1787.

The celebrated performer on the violin, LOLLÍ, came into England in the beginning of 1785 ; but by a caprice in his conduct equal to his performance, he was seldom heard. And then so eccentric was his style of composition and execution, that he was regarded

regarded as a madman by most of his hearers. Yet I am convinced that in his lucid intervals he was, in a serious style, a very great, expressive, and admirable performer. In his freaks nothing can be imagined so wild, difficult, grotesque, and even ridiculous as his compositions and performance. After playing at the oratorio, and making the grave and ignorant laugh at very serious difficulties upon which he had perhaps but ill bestowed his time, he suddenly left the kingdom, à la fourdine; perhaps, at last, to shun difficulties of another kind.

Of vocal performers who have distinguished themselves at the opera, due notice has been taken elsewhere; and to several others a tribute has been paid in the Account of the Commemoration of Handel; yet since that time another has mounted so high in the favour of the public, that it would be construed into injustice or want of feeling not to allow her an honourable niche in this chapter.

Mrs. BILLINGTON, after distinguishing herself in early childhood as a neat and expressive performer on the piano-forte, appeared all at once, in 1786, a sweet and captivating singer. At first, in emulation of the Mara and other great bravura singers, she was perhaps too frequently struggling with difficulties, which she has, however, since so totally subdued, that no song seems too high or too rapid for her execution. But besides these powers, which the bad taste of the public tempts or obliges her to exercise, perhaps too frequently for lovers of expression and simplicity, the natural tone of her voice is so exquisitely sweet, her knowledge of Music so considerable, her shake so true, her closes and embellishments so various, and her expression so grateful, that nothing but envy or apathy can hear her without delight.

The present composers and instrumental performers of the first class are too well known for my readers to require information concerning their abilities. The patrons and lovers of the art have heard them with their own ears, and will judge for themselves. I shall therefore proportion my narrative to their wants, and merely record, in alphabetical order, the names of the principal artists to whose powers of pleasing the public is most obliged. Indeed, it is a painful self-denial not to celebrate the talents of musicians whom I have so often heard with delight; but how is it possible to discriminate the several excellences of the many great performers on the violin now resident in this country, or describe the powerful hand and truly vocal adagio of a Barthelemon; the fire, tone, and certainty of a Cramer; the neatness and precision of a Pieltain; the sweet tone and polished style of a Raimondi; the taste, refinement, and enthusiasm of a Salomon; or the accuracy and expression of a Schoener? Men whom I ever meet with pleasure, and hear with delight, however various their talents.

Keyed-instruments are perhaps no where on the globe better played, in every different style, than at present in this country, by Burney, Clementi, Cramer jun. Miss Gueft, Hülmandel, the two Wesleys, and many others, not only professors but dilettanti, who though not public performers, are heard with great pleasure in private. It gives me much concern that I am obliged to strike out of this list the name of Mr. JOHN SAMUEL SCHROETER; but this distinguished musician, whose neat and exquisite performance on the piano-forte will be long remembered with regret, died November 1st, 1788, while this sheet was printing!

On the hautbois we have the admirable Fischer, the Parks, and Patria. On the German-flute, Florio, Græf, and Tacet. On the violoncello, the matchless Cervetto and Crofdil. On the bassoon, Baumgarten and Parkinson. And on the clarinet, Mahon. M. Baumgarten, leader of the band at Covent-garden theatre, has been so long in England that his merit is unknown to his countrymen on the Continent; but besides his performance on the violin and organ, he deserves notice as an instrumental composer of the German nation.

The CATCH-CLUB at the Thatched-house was instituted in 1762, by the late Earl of Eglington, the Earl of March, now Duke of Queensberry, — Meynel, Esq. and a few more of their friends. The spirit and liberality with which this establishment has been since supported, has not only much improved the manner of performing forming the catches, canons, and glees of old masters, but been productive of innumerable new compositions of that kind, which are still of a more ingenious and elegant texture.

And the CONCERT OF ANCIENT MUSIC, originally suggested by the Earl of Sandwich in 1776, in favour of such solid and valuable productions of old masters as an intemperate rage for novelty had too soon laid aside as superannuated, was supported with spirit and dignity by the concurrent zeal and activity of other noblemen and gentlemen of the first rank, who united with his lordship in the undertaking, till 1785, when it was honoured with the presence of their Majesties, whose constant attendance ever since has given to this institution an elevation and splendor, which perhaps no establishment of this kind ever enjoyed before. Here the productions of venerable old masters, particularly those of Purcell and Handel, are performed by a select and powerful band, with such correctness and energy, as the authors themselves never had the happiness to hear.

The COMMEMORATION OF HANDEL, in 1784, having been crowned with a success equally honourable to that great artist and to the nation, similar performances have since been annually repeated, to still more numerous audiences, for charitable purposes, in Westminster-Abbey, under the title of A GRAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL. In 1787, the band of vocal and instrumental performers amounted to eight hundred and six musicians, exclusive of the principal singers, consisting of twenty-two, with Madame Mara, Rubinelli, Harrison, and Morelli, at their head. And such is the state of practical Music in this country, that the increase of performers, instead of producing confusion, as might have been expected, has constantly been attended with superior excellence of execution; as experience, the best of all teachers, has so guided the zeal of the directors, and the science of the conductor and leader of this great enterprize, that a certain road to full perfection in every department seems to have been attained.

CON-

CONCLUSION.

I Have at length arrived at the end of a work that has been thirty years in meditation, and more than twenty in writing and printing. Whether I have been too brief or too minute in my narrative must be left to the wants and intelligence of my readers. Ignorance and science are relative terms, and the same book, like a dictionary, may at once contain too much for one purchaser, and too little for another. My ambition has been to gratify reasonable curiosity concerning every part of my subject, without shrinking at difficulties; yet those who have previously had leisure and opportunity to draw knowledge from the same sources will think much might have been retrenched; while others, to whom the subject is wholly new, will be in want of many additions.

The havock which death has made since this work was begun among my friends, and those I wished to please, who, of course, were the most willing to be pleased, is so great, that more than half my first subscribers have disappeared; and if any curiosity was excited, or interest awakened, towards the subject by the former volumes, it is not likely to be of much use to the present.

New ideas and new events have arisen in the lapse of time, which have swelled my materials, and rendered my subject too unwieldy for the space to which it was originally allotted; but as respect for my readers prevented hasty publication, it is hoped that the great time and labour which have been bestowed upon it, will not render the work less worthy of their patronage.

If the first volume of this history was necessarily compiled from few and obscure materials, and conjecture and speculation were called in to supply their defects; and if the second confined the reader to antiquarian knowledge, and afforded him no information but of barbarous times and more barbarous Music; it is hoped that that these final volumes will make him some amends, as they include all the simplicity and harmonical merit of the last century, and refinements of the present.

It may be thought a useless labour by some to have drawn from the tomb the names of so many obscure and barbarous authors, whose insipid productions, if preserved, would but degrade human nature, and shew the imbecility of their endeavours at distinction; but the progress of science, and the principles of its declension, can only be discovered by tracing the steps by which it has advanced towards perfection or tended to corruption.

Many specimens of melody and harmony are given, not as models of perfection, but reliques of barbarism, and indisputable vouchers that mankind was delighted with bad Music, before good had been heard; and I have spoken of some musicians whose fame is now so much faded, that it is perhaps the last time they will ever be mentioned. Yet though I have constantly treated old masters with reverence, it has never been at the expence of the modern. Indeed, respect for the dead should not annihilate all kindness for the living, who are in much greater want of patronage. The artist who is suffered to linger in want and obscurity, is made but small amends by posthumous honours and commemorations.

It may be thought a mischievous labour by some to have drawn from the tomb the names of so many obscure and barbarous authors, whose impid productions, if preserved, would but degrade human nature, and show the impidity of their endeavours at distinction; but the progress of science, and the principles of its decision, can only be discovered by tracing the steps by which it has advanced towards perfection or tended to corruption.

Many specimens of melody and harmony are given, not as models of perfection, but relics of barbarism, and indispensable vouchers that mankind was delighted with bad Music, before good had been heard; and I have spoken of some musicians whose fame is now so much faded, that it is perhaps the last time they will ever be mentioned. Yet though I have constantly treated old masters with reverence, it has never been at the expense of the modern. Indeed, respect for the dead should not annihilate all standards for the living; who are in much greater want of patronage. The artist who is suffered to linger in want and obscurity, is made but small amends by posthumous honours and commemorations.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST of the principal Books published on the Subject of Music in England, during the present Century.

H OLDER of the natural Grounds and Principles of Harmony,	1701
BEDFORD on Temple Musick,	1706
A Comparison between the French and Italian Musick and Operas,	1709
BEDFORD on the great Abuse of Musick,	1711
MALCOLM's Treatise on Musick,	1721
TANSUR's Sound anatomised,	1724
DE LA FOND's System of Musick,	1725
Mechanical Essay on Singing, Musick, and Dancing,	1727
BROWN's Medicina Musica,
PEPUSCH's Treatise on Harmony,	1731
LAMPE's Treatise on Thorough-bass,	1737
— Art of Musick,	1740
GRASSINEAU's Musical Dictionary,
GALLIARD's Translation of Tosi on florid Song,	1742
GEMINIANI's Guida Armonica, — Treatise on Good Taste.
— Art of Accompaniment.
HARRIS's three Treatises, on Art, Music, and Happiness,	1744
DU VERNEY's Treatise on the Ear, translated,	1748
SMITH's Harmonics,	1749
RAMEAU's Treatise on Music, translated.	1752
AVISON on Musical Expression,	1753
HAYES's Remarks on Ditto, and Avison's Reply,
Memoirs of the Life of Handel,	1760
ANTONIOOTTO's Treatise on Composition,
BROWN's Dissertation on the Rise and Declension of Music,	1763
Observations on Ditto,	1764
ALGAROTTI's Essay on the Opera, translated,	1767
Lyric Muse revived,	1768
WEBB on the Correspondence between Poetry and Music,	1769
BAILEY's Collection of Anthems used in the Chapel Royal and most Cathedrals in England,
Account of the Academy of Ancient Music,	1770
HOLDEN's Essay towards a rational System of Music,
NARES's Treatise on Singing,
BAILEY's Treatise on Singing and Playing,	1771
STILLINGFLEET's Principles and Power of Harmony,
MORLEY's Introduction, republished,
BURNEY's Musical Tour through France and Italy,
Ditto through the Netherlands, Germany, and Holland,	1773
VOL. IV.	4 M
	STEELE

STEELE on the Melody and Measure of Speech,	1775
BURNEY's General History of Music, Vol. I.	1776
HAWKINS's General History of the Science and Practice of Music, Five Vols. quarto,	—
HALES. Sonorum Doctrina rationalis, ex Newtoni,	1778
ROUSSEAU's Musical Dictionary, translated.	—
FEYJO's three Essays on Church Music, translated,	1778
EUTERPE, or Remarks on the Use and Abuse of Music,	1779
BURNEY's Paper on Crotch, the Infant Musician, presented to the Royal Society, and printed,	1779
A. B. C. Dario Musico.	1780
Essay on Tune,	1781
MASON's Collection of the Words of Anthems used in the Cathedrals and Collegiate Churches of England,	1782
BURNEY's History of Music, Vol. II.	—
FRIEK on Modulation and Accompaniment,	—
OVEREND on the Science of Music,	1783
BEMETZRIEDER's new Way of teaching Music,	—
Rev. Mr. JONES's Treatise on the Art of Music,	1784
KEEBLE's Theory of Harmonics,	—
JONES's Welsh Bards,	—
ROBERTSON's Enquiry into the Fine Arts, Vol. I.	—
YOUNG's Enquiry into the principal Phenomena of Sounds and Musical Strings,	—
BEMETZRIEDER's Music made Easy,	1785
WALKER's Poetry and Music of the Irish Bards,	—
BURNEY's Commemoration of Handel, and Sketch of his Life,	—
MILLER's Musical Institutes,	—
— Elements of Thorough-bass,	1787

PUBLISHING

Complete Edition of the Works of HANDEL in Score, by Dr. Arnold,	1788
Ditto of PURCELL, by Benjamin Goodison, Esq.	—

INDEX.

I N D E X.

The ASTERISKS indicate the Places where the principal Account is given of PERSONS and THINGS.

A

- ABEL, 486, 493, 507, 604, * 678.
Abercorn, Earl of, 636.
Abos, 466.
Academy, Royal, of Music, 258.
 ——— of Ancient Music, 636.
Acis and Galatea, 360.
Adami, 169.
Addison, 202, 225, 229, 233.
Ademberger, 514.
Admetus, 314, 463.
Adriano, 391.
 ——— in Siria, by Ciampi, 459.
 ——— by Bach, 486.
Advertisements from the Royal Academy, 262, 280, 288, 298, 302, 314, 325, 338.
 ——— from Handel, 339, 360, 366,
 ——— for concerts, 195.
Affilard, 625.
Agricola, 583.
Agujari, 481, 504.
Airs in early operas, 49, 60.
Albergati, Count, 54.
Alceste, by Lampugnani, 450.
 ——— by Grefnich, 526.
 ——— by Gluck, 575.
Alberti, Domenico, * 540.
Albinoni, 77, 533, 560.
Alcina, 383.
Aldrovandini, 54.
Alessandri, 493.
Alessandro, by Handel, 306, * 310, 362.
 ——— Severo, by ditto, pasticcio, 423.
 ——— nell' Indie, 467.
 ——— in Persia, pasticcio, 435.
Alexander's Feast, 391.
Alfonso, opera by Lampugnani, 450.
Algarotti, 574.
Allatius, Leo, 78.
Allegranti, 501.
Almahide, 211.
Amadigi, 251, 257.
Ambleto, 230.
Amelia, 655.
Amorevoli, 446, 448.
Amorosi, 50.
Andreoni, 436.
Andromaca, opera by Jomelli, 465.
Anfiparnaso, 123 to 128.
Anfossi, 523.
Angelica e Medoro, 429.
Anima e Corpo, 18, 86.
Annibali, Italian singer, 398, 402.
Anibale in Capua, opera, 454.
Anfani, 515.
Ancient dramas always sung, 49.
Antinori, singer, 303.
Antiochus, 220.
Aprile, 569.
Arbuthnot, Dr. 230, 333.
Aresti, Floriano, 534.
Ariadne, by Porpora, 368.
 ———, by Handel, 371.
Arianna, by Monteverde, 34.
 ——— e Teseo, 473.
Ariodante, 382.
Aristodemo, pasticcio, 451.
Armida, by Mortellari, 526.
Arminio, opera, by Handel, 401.
Arne, the Upholsterer, 361.
Arne, Dr. 368, 376, 486, * 655, 659, 663, 667, 673, 676.
 ———, Mrs. see Miss Cecilia Young.
 ———, Miss, 361.
Arnold, Dr. 276, 375, 666, 674.
Arfinoe, first opera in England, 199.
Artamene, opera, by Gluck, 454.
Artaria, 606.
Artaserse, by Attilio, 298.
 ———, by Hasse, 378.
Artaxerxes, by Arne, 185, 233, 673, 676.
Arteaga, 309, 574.
Astario, by Bononcini, 260, 480.
Astorga, Baron d', 178.
Astyanax, 321.
Atalanta, 395.

I N D E X.

Athalia, 374, 383.
Attilio Ariosti, 257, * 290.
Attilio Regolo, 463, 477.
Avison, 582.
Auretti, dancer, 453.
Auvergne, 615.

B

BABEL, 648.
Babini, 524, 527.
Bacelli, 518.
Bach, Sebastian, 590, 593.
 —, family, 594.
 —, C. P. Em. 457, 588, * 595, 600, 643.
 —, John Christian, 480, * 482, 486, 583.
Baglione, la, 622.
Baldi, 303.
Balbastre, 623.
Ballicourt, 663.
Balliere, 626.
Barbella, 551, 570.
Barberini, female dancer, 447.
Barbier, Mrs. 229.
Bardi, Gio. Conte di Vernio, 21, 135.
Baron, German lutenist, 585.
Baronesi, 220.
Barthelemon, 488, 679, 682.
Barwick, Anne, 197.
Baumgarten, German dilettante, 605.
 —, bassoon, 682.
 —, composer, ibid.
Bassani, Girolamo, 535.
Basseggio, ibid.
Beard, Mr. 378, 390, 447, 658, 663, * 667.
Beauchamp, 582.
Beccari, 16.
Beecke, 605.
Belmira, 369.
Bellerophon, 456.
Beggar's Opera, 228, 333, 650.
Bencini, 573.
Benevento, 533.
Benda, Fran. 596.
 —, Gio. 597.
Benini, 527.
Berenice, opera, by Handel, 408.
 —, pasticcio, 486.
Bergognoni, 533.
Berenstadt, 259.
Berlin, 581.
Bernacchi, 256, 340.
Bernasconi, 509.
Bernier, 622.
Berselli, 276.
Bertin, 607.

Bertoldi, 339.
Berton, 615.
Bertoni, 513, 541.
Bethisy, 626.
Betterton, 185, 191, 200, 205, 211.
Betulia Liberata, by Jomelli, 494.
Bezozzi, 617.
Bill of Carbonelli's concert, 648.
Billington, Mrs. 233, * 681.
Bingley, lady, 467, 671.
Biogr. Dram. 81, 184.
Blainville, 586, 626.
Blaire, Mrs. 505.
Blaise, 624.
Blamont, 607.
Boccherini, 573.
Bologna operas, 50.
Bonnet, 609.
Bononcini, John, 206, 210, 258, * 321.
 —, Antonio, 534.
Borde, de la, 612, 622, * 628.
Borofini, 297.
Boschi, 213, 261, 276.
Bournonville, 593.
Boyce, Dr. William, 289, 667.
Boyer's account of Pergolesi, 555.
Breitkopf, 605.
Brent, Miss, 233, 673.
Britain's Happiness, English opera, 198.
Brook, Mrs. 499.
Broschi, Riccardo, 538, 550.
Brossard, 625.
Brown, lady, 671.
 —, Abraham, 663, * 670.
Brun, Madame le, 481, 508.
Brunswick, 583.
Brusa, 537.
Buona Figliuola, 589.
 —, Maritata, 492.
Burgefs, Harry, 664.
Burlettas in England, 458, 473, 516.
Burney, Mr. 682.
Burton, 677.
Busiri, 432.
Butler, 669.

C

CACCINI, Giulio Romano, 22, 26, 134.
 —, Francesca, 45.
Caduta de' Giganti, 452.
Casaro, 567.
Casarelli, * 419, 470, 616.
Caillot, French singer, 617.
Cajo Mario, opera, by Piccini, 504.
Calamita de' Cuori, 480.

Caldara,

I N D E X.

- Caldara*, 533, 534.
Calori, 470.
Calviere, 623.
Cambert, 188.
Camilla, opera, 201, 210, 313.
Campra, 607.
Cantatas, 133. Sacred, 140. Dramatic, ibid.
Caporale, 657, 661, 669.
Carattaco, opera, by Bach, 490.
Carbonelli, 297, 648, 663, 667.
Carestini, * 369, 387, 429, 430, 537, 539.
Carey, General, 467.
 —, Harry, 300, 652.
Carissimi, 48, * 140, 556.
Cart of Thespis, rebuilt at Rome, 37.
Casarini, 455.
Cascina, la, 480.
Cassani, 206.
Castle-concert, 661, 663.
Castor et Pollux, 610, 614.
Castrati, 41, et seq.
Castrucci, 255, 353, 359, 464, 645, et seq.
Catarina da Siena, 100.
Catch-club, 682.
Cato, tragedy, 238. Opera, 362.
Cavaliere, 18.
Ceffalo e Procri, 448.
Cepede, le Conte de la, 628.
Cesti, 60, 134, 151.
Cervetto, the elder, 660, 663, 669.
 —, junior, 483, 669, 677, 682.
Chabanon, 621, 628.
Chandos, duke of, his chapel, 360.
Charke, 657.
Charpentier, 607.
Chelleri, 535.
Cherubini, 527.
Chevalier, dancer, 529.
Chimenti, 299.
Chromatic, transient, first used by Handel, 364.
Choruses, few in first oratorios, 116.
Ciampi, Vincenzo, 458, 463, 477.
 —, Francesco, 538.
Ciardini, 480.
Cibber, Colley, 184, 191, 198, 200, 205, 208, 211.
 —, Mrs. 657.
Cid, il, opera, by Sacchini, 499.
Cimarosa, 527, 529.
Ciprandi, 464, 485.
Ciro Riconosciuto, opera, by Cocchi, 470.
Clair, le, 622, 623.
Clairembault, 623.
Clayton, William, 199, 203.
Clegg, 649, 654, 659.
Clementi, 682.
Cleonice, 483.
Climate, its effect on Music, 565.
Clive, Mrs. 652, 654.
Clotilda, 210.
Cocchi, 465, * 468, 470 to * 478.
 —, Signora, 498.
Colasse, 607.
Coletti, 533.
Collet, Richard, 663, * 668.
Colonna, Paolo, 53, 115.
Commemoration of Handel, 518, 683.
Composers in Italy, seventeenth century, 46.
Compositions inserted.—Specimens of the first recitative, 28, 31.—Scenes in the first operas, 67.—Fragment of the first oratorio, 91.—From Mazzocchi, 96.—Oratorio airs; and duo, by Stradella, 117.—Extracts from the first comic opera, 127.—Ditto from Caccini's airs, 137.—Ditto from Carissimi's cantatas, 142, 147.—Ditto from Cesti, 151, 153.—Opera airs, from Luigi, Legrenzi, and Cavalli, 157.—Extracts from Salvator Rosa, and Bassani, 165.—From the cantatas of Aleff. Scarlatti, 170.—Divisions in the first opera songs, 216.—Fragments from Handel's Teseo, 241, 243.—From Poro, 350.—Ptolemy, 364.—Berenice, 409.—Fararmond, 421.—Divisions in Senesino's songs, 271.—Aria di bravura, by Attilio Ariosti, 293.—Song and divisions performed by Farinelli, 437.—Divisions in the songs of Monticelli and others, 461.
Comus, set by Arne, 659.
Concert of Ancient Music, 683.
Concerts, 195, 211, 257, 353, 398, 646.
Concertos, Handel's grand, 407.
Conforto, Nicola, 467.
Congreve, 201, 632.
Conquista di Messico, 490.
Contini, 449.
Coppola, 514.
Corbet, opera-leader, 250, 640, 646, 650, et seq.
Cordans, 538.
Corelli, 53, 197, 640.
Cornacchini, 471.
Corneli, Mrs. 453.
 —, her concerts, 676.
Corri, 501, 529, 546.
Corfi, 18, 23.
 Colles,

I N D E X.

Coste, 607.
 Coulon, 518, 529.
 Couperin, 622, et seq.
 Cramer, 483, 677, 682.
 —, junior, 682.
 —, professor at Keil, 603.
 Crawford, opera treasurer and manager, 487.
 Cremonini, 479, 485.
 Crespo, 244, 470. By Sacchini, 508.
 Creta, 652.
 Critique on Rosamond, 204.
 Crofdil, 483, 677, 682.
 Cross, Mrs. a finger, 219.
 Crown and Anchor concerts, 360.
 Croza, Dr. opera-manager, 455, 460.
 Cumberland, Mr. 675.
 Curioni, 465.
 Cuzzoni, 286, 299, * 306, 316, 318, 368, 460, 536.

D

DA Capo first used, 138, 448, 471, 483.
Dafne, first Italian opera, 23.
D'Agincourt, 622.
D'Alembert, 612, 626.
Dancing, 132, 517.
Danzi, 481, see Le Brun.
D'Aquin, 622.
Dario, opera, by Attilio, 302.
David, oratorio, by Porpora, 383.
D'Avenant, Sir William, 180.
 —, Dr. Charles, 188.
Davis, Miss, detta Inglefina, 499.
De Amicis, * 479, 481, 569.
Dean, Mr. 634.
Deborah, oratorio, 366.
Defesch, 368, 672.
Delany, Mrs. 246.
Demarcts, 607.
Demetrio, opera, by Pescetti, 403.
 —, by Cocchi, 416.
Demofonte, in Farinelli's time, 414.
 —, in Mingotti's time, 465.
 —, by Vento, 487.
 —, in Pacchierotti's time, 509.
De Moivre, 638.
Denmark, king of, 494.
Detouches, 607.
Devil to Pay, 654.
Devin du Village, 653.
Diana ed Endymion, 430.
Didlot, 529.
Diderot, 242.

Dido, 407, 463.
Didone, by Hasse, 457.
 —, by Ciampi, 463.
 —, Perez and Galuppi, 475.
 —, Sacchini, 504.
 —, pasticcio, in Mara's time, 524.
Dieupart, 201.
Directors of the Royal Academy, list of, 258.
Divisions in opera songs, 216, 271, 437, 461.
Domenico Annibale, 398.
Domitilla, 447.
Don Calascione, 458.
Doni, Giov. Bat. 20, 35, 82, 135.
Dorinda, written by Marcello, 538.
Dotti, Anna, 297.
Downes, 188.
Dragon of Wantley, 659.
Dramatic Music, in England, 180.
Drammaturgia, 79.
Dresden, operas, 580.
Dryden, 191.
 —, his second ode, 430.
Dubourg, 645, 650.
Dubreuil, 627.
Due Contesse, 509.
Duenna, 675.
Duet, first truly dramatic, 472.
Dumont, 608.
Duni, 617.
Dupbly, 622.
Duport, ibid.
Durante, 170.
Durastanti, 259, 280.
D'Urffy, 202.

E

EBERARDI, 473 to 476.
Eckard, 598.
Edwards, Miss, 434.
Eichner, 598.
Electer of Bavaria, 605.
Electress dowager of Saxony, 580, 605.
Elisi, 473, 474, 488.
Eliza, Italian opera, 303.
 —, English opera, by Arne, 674.
Elpidia, opera, by Vinci, 302.
Encores prohibited, 250, 392.
Enea e Lavinia, 484.
England, present century, 631.
Enrico, opera, by Galuppi, 449.
Entrepreneur's qualifications, 605.
Epicharmus, 556.
Eredia, 547.
Erifile, opera, by Sacchini, 508.

Erismena,

INDEX.

Erismena, opera, by Cavalli, 63.
Erminia, 288.
Ernelinda, 238, 244.
Ernelinde, opera, by Philidor, 617.
Errore di Solomone, opera, by Veracini, 451.
Eschenburg, 603.
Esther, oratorio, 360.
Etearco, 221.
Evirati, 40.
Euphony of language, 1.
Euridice, opera, 25.
Euristeo, opera, by Buranello, 467.
Eximeno, 575.
Ezio, by Handel, 353. Pasticcio, 485.
 —, by Guglielmi, 496.

F

FABRIS, finger, 482.
Factions, musical, 218, 309, 325, 367, 467.
 —, in France, 628.
Falsetti in the papal chapel, 44.
Faramond, opera, 419.
Farinelli, 378, 384, * 412 to 417, 538.
Farnace, 290.
Favourite performers in England, 654.
Fausans, dancers, 447, 536.
Faustina, 306, * 308, 318, 538.
Feast of Hymen, 394.
 — the sons of the clergy, 647.
Felton's ground, 477.
 — concertos, 664.
Feo, 550.
Ferdinando, opera, 369.
Ferrarese del Bene, 523.
Ferrari, Benedetto, 58, 139.
Festling, Mich. Christ. 649, 663, * 668.
Feuds, see Factions, 218, &c.
Filosofo di Campagna, 474, 494.
Finger, Godf. 632.
Fischer, 483, 673, 676, 682.
Fischietti, 494.
Flavius, opera, 288, 360.
Fleischer, 583, 598.
Floridante, 282, 366.
Florio, 682.
Fontinelle, 126, 609.
Forkel, 603.
Forliwesi, 532.
Founders of styles in Germany, 590.
France, present century, 607.
Franceschelli, 169.
Franceschini, 51.
Francesina, 667, 399, 434.
Francine, 608.
Frafi, 233, 448, 452, 465, 663.
French comedies, in London, 646.

Frencuse, 609.
Fund, musical, 659.

G

GABRIELLI, 502.
Gagliani, 19, 50, 56.
Galeazzi, 538.
Galilei, Vincenzo, 21.
Galli, 449, 452.
Galliard, 208, 232, 574, * 639.
Gallini, 473, 524.
Galuppi, 437, 447, 449, 464, 473, 538, * 539.
Garrick, 228, 420, 447, 522, 594.
 —, Mrs. 453.
Gasman, 583.
Gasparini, Fran. 175, 206, 231, 533, 574.
 —, Michelangelo, 536.
Gates, Bernard, 360.
Gavigné, 623.
Geminiani, 169, 452, * 641.
George I. 250, 256, 314.
Germain, Count St. 452, 671.
Germanic body, 670.
Germany, eighteenth century, 577.
Germondo, opera, by Traetta, 505.
Giacobbi, 50.
Giacommazzi, 459, 494.
Giacomelli, 537.
Giai, 338.
Gianguir, pasticcio, 448.
Giannina Bernardoni, 527.
Gianotti, 626.
Giardini, 460, 464, 467, 483, * 521, 669.
Giordani, 498.
 — family, 465.
Giorgi Banti, 507, * 531.
Girardeau, Isabella, 220.
Giuliani, 531.
Girelli, 498.
Giulio Sabino, by Cherubini, 527.
 —, by Sarti, 530, 579.
Giustinelli, 479.
Gizziello, see Conti.
Gladwin, 646.
Gojon, 228.
Gluck, 453, 579, 583, 594, * 618.
Good, a finger, 219.
Gordon, finger, 289.
 —, violoncello-player, and opera-manager, 487, 677.
 —, violinist, 663.
Grabut, 189, 194.
Grand musical festival, in Westminster-abbey, 683.
Grano, 646.

Grassi,

Graffi, 489, *491.
Graun, 583, *594.
Gray the poet, 554.
Greber, 196, 200, 202.
Green, Dr. 368, 647, 667.
Gresnich, 526, 584.
Grifelda, 284.
Groef, 682.
Ground-base, 109.
Guadagni, 233, 458, *494.
 ———, Signora, 489, 579.
Guarducci, 490.
Guest, Miss, 682.
Guglielmi, 493.

H

HAFNER. Music printer, 606.
Handel, 12, 222, 244, 262, 273, 339, 376.—
 Plays two concertos each night to Esther, in 1736, 292.—His Agrippina at Venice,
 334.—Changes his opera style, 402.—
 Fac-simile of his hand-writing, 411.—
 Ill, 418.—Exactitude in dating his works, 423.—The first who made the violins play all' ottava, 423.—Invented a kind of short-hand for semi-quavers, 425.—His benefit, 426.—Statue at Vauxhall, 428.
 —Organ concertos, 429, 664.—Activity and enterprize, 431.—Quits the opera, 436.—Goes to Ireland, 437.—A loser by oratorios in 1744 and 1745, 518, 527.—
 At the head of German opera composers, 583, 596.—Composes the coronation anthem for Geo. II. 650.—List of his oratorios, 655.—His kindness to the Musical Fund, 660.—His transactions in Ireland, 661.
Hard-frost, 432.
Harrison, 357, 682.
Harpsichord, 664.
Hasse, 341, 446, 457, 464, 539, 542, *548,
 583, 593.
Hayden, Geo. 650.
Haydn, Joseph, 596, *599.
Haym, Nicola, 200, 238, 288, 298, 329.
Hayes, Dr. William, 671.
Hebden, 663.
Heidegger, 206, 230, 339, 367, 427.
Heinechen, 534, 585.
Heinel, Mademoiselle, 498.
Hercules, opera, 232.
Herschel, 603.
Hickford's concert, 663.
High-notes in singing, 481.

Hill, Aaron, 222.
Hiller, 583, 603.
Hilligsburg, 518, 529.
Hobart, Hon. Mr. 497.
Hogarth, 658.
Holder, Dr. 3.
Honest Yorkshireman, 653.
Honorius, opera, 393.
Howard, Dr. Samuel, 389, 672.
Hughes, poet, 230, 232.
Hughs, singer, 214.
Hülmandel, 622, 682.
Humphreys, poet, 3.
Hydaspes, opera, 212, 256.

I

JACKSON, Mr. of Exeter, 675.
Jermoli, 509.
Ifigenia, pasticcio, by Porpora, 383.
 ———, in Aulide, Guglielmi, 493.
 ———, by Jomelli, 568.
 ———, by Traetta, 505.
Imeneo, opera, by Handel, 432.
Imer, female singer, 453.
Incostanza Delusa, 452.
Ingenieri, 16.
Ingratitudine Punita, 457.
Instrumental Music, in Italy, 38.
Intermezzi, 129. In London, 400.
Jomelli, 463, 465, 472, 474, 497, 560, *561.
Jozzi, 453, 664.
Ipermestra, pasticcio, 463.
Israel in Egypt, 429.
Iffipile, by Porpora, 384.
 ———, by Cocchi, 469.
Italian comedies, in London, 313.
 ——— Music, creeping into England, 194.
Italiana in Londra, 529.
Italy, taste there at present corrupt, 568.
I tre Gobbi Rivali, 474.
Judith, oratorio, by De Fesch, 657.
Julius Caesar, 292, 298, 244, 356, 527.
Justin, opera, by Handel, 403, 405.

K

KEEBLE, 265, and 663, note (a).
Kelly, Earl of, 677.
Kelner, 639.
Kelway, 587, 663, *665.
Kernberger, 598.
King Arthur, 191.
King of Prussia, 604.
Kit-cat club, 202.
Kuntzen, 652.

I N D E X.

- L
- LA Borde*, see De la Borde.
Lacey, 668.
Lampe, 373, 397, 655, 662, 672.
Lampugnani, 450, 444, 464.
La Lande, French composer, 616.
Lande, de la, 43.
Lant, Mrs. 467, 671.
Langbaine, 191.
Language, Euphony of, 1.
Laniere, Nicolas, 194.
Laschi, 458.
Latilla, ibid. and * 558.
Lawrence, 206, * 212, 219.
Legrenzi, 57, 155.
Leipfic, 583.
Leo, 133, 340, 346, * 544, 537.
Leucippe, opera, 484.
Leveridge, 205, 206, * 214.
Lidl, 679.
Lindsey, Mrs. 206, 219.
Linley, 675.
Lion in Hydaspes, 213.
Lisbon, operas there, 570.
List of German books on Music, 584.
 — of composers employed at Rome, 573.
 — of Italian treatises on Music, 574.
 — of English books on Music, published present century, 687.
Lobkowitz, Prince, 452, 605.
Locandiera, la, 529.
Locatelli, 573.
Lolli, 680.
Loreti Vittorij, 139.
Lotti, 178, * 534.
Lovattini, 498, 502.
Love's Triumph, 206.
Love in a Village, 675.
Low, 447, 663, 667.
Lucchini, 538.
Lucio Papirio, 362.
Lucio Vero, 251, 314, 456, 499.
Luigi Rossi, 152.
Lulli, 136.
Lusini, 515.
Lute, 143, 214, 434.
- M
- MACBETH*, set as an opera, 184, 187.
Maccaroni club, 498.
Maccherini, 514.
Machinery in Italian operas, 66.
Madama Ciana, 449.
Madrigalists, 46, 134, 531.
- Maggiore*, female singer, 489.
Magnus, 587.
Mahon, 682.
Maid of the Mill, 675.
Mancini, composer, 212, 544.
 —, singer and writer, 307, 372, 574.
Mandane, opera, 489.
Manheim, 582.
Manna, Genaro, 567.
Manzoli, 484.
Mara, 352, 519, 524, 683.
Marcello, 178, 538, * 542.
Marchand, 622.
Marchesi, * 529 to 531, 579.
Marchesini, la, 399.
Marchetti, 500.
Marenzio, Luca, 23.
Margarita de l' Epine, 196, * 219, 633.
Marmontel, 628.
Marpurg, 518.
Martinetz, Mademoiselle, 569.
Martini, Padre, 575.
 —, Gius. San, 390, 649, 663, 670.
 —, Battista San, 573.
Mason, Rev. William, 11, 191.
Masson, 625.
Mattei, Saverio, poet, 566.
 —, Colomba, singer, 464, 468, 471, 479.
Matteis, Nicola, 640.
Mattheson, 586.
Mazzaferrato, 14.
Mazzinghi, 529.
Mengozzi, 527.
Meraspe, opera, by Pergolesi, 448.
Mercato di Malmantile, 459, 477.
Meride e Selenunte, 431.
Merighi, 339, 399.
Merula, Tarquinio, 139.
Metastasio, 228, 329, 569.
Micheli, 489.
Middlesex, Earl of, 418, 445.
Millico, 497.
Miller, bassoon, 663, 669.
Mingotti, 463, * 465, 467, 483, 672.
Miserere in Italian by Jomelli, 563.
Mislevceck, 583.
Mitridate, 391, 455.
Mitzler, 586.
Mixte, 533.
Moglie Fedele, 493.
Mondo nella Luna, 473.
Mondonville, 615, 622.
Monsigni, 617.

I N D E X.

Montagnana, 261.
Montclair, 607.
Monteverde, 24, 27.
Monticelli, 446, 448, 454, 539.
Morelet, 626.
Morelli, 528, 682.
Morigi, 489, 515.
Morigi, Signora, 514.
Mertellari, 526.
Moses, organist, 593.
Moscovita, 429.
Motteux, 205, 206.
Moving-bases, 169.
Mountier, the Chichester boy, 361.
Mouret, 607.
Mozart, senior, 509.
 —, junior, 583, 602.
Mozon, 528.
Munich, 582.
Musick defended, 192.
 — its state in 1727, 320.
 — in 1744, 662.
Musical Fund, 659.
Muzio Scevola, 273.
Mysteries in Music, 81 to 84.

N

NAPLES, 568.
 —, fertile in musical genius, 572.
Napoli Signorelli, 204, 574.
Narciso, 262.
Naumann, 583, 602.
Neapolitan operas, 78, 544.
Negligente, il, opera, 459.
Nerone, opera, 463.
Nicolini Grimaldi, 207, 233, 249, 537.
Nitteti, 500.
Noverre, ballet master, 529.
Numitor, 259.

O

OCTAVES in violin-parts, first used by Handel, 253.
Olimpia in Ebuda, 432.
Olimpiade, by Galuppi, 466.
 —, by Arne, 486.
 —, by Piccini, 496.
Opera, serious, 13.
 — defended, 184, 192.
 — in England, 194.
 — in two languages, 209.
 — its declension, 431.
 — new modelled, 445.
Opera-house, 200.

Opera-houses, two open, 368.
Opera Buffa, 123, 458.
 —, at Dresden, 581.
Opera-prices, 208, 209.
Operas attempted on Wednesdays and Fridays in Lent, 407.
 — printing them taken from Walsh, 466.
 — by Cocchi, 468 to 478.
 — in Italy in greatest perfection, 561.
Orange, Prince of, in England, 374.
Oratorio, its rise in Italy, 81.
 —, whence its name, 97.
 —, in England, 360.
Oratorios, list of early, 110.
 —, at first allowed in Passion-week, 404.
 —, list of, in England, 666.
 — undertaken by Bach, 497.
Orchestra in first operas, 20, 30.
Orfeo, drama, by Politian, 14.
 —, opera, set by Monteverde, 27, 32.
 —, by Porpora, 392.
 —, by Gluck, 496, 523, 579.
Organ, full, described, 126.
 — concertos, 392.
 —, Handel's first published, 429.

Organ-playing in Germany, 590, 593.
Orlando, by Handel, 362.
Orminda, 348.
Otty, Mrs. 647.
Ottone, 286, 369, 381.

P

PACCHIEROTTI, 62, *509 to 513, 515, 531, 540, 555.
Paccini, 297.
Paefello, 528, 529.
Paganini, 473, *475.
Pallavicini, Benedetto, 113.
 —, Carlo, 114.
Palinodia, 606.
Palma, 551.
Panichi, female finger, 446.
Pantheon, 504, 507.
Paolucci, 575.
Paradies, 446, 455.
Paragraphs for Handel, 395, 398, 403.
 — per contra, 399.
 — by Rolli, 414.
 — for Strada, 427.
Parks, 682.
Parkinson, ibid.
Parnasso in Festa, 374.

Parsons.

I N D E X.

Parsons, 676.
Partenio, 423.
Pasquali, 458, 672.
Pasqualino, 661, 663, 669.
Pasquini, Bernardo, 57.
Passion, comedy of the, 126.
Pastor Fido, 234, 577.
Paulati, 534.
Paxton, 677.
Peculiar excellences of three great fingers, 531.
Pelopida, 488.
Penelope, 447, 461.
Pepusch, Dr. 196, 205, 633, *634.
Performers on instruments celebrated by Della Valle, 39.
Peretti, 233, 673.
Perez, 464, 470, 475, *570.
Pergolesi, 448, *551.
Peri, Jacopo, 18, 23.
Perignon, dancer, 528.
Perti, 51.
Pertici, 484.
Perseo, 500.
Pescatrice, 475.
Pescetti, 403, *404, 538, *540.
Philidor, 615, 617.
Piatti, 487.
Piccini, 352, 489, 569, *619.
Picq. le, 518.
Pignatta, 533.
Pieltin, 682.
Pilotti, 213.
Pinto, 468.
Pio Fabri, 340.
Piozzi, 510, 676.
Pirker, 455.
Pistocchi, 54, 114, 164, 292.
Pizzati, 576.
Polani, 533.
Polidoro, 447.
Polifemo, 382, 390.
Poliziano, 14.
Pollaroli, Carlo Fran. 533.
 ———, Ant. ibid.
Pompeati, 453.
Ponce, 489.
Poro, 350.
Porpora, 179, 368, 450, 537, *545, 600.
Porfile, 550.
Porta, 259, 535.
Potenza, 468, 470.
Preston Gild, 662.
Private concerts, 671.

Professional concerts, 676.
Pugnani, 494.
Purcell, 674.
 Q
QUAGLIATI, 37.
Quadrio, 111, 130.
Quantz, 318, *588.
Queen Caroline, 292, 404, 418.
Queen Charlotte, 476.
Queen's theatre, or Opera-house, 200.
Quilici, 471.
Quin, Dr. of Dublin, 662.

R

RAAF, 485, 570.
Radamisto, 259.
Raguenet, 608.
Raimondi, 682.
Rameau, 609.
Ramondon, 205, *219, 633.
Rampani, 534.
Ranelagh, 668.
Rault, 623.
Rauzzini, 501, 527.
Re alla Caccia, 595.
Re Teodoro, 529.
Rebellion in 1745, 452.
Reflexions: On old critics of new Music, note (d), 61.—On airs in an opera, and imperfection in the organ of hearing, 49.—On the passion for shew in the last century, 74.—On too much familiarity with excellence, 211.—On the insipidity of the first opera airs, 211.—On the establishment of the Italian opera in England, 221.—On Addison's and Steele's ridicule of operas, 225 to 229.—On English operas, 232.—On fine singing at the opera, 237.—On opera choruses, 241.—On the opera of Astarto, 271.—On repetitions in Muzio Scevola, 278.—On the effects of the Music in Otho, 286. On encores, 392. On the effects of Music, 413.—On Gente di difficile Contentura, 414.—On Handel's fertility, 436.—On Lampugnani's style, 450.—On the necessity of good singing at the opera, 463.—On the introducing Handel's Music there, 466.—On thin houses Tuesday nights, 479.—On dancing, 517.—On emulation, 537.—On the difference of vocal and instrumental Music, 546.—On Vinci's style, 547.—On under-writing songs for inferior fingers

I N D E X.

- fingers, 560.—On climate affecting the hearers of Music, 565.—On difficult and easy, 566.—On Gluck's opera style, 579.—On criticism, 586.—On musical parties in Germany, 589.—On Imagination, 613.—On musical feuds, 630.—On female fingers in England, 631.
- Recitative*, its invention, 13, 296, 463.
—, banished from burlettas, except in Italy, 583.
- Reimischneider*, 339.
- Reinhold*, 401.
- Rehearsal of an opera*, paid for, 212.
- Reviews of operas*: Rinaldo, 223.—Pastor Fido, 234.—Teseo, 238.—Amadigi, 241.—Radamisto, 259.—Astarto, 267.—Muzio Scevola, 274.—Floridante, 282.—Griselda, 284.—Otho, 286.—Flavins, 289.—Julius Caesar, 292.—Favourite songs in Tamerlane, 297.—Rodelinda, 298.—Scipio, 303.—Alessandro, 310.—Admetus, 315.—Riccardo Primo, 327.—Siroe, 329.—Tolomeo, 334.—Lotario, 340.—Parthenope, 344.—Poro, 350.—Ezio, 353.—Sofarmes, 356.—Orlando, 362.—Ariadne, 371.—Par-nasso in Festa, 374.—Ariodante, 385.—Alcina, 388.—Polyphe, 390.—Atalanta, 396.—Siroe, by Hasse, 400.—Arminio, 401.—Justin, 405.—Berenice, 408.—Faramond, 420.—Xerxes, 423.—Hymen, 433.—Deidamia, ibid.—La Caduta de' Giganti, by Gluck, 453.—Attilia Regola, by Jomelli, 463.—Andromaca, by ditto, 465.—Demofoonte, by Hasse, ibid.—of operas at the beginning of Mattei's regency, 469.
- Reginelli*, 454.
- Reichardt*, 584, 598, 603.
- Reynolds*, Sir Jof., 15.
- Riccoboni*, 209.
- Ricciarelli*, 464, 468.
- Riccimero*, 446.
- Richard I.*, 326.
- Ridotto*, the first in England, 647.
- Rinaldo*, opera, 222, 250, 257, 353.
- Rinaldo di Capua*, 447, *558.
- Rinnuccini*, 18, 23, 25, 36.
- Robinson*, Mrs. Anastasia, *244, 19, 249, 279, 296.
- Rodelinda*, 298, 353.
- Rolle*, 598.
- Rolli*, poet, 274, 412.
- Rpmieu*, 626.
- Roman operas*, 56, 573.
- Roncaglia*, 508, 514.
- Rosa*, Salvator, 155.
- Rosalia*, 458.
- Rosamond*, by Clayton, 203.
—, by Arne, 368, 656.
- Rosengrave*, *262, 587, 666.
- Roselinda*, 451.
- Rosmira*, 467.
- Rossi*, Luigi, 152.
—, the dancer, 518.
- Rovedino*, 514.
- Roussau*, 3, 74, 132, 615, *627, 653.
- Roussier*, 613, *627, 628.
- Roxana*, 450.
- Royal family at Siroe*, 333.
- Royal Academy of Music*, 258, 314, 337.
— Society of Musicians, 518.
- Rubinelli*, 351, 356, *524, 531, 682.
- Rust*, 584.
- Rutland*, duke of, 297.
- S
- SABATINI*, 567.
- Sabrina*, 412.
- Sacchi*, Padre, 576.
- Sacchini*, 241, 492, 498, *519, 620.
- Salieri*, 625.
- Salvini*, critic, 556.
- Salmon*, 627.
- Sarro*, 548.
- Sarti*, 530.
- Savage*, Mr. 390.
- Saul*, 418.
- Savoi*, 488.
- Scalzi*, singer, 372.
- Scarlatti*, Alessandro, 57, 115, 169 to 176, 207, 534.
—, Domenico, 175, 262, 445, 448, 664.
— per Amore, 528.
- Scheiben*, 586.
- Schiava*, la, 492.
- Schindlerin*, 501.
- Schobert*, 591, 597.
- Schoener*, 682.
- Schroeter*, ibid.
- Schultz*, 603.
- Schuster*, 584.
- Schwanberger*, 583.
- Schwindl*, 599.
- Scipio*, 303, 349.
- Scipione in Cartagine*, 447.
- Scots tunes*, first published, 647.
— at the Opera-house, 451.
- Scots snap*, in fashion, 457, 472.
- Scott*, Geo. Lewis, 638.
- Semi-operas*, 184, 185.
- Semiramis*, 457.

Senesino,

I N D E X,

- Senesino*, 259, 261, 267, 275, 313, 349, 367.
Serafini, 463.
Series and succession of instrumental Music in England, 502.
Serra, 626.
Serva Padrona, 459, 607, 615.
 — Rivale, by Traetta, 505.
Settima Sminuita, 365.
Sharp, Mr. 652.
Shakspeare, 63, 231.
Sheridan, Mr. 506.
 —, Mrs. 481.
Shield, 675.
Short, 664.
Shuter, 662.
Sifare, 492.
Sigismondo d' India, 136.
Signorelli, Napoli, 60, 574.
Singers in early operas, 19, 26, 44, 79.—in Arfinoe, 199.—Rosamond, 203.—Thomyris, 205.—Rinaldo, 23.—Antiochus, 230.
 — Pastor Fido, 234.—Teseo, 238.—Armínio, 250.—Amadigi, 251.—Narciso, 266.
 — Floridante, 282.—Otbo, 286.—Flavius, 289.—Astyanax, 321.—Lothario, 339.—Hafse's Artaserse, 378.—at Lisbon, 1755, 395.—in Paramond, 419.—Alessandro in Persia, 446.—under Vaneschi, 483.—with Mingotti, 464.—with De Amicis, 480.—engaged by Gordon, 489.—in Bach's oratorios, 496.
Singing in England, 631, 675.
 — school in France, 621.
Sirbace, 450.
Sirman, Madame, 500.
Siroe, by Handel, 329.
 —, by Hafse, 400.
 —, Lampugnani, 464.
 —, pasticcio, 482.
Smith, 233, 361, 367, 666.
Snow, 396, 668.
Sofonisba, 498, 500.
Solfeggi soon worn out, 340.
Sommeils, 609.
Sonatas of Pergolesi, 557.
Songs for a single voice, 134.
Sorbelloni, 470.
Sorofini, 303.
Sosarmes, 356.
Spagna, writer of oratorios, 111.
Sparziani, poet, 567.
Spectator, 203.
Spilletta, 65.
State of Music in England, in 1722, 647.
 —, in 1744, 663.
Stanley, 587, 663, 665.
Sterkel, 584.
Scele, Sir Richard, 207.
Storace, 529.
 —, Anna, 528.
Strada, 339, *342.
Stradella, 100, 105, 109.
Stravaganti, 489.
Strozzi, Barbara, 139.
Stuttgart, operas there, 582.
Subscribers to Handel's Alessandro, 310.
Sullivan, 662.
Summer's Tale, 675.
Swan concert, 661, 663.
Swift, Dean, 220.
Swiney, Owen Mac, 201, 205, 207, 211.

T.

TAMERLANE, by Handel, 296, 353.
Tamerlane, Sacchini, 499.
Tarchi, 525.
Tartini, 562, 575.
Tasca, 523.
Tasset, 682.
Tatler, 207.
Technica, musical, 39.
Tedeschi, 446.
Tedeschini, 474.
Telemann, 592.
Temistocle, 450.
Tempest, 184.
Tenaglia, 57.
Tenducci, 470, 497, 523, 673.
Teraminta, 657.
Terradeglas, 455, 559.
Tesi, la, 536.
Teseo, 238.
Tessarini, 560.
Testore, 575.
Teutonic interest, 670.
Theatres open in 1735, 391.
 — at Rome, 57, 58.
Theodore, king, 518.
Thomas and Sally, 674.
Thompson's Scots tunes, 647.
Thomyris, 205, 215.
Thorough-base, 25.
Thun, Countess, 605.
Tigrane, 492.
Tito, 412.
 — Manlio, 466.
Todi, 509.
Tosti, Mrs. 197, *215, 633.
Tolomeo, 334.
Tom Thumb, an opera, 636.
Tosi, 52, 208, 574.
Traetta, 505.
Trakbarns, 489.

Travers

I N D E X.

Travers, 639.
Trial, 615.
Triennial meeting of the three choirs of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford, 647.
Trionfo di Camilla, 459.
 — della Continenza, 453.
 — del Tempo, 403.
Turner, Sir John, 638.
 —, Mr. 634.
 —, Miss, 663.
Tutor Burlato, 527.
Tyers, Jonathan, 667.

V

VALENTINI, 205, 208, 237, 536.
Valeriano, il Cav. 234.
Valle, Pietro della, 35, 44.
Vallotti, Padre, 576.
Valouis, dancers, 504.
Vanburgh, Sir John, 200.
Vaneschi, 446, 456, 463, 467.
Vanhal, 599, 667.
Vecchi, Orazio, 123 to 126.
Vello d' Oro, 404, 423.
Venetian operas, 58, 77, 533, 538, 542.
Vento, 484, *506.
Veracini, 244, 250, 391, 640.
Vespasiano, 290.
Vestale, by Vento, 504.
 —, by Rauzzini, 527.
Vestris, 518.
Viaggiatori Feliei, 517.
Vienna, 578.
Vico, Diana, 250.
Viganoni, 516.
Vinacefe, 533.
Vincent, 487.—Tho. 663.
Vinci, 302, 445, 470, 537, *546.
Violin, 591.
Viol da Gamba, 679.
Violoncello, 660.
Virginia, 525.
Visconti, 446, 463.

Visme du Valguay, 622.
Ulysses, opera, by Smith, 657.

W

WAGENSEIL, 585.
Walpole, Hon. Horace, 297, 299, 309, 554.
Walther, 585.
Waltz, 573.
Weldon, John, 632.
Wenceslaus, 349.
Westminster Abbey, 518, 683.
Westpfal, 606.
William (King) and Mary, 194.
Wiedemann, 663, 673.
Wiseman, 551.
Wolf, 599.
Wood, organist, 663.
Worgan, Dr. 537, *665.
Worsdale, 662.

X

XERXES, opera, by Handel, 423.

Y

YEATS, Mrs. 499.
Young, Anthony, 663.
Young, Miss Cecilia, afterwards Mrs. Arne, 361, 378, 385, 390, *653.
 —, Miss, afterwards Mrs. Barthelmon, 485.
Younger, Mrs. 313.
Youngs, three Miss 658.

Z

ZAMPARINI, 492.
Zanaida, 481.
Zanettini, 533.
Zanotti, 576.
Zara, 657.
Zeno, Apostolo, 231, 298, 533.
Zenobia, 496.
Ziani, Marcantonio, 533.
Zuccari, 537.

F I N I S.

E R R A T A.

Page 3, line 16. for unfit for, read unfavourable to. P. 5, note (c) r. Steffa. P. 20, l. 17, for it, r. is.
P. 25, l. last, for change, r. is changed. P. 26, l. 12, r. tells. Ib. l. 7 from the bottom, r. 1615, at Venice.
P. 27, l. 19, r. rappresentativa. P. 51, l. 15, r. FRANCESCHINI. Ib. l. penultima, r. reasonably. P. 52,
l. antepenultima, r. Colonna. P. 63, l. 19, for Vienna, r. Venice. P. 64, l. last, after Mr. add John.
P. 86, l. 11, r. Emilio. P. 87, l. 1. r. Monteverde. Ib. l. 6, r. Satiro. P. 97, in the line of Music, place a flat to the last G in the base. P. 116, l. 18, after of, add the. P. 123, note (f) l. 2. for to, r. from. P. 132,
l. 18, r. intermezzo. P. 133, at the end, r. Tartaro. P. 139, l. 18, r. excellent. P. 140, l. penult. after 1770, r. and even before that period. P. 176, l. 9, r. risposta. P. 184, l. 19, r. Biographia. P. 197, l. 22, for uncommon, r. common. P. 207, l. 19, r. Ostilio. P. 221, at the end of note (e) r. Stampiglia. P. 258,
l. 16, for Cole, r. Coke. P. 260, l. 17, r. lieve. P. 266, l. 3, r. 1766. P. 279, l. 4 from the bottom, r.
Scavola. P. 286, l. 15, for This, r. It; and l. 16, dele to this opera. Ib. l. 25, r. instrument. P. 297,
l. 5 from the bottom, r. proceeding. Ib. note (n) before him, add to. P. 298, l. 10, r. It is. Ib. note (g)
r. Galburnia. P. 333, l. 15, r. out the. P. 382, first col. l. 25, for that, r. and. P. 403, dele note (j). P.
447, l. 20, r. mano. P. 460, l. 4, r. negligente. P. 508, l. 7, r. FRANCESCO. P. 511, l. 20, r. Dilettanti.
P. 527, l. 5, r. Mengozzi. P. 536, l. 6, r. Mich. P. 540, dele line nine and ten. P. 563, l. 20, r. PRIMA.
P. 568, l. 19, after opera, add for Naples. P. 572, note (z) l. 3, r. bed, he. P. 600, at the end of note (ff) for above, r. below. P. 612, l. 6 from the bottom, r. calling. P. 635, l. 6, after his, add other. P. 638, l. 10, r. limmas. P. 650, l. penult. for the, r. his. P. 659, note (b) r. musicians. P. 673, l. 16, for all, r.
most of. Ib. l. 10 from the bottom, r. analyzed.

Burney, Charles, 1726-1814

A General History of Music from the earliest ages to the present periode ;
To which is prefixed, A Dissertation on the Music of the Ancients

Bd.: 4.

London (1789)

4 B.Sandb. 17-4

urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb10223867-3